Any good writer can make the story all the more interesting by asking whether she will not retire from the screen. Frankly, as this is written we ourselves do not know and you can start all sorts of discussion as to whether she will quit now that she has become the bride of a man making a million a year or whether just as she is at the top she is to sacrifice her art for domestic life.

Two striking scenes in "The Price of a Good Time," with the little shopgirl seeking life amid social gaities

Marriage Idea Should Be Dominant Everywhere

NATURALLY in playing these Mildred Harris pictures you ought to adapt your lobby display somewhat to the particular feature that you are showing, but it would be advisable to keep the Mrs. Chaplin idea dominant and to suggest a recent wedding in the decorations. The Cupid and wedding bell effect will be timely for several weeks still.

We would advise as a center of the lobby display decoration every picture of Mildred Harris that you can dig up. Place these altogether in neat frame and label them, and then be sure to include in the same frame a number of scenes from the production that you are playing. You are not "giving anything away" by using these in your lobby. After the people have stopped to look at them they will come into the theatre to see more about her on the screen.

They will want to judge from the pictures and for themselves whether she is beautiful, whether she is graceful, whether she can really act. They want to see for themselves why the million dollar comedian claimed her for his bride.

HERE is one instance in which we advise the issue of a circular letter of some form to every person, especially the women that you can reach, without regard to whether they have been your regular patrons or not. Simply relying on the curiosity of the race you have here an opportunity to get into your house people who have never been there before and after that it is up to you to retain them as your regular patrons.

Mr. Kashin hit upon the scheme of the reproduction of a marriage announcement and on the second page he carried the statement that the pair would be seen at the Broadway.

However, simply a letter saying that you know that everyone wants to see the bride of the million dollar comedian and that you have been able to get one of her best productions and then give the date on which it will be shown. If you like you may add a few lines, saying that she is only seventeen and something like this, "Many think she is the prettiest of screen players. Come and see what you think."

Certainly we would send a special letter to every bride of the year. You can get the record from the clerk of the proper department of your county government and we would include in this every woman who was married during the year. Then write a note like this to each of them:

"As one of the brides of the year, I feel sure that you will be interested in seeing the most famous bride of the year, Mrs. Charles Chaplin. She will appear at the Empire theatre, December 28, in 'Borrowed Clothes.' Her marriage was one of the prettiest romances of the screen and I know that you will be interested in her and agree with the million dollar comedian that he has found a treasure worth more than all his wealth."

NOW you have another advantage in that all but one of the pictures in which Mildred Harris is the star is a love story that ends happily—in her becoming a bride. So you can, if you are at all skilful carry out the idea of her marriage to Chaplin and the love interest in the picture at the same time. In "Borrowed Clothes" she wears a bridal dress.

When you come to talk about the picture itself it will be well not to leave the suspense in the air as you would in usual exploitation, but intimate that in this picture you will see her in the character of a girl who finds happiness in her love. That may be only a line after the general sales argument on the particular picture, but it will link up strong with the big fact that you are putting over.

Also get into all of this sales talk that she is young—the fact that she is only seventeen is one to bring out, for you will get all the more interest in her real marriage, and that she is beautiful. These facts can be woven into any of the other things that you want to say and will probably make the talk all the stronger.

IT would be an excellent idea to carry out the marriage idea all through your program. A few flowers in the theatre will add to the effect and streamers of ribbon will carry it still further.

If you have an organ or an orchestra you can use a wedding march in place of the overture and we would suggest that you have the song "Oh Promise Me" sung just before the screening of the feature. Have the girl singer in a wedding gown, if possible the setting showing the interior of a church with the stained glass windows or a rose garden. The stage should be fairly dark with a spotlight on the girl. Just as she is about to conclude the number let her step back from the center of the stage and the screening of the picture start.

Comedies or animated cartoons should fill the remainder of the bill while news weeklies are always in place on nearly every program. Travel pictures especially if they carry along the impression of a bridal trip would be suitable.

You have a chance here to do something to make everyone in your section talk about your theatre. It's well worth while.

LET US KNOW

AS you know the Exhibitors Service Bureau seeks to record the best things that exhibitors of the country are doing. This work is for the benefit of others and the general prosperity of the industry.

Outlined in these pages are some suggestions for advertising Mildred Harn's productions. Perhaps you have better ones that you are using to get increased business. We would like to print every one of the valuable hints.

Two scenes from "For Husbands Only" showing charm of Miss Harris

Hints on the Exploitation of Specific Productions

BEARING in mind the suggestions that we have already made, here are some others on the individual pictures which should be combined with the general idea of exploitation.

In the first place we would bring out the fact that all of these are Lois Weber productions. You can say, and probably very truly, that Chaplin may never have met her had she not come to the Lois Weber studios where she worked near the place that the comedian performs his antics for the screen.

In "The Price of a Good Time" she has the role of a girl who works at the perfumery counter of Preston Winfield's father's store, and when he offers to give her the time of her life she accepts. Then for six nights she lives in a world that she never knew before, and the seventh, the Winfield family being away, she elects to spend in the family home. There has been nothing wrong in their relations, but Preston's brother appears, then a fight follows.

HERE is a selling line that we would use with this picture:

"A rich young man and a beautiful shop girl went out to lead six wonderful nights in the gayeties of the city, but the dream week crashes into tragedy. See what happened to the little girl who played the price of mistaken accusation, played by the girl who has just begun the life of a bride."

This picture lends itself to many unique lobby displays but one of the best of these was used by the Sunset theatre, Portland, Ore., which had as the main decorations the figures of a young man and girl seated at a table, with the name of the picture blocked on the tablecloth. Figures of dancing girls were used in the back of the lobby, but we would go too strong on the dance hall of theatre idea, but we would rather picture a whole setting of luxury, for that will work in better with the idea of the Chaplin-Harris romance.

How McCormick advertised "For Husbands Only

"DOCTOR AND THE WOMAN" is the screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel "K." Some exhibitors preferred to use it under the original title though both of these facts can be easily brought out in all of your exploitation.

Briefly the story surrounds K. LeMoyne, beloved by all in the town where he has mysteriously come to make his home. He is attracted to Sydney Page but she fancies herself in love with the head of the hospital, Dr. Wilson, in which she is taking a nurses' course, little knowing that he has had an affair with Carlotta, one of the nurses. Drummond, another suitor for Sydney begs K. to tell her the truth about Dr. Wilson and Carlotta herself warns the head surgeon to cease his attentions to the girl.

Dr. Wilson is famous for his ability to perform an operation known as the Edwards' operation, telling the staff that the originator of it disappeared in disgrace are several instances of carelessness. Dr. Wilson proposes to Page and is accepted and it is later at the Page home that he meets K. and learns that he is none other than the once famous Dr. Edwards, but he agrees to keep the secret until the latter can win back his confidence in himself. Meanwhile Drummond's jealousy is aroused and he follows Dr. Wilson and Carlotta to a roadhouse and there she pretends to faint and Drummond, seeing him carry the nurse upstairs shoots Wilson. Only the Edwards' operation can save his life and then K. performs it. Page learns the truth and that her real love is for K.

WE would avoid anything of the hospital effect in the lobby further than the paper that you use, because the connection of hospitals and love, while they may be very close, do not make that general appeal in the public mind simply with a glimpse at the lobby itself.

But there is one striking piece of paper which has a man putting his fingers to his lips to warn against talking.

"Sydney Page found in the end that she loved the greatest doctor in the world, just as the girl who plays the role came to know that she loved the greatest comedian. But there was mystery to both of their romances, and the mysteries are out now, though Charlie Chaplin did keep his marriage a secret for weeks."

We would use the name of Mary Rob-

Dramatic side of the star seen in "Doctor and the Woman"

erts Rinehart prominently and you might add with it: "And now won't she please write for the world the real love story of Charlie Chaplin and Mildred Harris?"

"FOR HUSBANDS ONLY" has had more good advertising than most pictures for the reason that its title has loaned itself to that mighty well. It is really one of the cleverest stories that the screen has been seen in a long time.

Toni, just from a convent marries a man she doesn't really think she loves because her heart is wounded with her first experience. Then she begins to flirt with D'Arcy, with no intention of wrong doing, but when the man about town realizes that she is merely playing with him he determines to wreck her life and to kill her husband's love. So he writes a play with the characters Toni, her husband himself and sets in incidents that the husband knows has occurred, but with great emphasis and wrongful interpretation. Then he invites the husband to his private theatre and leaves him seated in the front row and hurries away to Toni, suitcase in hand. Then he tells the girl the story of the play that her husband is witnessing and demands that she come with him. This arouses her to denunciation just as the husband enters and D'Arcy is sent away. At that moment the girl has realized how much she loves her husband, but she fears what he will say, but the tension is taken away and cleverest of endings supplied when he observes, "My dear, never mention anything to D'Arcy about his play for I went to sleep in the first act and do not know a thing of what it was all about."

There are some clever lines that have been used in the exploitation and which can still be used.

"As tantalizing as a wink."

"It's 'For Husbands Only,' but don't forget to bring your wife."

Here is a little longer selling talk:

"It's as tantalizing as a wink—as tantalizing as Mildred Harris must have been to Charlie Chaplin while he was waiting for her answer. And in the end there's just as happy an ending as there has come to the great romance of the screen."

"Borrowed Clothes" brings unjust accusations of innocent girl

Points Worth While with "Borrowed Clothes"

CERTAINLY there is a real chance to couple up the marriage of Mildred Harris with "Borrowed Clothes," the latest of the Jewel releases. She is seen in this wearing a wedding dress, for at the last moment her sister who was to marry a man that she did not love disappears and Mary Kirk is called upon to take the place. And she is about to sacrifice herself and the minister is just starting to perform the ceremony when the girl's real suitor steps in and has something to say about the affair himself.

Just a glance at the story and you see the material that you have to work with:

At the insistence of her sister, Louise, to save the family from poverty, Mary Kirk finally agrees to marry one of the members of the firm that employs her as a shopgirl, because George Weston can bring wealth and social prominence to the family. She becomes interested in Stuart Furth, who maintains an apartment for a vampire, but who is sincere in his love for Mary. One day they go to a bathing beach and their clothing is destroyed, and then Stuart persuades Mary to go to the vampire's establishment and take one of her gowns so that she may get home. But the vamp discovers them with a raid resulting. Mary escapes, but is discovered by her father in the borrowed finery. He jumps to the wrong conclusion, beats the girl and the wedding is called off.

WITH hope for Mary's marriage gone and the girl in contempt, Louise decides to take her place and wins George's proposal, but when, on the day of the wedding she discovers that the firm is near bankruptcy and that Weston's wealth is a myth she disappears. Then all dressed up with no one to marry George changes his mind, decides to forgive Mary, and she dons her sister's wedding gown and the ceremony is about to be performed when Furth shows up and claims his bride.

There are all sorts of selling lines that can be used here, and we are suggesting only a few of them:

"Do you wonder how Mrs. Charles Chaplin looked in her wedding dress? She wears one in 'Borrowed Clothes,' but the trouble is that she is about to be married to the wrong man when the very right thing happens and she finds happiness."

"How would you feel if you were forced to take your sister's place, don her wedding finery and marry a man that you did not love, when there was another whom you adored, even if he had by his innocent, but foolish action, blackened her name? But her sister's hated wedding gown became the pride of her possessions when it brought the man that she loved to her in the nick of time."

"You become well acquainted with Mrs. Charles Chaplin in this picture. First you see her as the little shop-girl in a bathing suit at the seaside, then in borrowed finery, then in bridal gown, about to marry a man she loathes, but in the end you see her in the arms of the man she really loves—happy and content."

EVEN stronger than in any of the other pictures we would use the idea of marriage strong in the lobby on this one. As a matter of fact you can go the limit. Be sure to dig out of your set of stills the picture that shows Miss Harris in bridal clothes and feature this prominently in your display.

Here's a line that you can use in your display, with a big streamer and the words prominently displayed:

"She Just Married in 'Borrowed Clothes.' Who?" and then in even larger letters, "Mrs. Charles Chaplin."

Another thing that you can bring out strong in this picture, and as a matter of fact in all of the Mildred Harris productions, is the strength of the cast. In "Borrowed Clothes" there appear Helene Rosson, who was a long time in American pictures as the sister; Lewis J. Cody, for years a favorite as the man who wins Mary, Fantine LaRue, George Nichols, Edythe Chapman and Edward J. Peel.

WHOM THEY WED

Here's a Chance to Arouse Still Greater Interest

MILDRED HARRIS in becoming the bride of Charles Chaplin is far from being the only star of the screen who has a husband. And the general rule has been that the brides have continued their careers after their marriage.

You can arouse a great deal of interest by offering a substantial prize to your patron who can name the most screen players who are married and give the names of their husbands or wives, when they are professionals. In case of marriage to non-professionals this should not be required.

If your newspaper will carry this contest for you all the better, and you can leave it to the photoplay editor to decide the winners. It will make a great feature for any newspaper and you can call it a "Mrs. Charlie Chaplin" contest and also offer seats to your theatre for the leaders.

MR. KASHIN used another one of his clever displays on this at the Broadway theatre. (See MOTION PICTURE NEWS, September 21, page 1863 for photos.) Home was made the theme of the display. The outside was made to resemble the front of a Fifth avenue mansion and there were three breaches in it and there were revealed the three principal characters. At one side was shown the loyal and trusting husband, on the other side the man about town who tried to "play the game" and in the center the miniature theatre where a portion of the action takes place.

Ford Weekly Goes to Goldwyn

Beginning January 12 the Ford Educational Weekly Will Be Distributed by the Goldwyn Exchanges

EFFECTIVE January 12 and weekly thereafter, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation will release and exclusively control the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly in the United States.

This move is brought about under a contract signed in Detroit by executives of Goldwyn and Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, sole representatives of the Ford Motor Laboratories, after a conference with Henry Ford's representative, Ambrose Beardsley Jewett.

For four years the millionaire Detroit motor car manufacturer has nursed and developed this motion picture weekly. The preparation of the Ford Educational Weekly involves an annual cost well in excess of $600,000, it is said, and has made it necessary for its owner to equip at his Detroit plant motion picture laboratories skilfully equipped and maintained.

The humaneness and range of Mr. Ford's mental interests is indicated in some measure by his screen weekly and by the topics he insists it shall depict. It is described as both current and permanent in its appeal, as a scenic, a travelogue, a historical record, a portrayer of industry in many of its phases, and a stimulator of patriotism and efficient citizenship.

Contrary to occasional belief, this educational weekly is not designed as an advertisement for its owner's great automobile enterprise, it is declared, although it is a matter of record that occasional single reels showing the manufacturing innovations and perfections of the big Detroit plant have proved to be among the popular subjects issued.

Kay Laurell in "The Brand," a Rex Beach-Goldwyn Picture

In the last two years the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly has been in the hands of independent picture exchanges, where it was booked weekly in 3000 theatres.

The assumption of its distribution by Goldwyn is expected to at once give this unusual weekly bookings in more than 5000 theatres each week, with the ultimate aim of acquiring 7000.

Value of Art Emphasized by G. Harold Percival

The importance of real art in supplying the essential scenery for screen stories is emphasized by G. Harold Percival, picture art director of the Thomas H. Ince studio on the West Coast.

He declares that of the hundreds of thousands of people who watch the moving pictures few stop to consider that every setting has to be conceived and carefully constructed before the action can commence. With three companies working day in and day out, one art director is kept busy planning something new and different.

Mr. Percival, whose plan for decoration for the moving picture players' ball was accepted above all competitors, is located far back in a secluded corner of the picture.

He is an unassuming, genial, smiling personage. He moves about the studio quietly, but under his direction beautiful gardens bloom, mansions rise and cities are built. His imagination furnishes much of the magic of the movies.

An idea of the demands made upon the art director is gained from one week's requirement for a Western town in 1850, the interior of a modern palatial home and a hick town of the Middle West today. All of these were in different pictures which required many other scenes fully as diversified.

Northern New Jersey Sold for "Woman"

Northern New Jersey rights for the Maurice Tourneur production "Woman" have just been sold to Frank Gersten, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, who has created a reputation as a distributor for unusual features in Northern New Jersey.

With the announcement of the open market plan for "Woman," wires and letters began coming from exhibitors and exchange men in all sections of the country, according to Hiller and Wilk who are making allotments rapidly.

Maurice Tourneur Productions commissioned Burton Rice, the artist, to design the lithographs for "Woman" and the Rice posters are said to be strikingly beautiful. "Woman" admits of unusual billboard and poster display, and Mr. Rice has taken full advantage of his opportunities.

Ethel Clayton Stars in "The Mystery Girl"

Ethel Clayton will next be seen in the role of Countess Ted, in "The Mystery Girl," a Paramount picture which is to be released December 22.

This is an adaptation by Marion Fairfax from George Barr McCutcheon's novel of romance and intrigue entitled "Green Fancy."

Select Announces Cast in "A Lady's Name"

Select makes public the personnel of Constance Talmadge's next Select Picture, "A Lady's Name," in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick. This was a stage play by Cyril Harcourt in which Marie Tempest was starred and in which the author and Norma Trevor were featured players.

In Miss Talmadge's support is Harrison Ford as leading man, and Director Walter Edwards has included a number of well-known screen folk, among whom are Emory Johnson, Vera Doria, James Farley, Fred Huntley, John Steppling, Truman Van Dyke, Lillian Leighton, Emma Gerdes and Zazu Pitts.

Anthropologists Desire Indian History Filmed

At the request of several prominent anthropologists Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, will begin recording by motion pictures the dances, games, sports, and all things possible to a complete pictorial history of the American Indian early this Spring.

The films will first be published as a super-feature and released throughout the country, after which it is planned to store them for posterity, and especially for the use of students, in some building to be determined.

R. P. Fairbanks Is Now Manager of Production

John Fairbanks, general manager and treasurer of his younger brother's film company, announced last week at his Hollywood office that Robert P. Fairbanks, who has been serving in the capacity of efficiency expert for the past six months, has been promoted to manager of production.

The latter started his new work with the production of "Arizona," staged by Albert Parker and scheduled for early release by Artcraft.

Louise Fazenda Appears to Have Her Hands Full in the Paramount-Mack Sennet Comedy, "Her First Mistake." It Is Scheduled to Start the Laughs About December 1.

Paramount Has Big Comedy List

Famous Players-Lasky Announces Comprehensive Schedule of Comedy Releases for Month of December

ANNOUNCING that now as the war is over the people are desirous of enjoying many hearty laughs, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have five comedies scheduled for December, according to Walter E. Greene, Managing Director in charge of Distribution.

The Paramount comedies which have just been listed for release are said to present one of the most notable schedules of laugh producers yet offered. There will be three Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies and two Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg subjects for December release.

The first comedy for the month is "Her First Mistake," from the Mack Sennett studios and which will be released December 1. The comedians who head the cast are Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Myrtle Lind, all well known as Mack Sennett laugh makers.

On December 8 there will be released a new Paramount-Flagg comedy entitled, "Independence B'Gosh." The story deals with the woes of the Whiffles, a country couple who inherit a fortune of $89,000,000. Olin Howland and Florence Dixon are starred in this film.

"Hide and Seek, Detectives," is another Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy for December to be released on the 15th. As the title implies there is much of the Sherlock Holmes travesty in this two reeler with Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn playing the title characters and Marie Prevost in another important part.

James Montgomery Flagg himself plays the star part in his Paramount comedy to be released December 22 and named, "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan" or "The Hart of the Dreadful West." Supporting him in the cast are Olin Howland, Ruby DeRemer and Sally Long.

The final comedy release of the month will be "The Village Chestnut," another Paramount-Mack Sennett offering.

Joe Maxwell Makes Film

Joe Maxwell, known in theatrical circles as a prolific author of vaudeville sketches, has turned photoplay producer and is launching his first picture under the brand of Maxwell Productions. He has staged a story by Hayden Talbot, which may be described as a society thriller and which is said to contain a unique domestic plot.

The title, "The Married Virgin," applies to a complication which by an odd twist develops a happy ending for the drama. Mr. Maxwell made the picture in Los Angeles and believes he has a very fine production.

A quintette of screen favorites take the principal characters. They are Kathleen Kirkham, Vera Sisson, Rodolpho di Valentina, Edward Jobson and Frank Newkirk. "The Married Virgin," in seven reels, will be released through General Film Company very shortly.

"The Greatest Gift" is the title of an American Red Cross picture, by courtesy of Paramount and distributed free by General. It is in a single reel

Dalton Prepares "Beyond Law" for Market

EMMETT DALTON, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, whose initial production was shown to an appreciative audience last Tuesday, now announces that "Beyond the Law," the picture in question, is ready for State rights and foreign disposition.

Mr. Dalton expressed himself in rather glowing terms on the reception given "Beyond the Law" at its premiere showing at Wurlitzer Fine Arts Hall.

"The picture went over even better than I thought it would," said Mr. Dalton. "After it had been shown, a good number of the audience which comprised the trade press, foreign and State rights buyers and other film folk, told me that I had a production which was destined to create a furor in the industry. Of course, my picture will not create a furor, but it will serve the exhibitor's purpose, to satisfy his partons and his box-office. That in the final analysis is the test of any picture; and I am certain that 'Beyond the Law' can stand that test.

"Once again do I want to impress upon the State rights and the foreign film buyer that my picture is in no way a story founded on fiction, but on fact. The story is an historical one, and the picture enhances the value of the story by the fact that it was taken on the actual prairies on which the original story was enacted in real life.

"My brothers and myself lived the life of the picture several years ago, and therefore I, as the sole survivor of the Dalton boys, am in a position to state that 'Beyond the Law' is an historical picture founded on fact."

Jewel Claims Many Exhibitor Endorsements

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS continue to report receiving a string of letters and telegrams from exhibitors and exchange men expressing endorsements of various pictures released by that organization.

Judging from the tone of many of these letters, there seems to be a sort of competition under way among exhibitors in the very small towns to see which can show the best results and biggest profits on productions of big calibre.

This represents a sort of revolution in the policy of small town exhibitors, according to Jewel. In past history the little theatres have been content to book only the lowest-priced subjects, it is said, on the unwritten theory that a big production and a big investment would only make them go broke.

The date of the changed belief is attached by Jewel Productions to the time that it began to exploit its superfeatures in the small towns. Several months ago Jewel made inquiries among three or four small-town exhibitors as to how they came out in handling such pictures as "The Kaiser—The Beast of Berlin" and "Crashing Through to Berlin."

"The answer was in each case that the exhibitor had been amazed at the attendance and the profits obtained on an increased admission price," said a Jewel official.

The letter written by the manager of the Lyric, of Platte Center, Nebraska, which town has a population of 500, was published in several of the trade magazines. The Lyric man testified that he took $177 gross on "The Kaiser—The Beast of Berlin," and he showed that this gave him a record-breaking profit.

As a result of this letter, it is said that several dozen other exhibitors have written in presenting evidence that they either equal the Platte Center record or beat it.

War Industries Board Sees Labor Film

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Nat Rothstein, showed the labor picture and patriotic film, "Keep the Home Fires Burning" to the War Industries Board in convention at Atlantic City.

They declare that this is the biggest industrial picture made in the history of industrial pictures.

American Defense Society Film Is Shown

A private showing will be given of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," the first victory film depicting the birth of a Greater America, produced under the supervision of the American Defense Society.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal, made this picture, which is said to be new in theme and vast in scale and brilliancy of treatment.

Among the officers of the American Defense Society who are expected to attend are Theodore Roosevelt, David Jayne Hill, Perry Belmont, Charles J. Bonaparte, Charles S. Fairchild, Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, Mrs. Robert Lansing, George Ade, Hamlin Garland, Eleanor Gates, Owen Johnson, Cleveland Moffatt and Don Marquis.

Doris Kenyon Company in North Carolina

Doris Kenyon and her company spent Thanksgiving Day in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains in North Carolina, where the exteriors of her next picture, "Twilight," are being made.

J. Searle Dawley, the director, declared a holiday, and Thomas A. Persons, studio manager, who is also with the party, provided a most bountiful repast, which was served at Esmeralda Inn, twenty-five miles from Asheville, N. C.

Return Dates Reported on "The Kaiser's Finish"

Theatre patrons in Richmond, Va., gave "The Kaiser's Finish" such a reception at the Bluebird theatre there that it has been booked for a return engagement according to a telegram received by A. Warner, from Mrs. A. E. Thorpe, who manages the house. The telegram reads:

"Tremendous business on four-day engagment 'The Kaiser's Finish.' Patrons voice one hundred per cent. Congratulate you on same. Have booked return engagement."

"The Great Victory" Has Impressive Cast

Following Metro's announcement that "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, the Fall of the Hohenzollerns" is international in scope and that Count di Cippico would sail for Europe with a duplicate negative of this Screen Classics, the Metro people point with pride at what they consider the excellence of the cast. Written by Maxwell Karger and produced under his personal supervision under the direction of Charles Miller, it has a cast as follows:

Henry Kolker plays the Kaiser, Joseph Kilgour appears as von Bissing, Margaret McWade plays the martyred Edith Cavell, Florence Billings as Vilma—an intensely dramatic role, and E. J. Connelly appears as old Paul Le Brett, Fred C. Truesdell plays President Wilson, Helen Ferguson is seen as Amy Gordon.

Twelve hundred players were said to have been used in the production and there are more than fifty parts of real importance, that were played by well known actors of experience and attainments.

Stoermer Says "The Tidal Wave" is Topical

AS to whether the general public will demand reminders of the war or plays big enough in themselves without the war flavor, is a question that William Stoermer, motion picture director and head of William Stoermer Enterprises, feels that he has solved in his eight-reel production of "The Tidal Wave."

He declares that this production is a big play told in a big way and that one scene alone reflects more than 20,000 persons; also that one big startling effect follows another in a rapid succession of thrills.

"Long experience in observing the tastes of audiences during my stage period, which covers many years," said Mr. Stoermer, "convinced me that there is one perfectly safe kind of play investment. And the truth that applies to the stage proper naturally comprehends as well the human collisions of the screen.

"I have found that after everything is said and done, excitement is the emotion that brings audiences to the box-office. Of course, the basis for the tension must be reasonable. There is an art in pictures and counter-plot that is not to be lost sight of in planning a play with excitement its leading salient.

"The difference between, for instance, the tension plays that obtain successfully with undeveloped intelligences and those that address a more cultured taste is that the lower grade pieces are instantly obvious in their progress and culmination to any mind that is familiar with the common ingredients of life.

"'The Tidal Wave,' I confidently believe, will hit the polished auditor smash between the eyes, yet is of a method that will carry his less advanced fellow along just as spellbound.

"The very best kind of play for audiences, as any exhibitor will attest, is the cogently planned mystery play. The detective drama that instantly engages the thinking faculties and animates the emotions has no peer as a medium for entertaining audiences if well done."

Thrilling Scene from Francis Ford's Serial, "The Silent Mystery"

Release Date Changed on "Made in America"

THE release date on the new eight-reel war series, "Made in America," has been changed from December 22 to December 29. This announcement was made at the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, 527 Fifth avenue, New York City, Monday.

"Made in America," produced and directed by Ashley Miller, is the authoritative story of the training of America's armies of victory. It was produced with the cooperation of the Government through the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

It has a cast of over 40,000 men and the scenes were taken in one of the largest cantonments in the United States. The picture depicts America's part in the great war and the victory that sent the Prussian hordes Rhineward in a chaotic retreat.

The "Y" men, the K. of C., the Y. M. H. A. and the Y. W. C. A. workers play important parts in this series, but, of course, the doughboys, the men who gave Generalissimo Foch the necessary "punch" when and where it was needed, have the principal roles in the production, and it is hardly necessary to say that they score repeatedly.

"Made in America" is not limited entirely to life in the camp. It takes the audience on board a great transport, to the intensified training camps abroad and to the trenches.

Its release at this time when the men are coming home by the thousands, and, when we are hearing so much about reconstruction, should prove a valuable weekly addition to the exhibitor's program because it will give every soldier an opportunity to show the home folks how the "job was done" without going into a detailed explanation, and how the 4,000,000 men in khaki were "reconstructed," so to speak, mentally, morally and physically.

Peggy Hyland's Winsome Smile Seems to Have No Effect on Her "Patient" in "Caught in the Act," a New Production in Which Miss Hyland Stars for William Fox

Select Claims Unusual Cast for Miss Young

WHAT is considered one of the most momentous news bulletins of recent date is the Select Pictures announcement this week of the personnel for one of Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming Select Pictures, "Cheating Cheaters," containing as it does the names of Anna Q. Nilsson, Jack Holt, Tully Marshall, Mayme Kelso, Nicholas Dunaew and others, thus giving Clara Kimball Young virtually an all-star cast in her support for the screen version of this Max Marcin stage play of two seasons back. "Cheating Cheaters" is to follow Miss Young's next Select Picture, "The Road Through the Dark," which is being announced as a December attraction of merit.

Of Anna Q. Nilsson, who has one of the most important roles in the play, too much cannot be said. She came to America in 1907, after having already made a stage record in the Scandinavian countries, and immediately met public approval for her work in "Who's Guilty?" "Her Surrender," "Infidelity," and the Selznick Picture, "The Silent Master," with Robert Warwick. Her next, and perhaps the greatest success of her career, was in Select Pictures special attraction, "Over There," in which Miss Nilsson co-starred with Charles Richman. From the day of the first public showing of "Over There" Miss Nilsson's success as a star was assured. She not only capitivated her audiences wherever the big war drama was shown, but contributed largely to the success with which this picture met.

Miss Nilsson's name alone would carry any production to instant favor, and with this brilliant star in support of Clara Kimball Young, it is possible to determine in no small degree the importance and value of "Cheating Cheaters" as a box-office attraction.

Famous Players-Lasky Studios Again Busy

THINGS are looking up again in the Hollywood studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, with the practical ending of the so-called epidemic and the resumption of activities generally.

Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason started work on their individual Paramount productions. Washburn will finish up "Venus in the East" before starting a new one. Miss Mason has begun on her first Western-made subject.

Gloria Swanson, leading woman of the new Cecil B. DeMille production, "Don't Change Your Husband," is busy, and Lewis Cody who was to have entrained for an army camp is now released from the necessity of going to war. He is playing one of the leads in the DeMille picture.

Jeanie Macpherson, scenarist of the Lasky forces, has been engineering entertainments at Camp Kearny for the soldier boys.

Bennie Zeidman is back in town with his boss, Douglas Fairbanks. Kenneth McGaffey is back from his sojourn at Keen's Camp in the San Jacinto mountains.

The ministrel show for the benefit of the Lasky Home Guard which is now officially designated the 51st Company, Military Reserve of California, will be held this month. It is expected that the show will now go forward with added impetus as a result of the enforced delay. The funds derived will be applied to the purchase of new regulation uniforms for the organization.

"Scoop" (Paul) Conlon, formerly Roscoe Arbuckle's personal press agent, is now associated with William S. Hart, the Artcraft's star, in a similar capacity. Gerald Duffy, formerly with Mr. Hart, is awaiting the call to another position. Roscoe Arbuckle and his manager, Lou Anger, are on a motor trip to San Diego.

R. R. Nehls of American Talks to Importers

Because of the ending of the war and the consequent changes in the foreign film situation, General Manager R. R. Nehls of the American Film Company made a trip to New York and Boston to confer with the principal exporters and distributers for foreign countries.

Upon returning to the executive offices in Chicago, Mr. Nehls stated that there will be a sudden and unexpectedly large increase in foreign business. He is of the opinion that subjects based upon good, interesting stories will be in much greater demand than war stories or even romances based on or written around the theatres or incidents of the war.

Madge Kennedy Dances in "A Perfect Lady"

In her recent Goldwyn productions Madge Kennedy proved her ability as a diver, swimmer and all around athlete.

Stage dancing is shown to be one of her accomplishments in her newest Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," from Rose Stahl's popular stage play by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf.

In "A Perfect Lady" Madge Kennedy has the role of Lucille Le Jambon, featured performer of the Merry Models Burlesquers.

Special Trade Showing of Pearl White Serial

Mr. William E. Raynor, manager of the New York branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., arranged for a special trade showing of the forthcoming Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," on the New York Theatre Roof at 2 o'clock, Friday, December 6. The first three episodes were shown and exhibitors were cordially invited to attend.

Standard Cites Success with Reissues

The Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, Pa., has written a letter to W. H. Productions Company, New York, highly commending the reissues which it has secured from that company. The letter says, in part:

"We wish to call your attention to the success we have had in booking the various series of W. H. Production Co. reissued pictures. We have been buying four series from you, namely the two-reel Mack Sennetts, the two-reel Shorty Hamiltons, one- and two-reel Chaplins, and the one-reel Arbuckles. All of these are booking well. Many of the finest theatres in this territory are playing them regularly, in fact, in most of the towns hereabouts the representative houses are our regular customers for these reissues. A remarkable fact is that, although these pictures are reissues, and are plainly advertised as such, we practically never hear a complaint from our customers on this point. It is very seldom that any of our customers mention the fact that their public make any complaint regarding these pictures. It is, however, quite frequent that we are told that these pictures are appreciated more than many of the new comedies of today."

J. Gordon Edwards Escapes Grippe

J. Gordon Edwards, the Fox Film Corporation director who was to have started work on a new Theda Bara production Monday, November 25, was taken ill on the twenty-fourth and confined to his home for several days.

After forty-eight hours of treatment Mr. Edwards was able to ward off the threatened attack of grip, and on Wednesday started filming the first scene of the temporarily titled production, "The Scarlet Altars."

Upon completion of this picture Mr. Edwards will leave for California where he will remain for the greater part of the winter and spring.

Richard Stanton Directs Next Farnum Film

Richard Stanton has been selected by William Fox to direct William Farnum in his next de luxe production. Mr. Stanton directed "The Spy," "Rough and Ready" with William Farnum as the star, "The Land of the Free" and "Why I Would Not Marry."

Mr. Farnum is enjoying a short rest at his Sag Harbor, Long Island home, having recently finished filming "For Freedom." Neither story nor title has been selected for the new picture which Mr. Stanton will direct with Mr. Farnum, but a number of scenarios are under consideration. Work is expected to start within the coming week.

New People to Support Priscilla Dean

The title of Priscilla Dean's newest picture is temporarily given as "The Gutter Rose." The scenario was written by Harvey Gates from an original story by Evelyn Campbell. Tod Browning is the director.

In the supporting company, Lon Chaney, the character actor, who some time back was in the Bluebird fold, has returned after an absence. Another newcomer is Spottiswood Aiken. Wellington Plater is Miss Dean's leading man.

Apples in New York Cause Great Excitement

Camera men from Harry Levey's Industrial Department of the Universal recently took a picture of the arrival of apples at a fruit stand in New York. The incident caused a crowd that blocked Seventh avenue for many feet north and south of 48th street.

The photographers had previously taken pictures of the apples from the time they were plucked from trees in an orchard on the coast to the time they left the train in New York. The film will be entitled "Skookum."

Re-Issues—And They

"The demand today for W. H. Productions Co. re-issues is just as great, or even greater than it ever was. We can safely say that we are serving sixty per cent of Michigan theatres with your re-issues."

—D. MUNDSTUK, Strand Features, Detroit, Mich.

"The Mack Sennett two reelers, and the Arbuckle single reel comedies are meeting with more favor generally than we had even anticipated. We handle a large variety of newly produced short subjects of the highest quality obtainable, and W. H. Productions Co. re-issues are far superior as a money-maker for us or a box office asset to the exhibitor."

—J. LANNON, Greater Features Co., Seattle, Wash.

"We have had remarkable success in booking various series of W. H. Productions Co. re-issue pictures. We have been buying four series from you, namely, the two reel Mack Sennetts, the two reel Shorty Hamiltons, the one and two reel Charlie Chaplins, and the one reel Arbuckles. Many of the finest theatres in this territory are playing them regularly; in fact, in most of the towns hereabout the representative houses are our regular customers for these re-issues, and it is quite frequently that we are told that these pictures are appreciated more than many of the new comedies of today."

—A. A. WEILAND, Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Only A Few Of The

Are Proud Of Them

" W. H. Productions Co. have established a reputation for re-issuing only pictures that prove satisfactory to all classes of patrons, and the exhibitor does not hesitate in booking a re-issue that carries the stamp of W. H. Productions. The public like to see them, and these subjects are many times better than similar ones which are being produced today."

—R. C. CROPPER, Bee Hive Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

" We are meeting with phenomenal success in the New England territory with these re-issues."

—F. B. MURPHY, Boston Photoplay Co., Boston, Mass.

" We are securing fine results with W. H. Productions Co. re-issues in this territory, and we have booked them in a great many of the most representative theatres."

—B. AMSTERDAM, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Pa.

" W. H. Productions Co. re-issues are proving to be box office assets. We are not experiencing any trouble in booking them to the leading exhibitors."

Keystone and Kay Bee Reissues

THAT "Honesty is the best policy" is one of the rules that has no exceptions. And right here we come to a case where not only is honesty the best policy, but you will be distinctly losing the power to make money unless you follow that axiom.

There has been a great deal said lately about the reissue proposition. If we were in the position of the exhibitor there would be no problem at all to us. We would not only not try to hide that certain pictures that we were showing were reissues, but we would make capital of that fact.

Suppose that the publishers of the novels of Scott or Dickens had issued the books to a certain number and then had stopped printing them. If they gave you an excuse after five years that these stories were now "old" and therefore they would be published no more, you would consider the gentleman as a fit candidate for the nearest queer factory.

And so, if pictures have the goods, there is no reason why they cannot come back time and time again. But certainly if you put Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe" on the market today as a new book you would not have the demand for it that comes for the volume today because it is a classic that has been enjoyed for generations. Motion pictures have not reached the same status as literature, but that has largely been because they have not been given the chance.

THESE observations caused by the announcement from W. H. Productions that it is to reissue four series of old pictures, two series of twenty-six one-reel Keystone comedies, or fifty-two in all, and two series of fifteen two-reel Kay Bee western productions, or a total of thirty.

These pictures were made before the days when the Keystone and the Kay Bee companies became a part of the original Triangle Film Corporation, and therefore they antedate many of the features and are creations of the stock company days when these companies included any number of players who are today known the world over as stars of the first rank.

Most of these pictures have been reedited and retitled, but the old titles are retained as well so that any one looking at the paper will not be deceived into thinking that they are new pictures. We repeat that the exhibitor will get more money by making this fact mighty clear.

One of the drawbacks with the ordinary reissue has been the fact that the stories themselves have become out of date through the development of the world, though the incidents on which they were founded having been lost sight of, or because of the costuming of what was "today" drama at the time of the pictures' production.

BUT this does not apply in the case of the boiled-down comedies or in the case of the two-reel productions which are all distinctly Western creations. The comedies were all made under the direction of Mack Sennett and include such present-day stars as Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Roscoe Arbuckle, Syd Chaplin, Fred Mace, Chester Conklin and Mack Sennett himself. In many cases several of these appear in the same production.

The two-reel Westerns were made in the days when the company maintained a whole troop of cowboys and a tribe of Indians. They were made when Ince had his studios at Santa Monica, and Inceville was just becoming famous. Charles Ray, Clara Williams, Rhea Mitchell, Anna Little, Richard Stanton and Walter Edwards are some of the players that took part in these. There is nothing of the problem play about them; they are real Western stuff with all the thrills and daring riding that one would ask.

The two series of Keystone reissues are known as Liberty Keystone and Eagle Keystone, and the Westerns are called Columbia Kay Bees and Union Kay Bees.

REEDITING of these pictures has not yet been completed and only the first four or five of each series are now ready. For instance, the first of the Keystone Eagle brand, with Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett and Ford Sterling in the leading roles, was originally called "Mabel's Awful Mistake," and this old title is carried still, but the new title is "Her Deceitful Lover." Similarly "High Spots on Broadway," with Rube Miller, becomes "Having a Good Time," "Love and Gasoline," with Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin is "The Skidding Joy Riders," "Mabel's Dramatic Career," with Ford Sterling, Mack Sennett and Roscoe Arbuckle in the supporting cast is retitled "Her Dramatic Debut" and "Love and Bullets," with Charles Murray, bears the additional title of "The Trouble Mender."

The first five of the Keystone Liberty brand are "A Gay Lothario" ("Giddy, Gay and Ticklish") with Syd Chaplin, "In Loving Memory" ("Ambrose's First Falsehood") with Mack Swain, "A Touch of Rheumatism" (Mabel's Latest Prank") with Mabel Normand, "The Love Chase" ("Too Many Brides") with Ford Sterling and "The Bungling Burglars" ("Such a Cook") with Charles Murray. In each case the old name is indicated by the parentheses.

INDICATED similarly the first of the two-reel Kay Bee Union Brand are "The Relentless Avenger" ("The Mosaic Law") with J. Barney Sherry, Anna Little and Richard Stanton; the second "In the Nick of Times" ("The Operator at Big Sandy") with Rhea Mitchell; $100,000 Bill" (title unchanged) with Walter Edwards and "The Moonshiners" ("The Raiders") with Robert Stanton.

Charles Ray and Walter Edwards have the leading roles in the first of the Kay Bee Columbia Brand, "The Clue" ("The Ace of Hearts"), and others are: "Under the Big Top" ("Will O' the Wisp") with J. Barney Sherry and Anna Little; "The Golden Trail" (old title retained) with Robert Stanton and "The Phantom Extra" (old title retained), with Robert Stanton and Rhea Mitchell and "The Burning Brand" ("The Renegade") with J. Barney Sherry.

These pictures are to be booked through independent exchanges and according to statements made by officials of the W. H. Company the exchanges have been instructed to sell them as rejuvenated reissues and to call strong attention to that fact.

MUSIC EFFECTS

Jazz Stuff and Imitations Will Put New Spice Into Show

NO matter if you have no more than three pieces in your orchestra, or even if there is nothing but a piano to play the pictures, put a lot of new pep into the music with the reissued Keystone comedies. In practically every one of these there is plenty of opportunity for the burlesque imitation music.

Dig up the liveliest of popular music and use it with these pictures. "Step With Pep," "Oh, Oh Frenchie," "Pretty Baby," "Oh Lady, Lady," "More Candy," "Oui, Oui Marie," "Honky Tonky," "Pepper Pot," "Who is Who," "When a Maid is Knocking at Your Heart," "Hezekiah," "Porcupine Patrol" and any number of these popular airs with a punch and a swing to them will appeal.

Keep your music with the Keystones the hummy, popular sort so that when you next advertise one of these pictures your public will know that they will have delightful music all through them—and go home with a smile.

How to Appeal to Every Picture Fan in Your Section

ONE who goes along with the industry day after day is hardly able to realize the rapidity of the changes that have come. It is sometimes a good thing for you to take up your files of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the predecessors that were incorporated into it and look back at the pictures that were being released five and six years ago.

We say this because these reissue pictures were all made in 1913 and early in 1914, some of them having been first released in January, 1913, or nearly six years ago For instance in one of the Kay Bee reissues, "The Mosaic Law," which also bears the new title, "The Relentless Avenger," Mildred Harris, now one of the most prominent stars, played the part of a young child.

But the main thing to be considered by the exhibitor in laying his plans for the exploitation of these pictures is the changes in his audiences during that time. Here are two questions that we would ask:

"How many of my patrons of today saw these pictures when they were first released?" And

"How many of my patrons who did see these remember them more distinctly than to retain the impression that the Keystones were mighty funny and that there were plenty of thrills in the Kay Bees?"

THIS might be carried further and the exhibitor might well conclude that in cases where the original production was kept firmly in the minds of some of his patrons, it must be a mighty good one to be remembered that length of time and therefore offer opportunity for its exploitation as a picture itself.

ON THEIR RETURN

Our Boys from "Over There" Will Want Thrills and Laughter

WRITING in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS recently Edward L. Hyman, director of the picture division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, declared that when our soldiers come back from France they are going to make a new demand on motion picture theatres.

Mr. Hyman says that they are going to demand pictures with a laugh in them and pictures with the thrill of manhood. He declares that they do not want to be worried by problem plays and they have lost interest in the sex stuff. Here is material that ought to appeal to them.

Everyone knows what these Keystones are—intended for nothing but to make one laugh. The Kay Bees are full of action, plenty of fighting and the love interest strong. Certainly they are American all the way through, both the dramas and the comedies.

Why not have a "soldier boy return" night, show these pictures, sing the old time melodies and the song hits that have come out of the war?

We are always talking about "the good old days." That relative time as applied to the motion picture was only five or six years ago. How many of your patrons who did see these pictures at their release were then children and how many of them have grown up with little more than memory of the laughter at the Keystones, and of applause for the heroes and heroines.

That is the basis on which we would work in advertising these pictures. We would make every one of them a "Gem of the past" and we would call attention to that fact in every display and in every announcement of any sort.

And another thing that must be taken into consideration is that in every community where there was a motion picture theatre five and six years ago you will have a certain amount of boosters of these pictures, if you make it clear what they are. You can always hear comment in your audiences that "comedies are not as funny as in the old days," and the like, and here you have a chance to take advantage of that. Of course, we would not come out and make such a statement ourselves, for when you do you are to an extent weakening the current releases. Comparisons are generally odious anyway.

NOW let us suppose that you have boosted one or both series of the re-edited Keystone and one or both of the re-edited Kay Bee. Even if you are only a moderate advertiser we would advise you to take additional space when you get ready to show of the first of the, say, Liberty Keystone pictures. If possible we would recommend the use of two full columns of space and then we would start it something like this:

"Remember the 'good old days,' five and

One one and one three sheet are furnished with each Keystone six years ago, when we used to split our sides over the Keystone comedies?

"Remember the days when you were getting introduced to Mabel and Fatty, and Syd Chaplain and Mark Swain and Charles Murray and Fred Mace and Chester Conklin, all of them in that same remarkable company of comedians? And Mack Sennett was acting then, too.

"Remember when the first of the custard pies found their human targets and you thrilled with the funny 'chase' stuff and laughed through the adventures of Mabel, the dire deeds of the villains and the triumph of the hero after a spasm of laughs?

"And if you did not see them in those days you have heard your neighbors and friends, probably your fathers and mothers talk about them. Maybe you weren't a 'fan' then and so these have been among your lost opportunities.

"And, then, if you did see them, you remember how funny they were, you still retain the impression of the laughter they caused, but you don't remember the detail of them and after this five or six years there is just a hearty series of laughs left for you again.

"So we have revived these Gems of the Past and are going to offer you in the form of fresh prints, newly titled, brought up to date with any of the waste matter chopped out of them and all the very meat of laughter. They bear the old titles as well as the new and so you can identify your old friends."

Then go ahead to talk about the first of the productions that you are to show. Get into the chatty detail of them. Talk about the players that are in the cast. That is the form of advertising to awaken the greatest interest in these pictures.

IF we were doing the advertising for the first of these reissued Keystones or Kay Bees we would do one of two things—either devote the greater part of the space in the entire display to talking about these pictures, or make the announcement separate from the advertisement announcing the regular five-reel "feature" of the bill.

In other words, at least with the first of these we would make it the FEATURE of the bill, not alone on account of the drawing power of the one or two reeler itself, but because of the interest that you will arouse in the other reissues of the same series that you have booked.

And when you come to the second, you can say: "The first of these Gems of the Past had the whole town laughing again. The second of them (and the name) is to be shown tomorrow"; and then go ahead with a similar but shorter talk.

Now with every announcement of one of these pictures, whether a one-reel comedy or a two-reel western, we would call attention to the fact that it was a picture revived because it was so good.

If you pretend that these are new pictures you are going to offend patrons who would have enjoyed them all the more for the fact that they were reissues if you had told them that. People resent being fooled, and they will buy pictures, as anything else when you are frank.

And your real punch is in the millions of laughs, or thrills, as the case may rest between the comedies and the westerns, that they gave in the past and that they offer to those who have missed or forgotten them.

RECENTLY one of the big companies sent out reissues of a number of its best pictures of two or three years ago The exhibitors were advised to advertise them as the pick of the plays of the past, but in spite of that advice there were a number that tried to boost these against current attractions with the same star.

This is a sad mistake for any exhibitor to make. If he is working the house simply for the day's gate receipts he may be able to get away with it, but if he is in business not only for today and tomorrow he is inviting the enmity of his community.

Deliberately ignore the dates of your opponents with the releases with the same players and go ahead and advertise these pictures as we have suggested to you, and on their merits. It is always poor exhibitor policy to worry about the other fellow's bill. but the moment that you start to rival him with some other picture of the same star the closer you are drawn to the temptation of misrepresentation.

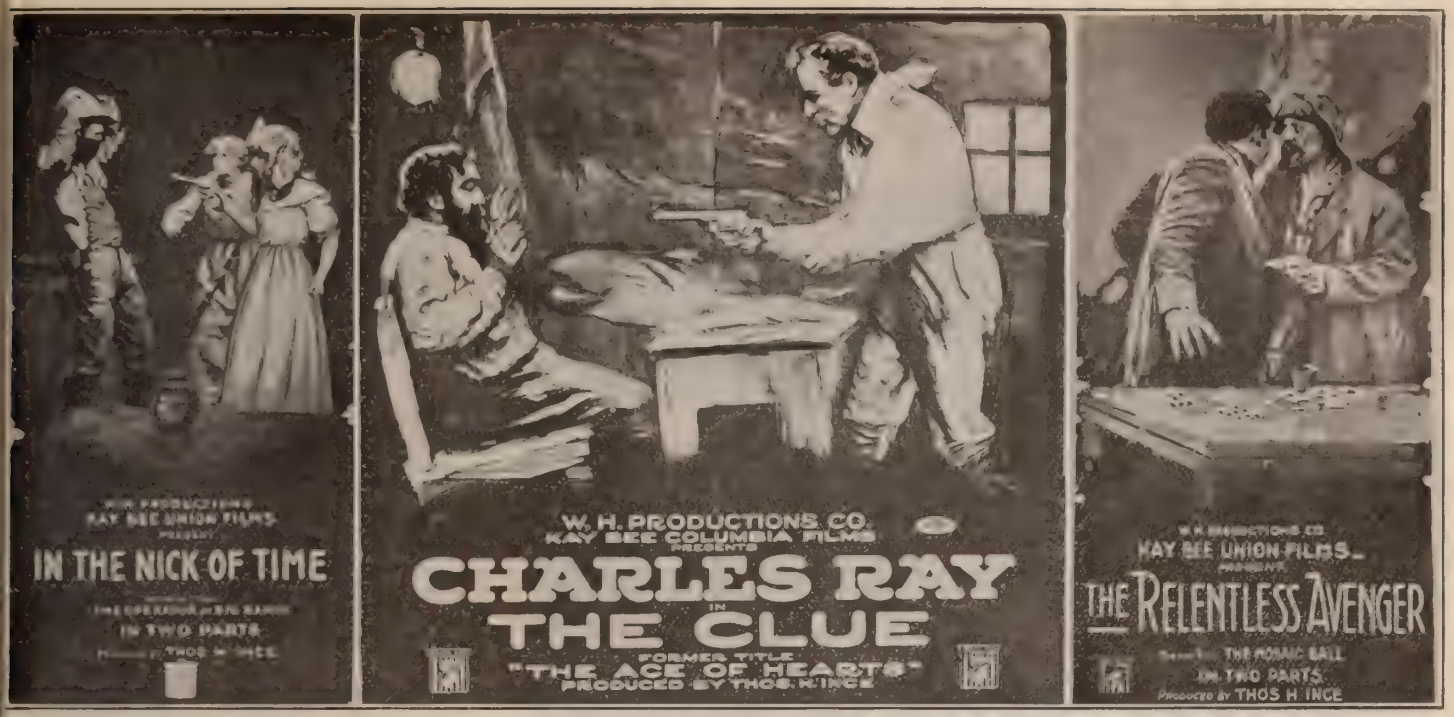
IF you are playing the current releases in which some of these same stars are appearing the appeal of the picture is made the stronger rather than lessened. You can make the contrast of the presentations work for the benefit of both the old pictures and the new if you will simply come out before the public and tell what you are doing.

We couldn't imagine a much better stunt for an exhibitor of the first run "Fatty" Arbuckle or Mabel Normand pictures than to come out and announce that you have on the same program a picture in which the star appeared six years ago and the latest offering.

The same plans of appeals that we have suggested for the newspaper advertising can well be followed in the letters to your patrons and to your program. We wouldn't for the moment suggest a letter to the patrons on each picture, but a mailed general announcement will do good.

In these keep the "Have you seen them?" point strong. Stress the million that have laughed and thrilled at them, the millions that failed to laugh and thrill and the millions that have laughed and thrilled and have forgotten all but the bare sensation and will want to laugh and thrill again.

The reason that we keep repeating this is because it is THE POINT in your exploitation.



Paper on the Kay Bee Union and Columbia pictures include one, three and six sheets on each production

"Old Timers Night" Will Help Put Them Over

MOST exhibitors take a considerable amount of trouble in selecting their features and then merely "fill in" their programs with any "stuff" that is available. It is needless to say that these are not the hundred per cent exhibitors.

It doesn't take S. L. Rothapfel long to decide upon the feature that he is to show at the Rialto or the Rivoli, but he takes a whole lot of time in selecting the short subjects that go into his program. There have been dozens of occasions in the last year where the musical numbers have been built around a short subject rather than the feature. And it is worth while to note that Mr. Rothapfel has been the only big exhibitor on Broadway to show, not once, but several times, reissued comedies.

If you are a hundred per cent exhibitor, the thing that you are seeking to achieve is to make every part of your bill appealing. And so you can use these reissued Westerns and Keystones as an incidental part of your bill, but you can get a lot of interest aroused in them.

NATURALLY, the length of your runs has much to do with the sort of exploitation that you give the different pictures. If you have a daily change house there could be no better stunt than to have an "Old Timers' Night." You can use one of the two-reel Westerns and one of the reissued comedies with such other pictures as you need to lengthen out your program, but give the musical setting over to the selections that are well known to every one.

Recently at the Rothapfel houses there has been great attention paid to the old and popular songs. One of the biggest hits has been scored by the rendition of selections from the Stephen Foster hits. Only last week at the Rialto "Old Timers' Waltz" was used. This includes such selections as "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Sidewalks of New York," "She May Have Seen Better Days," "The Band Played On," and "After the Ball."

"Auld Lang Syne" can be used with these pictures to mighty good effect as a curtain raiser either by the employment of a soloist, preferably from behind the scenes, or your orchestra or organ. "Believe Me, Those Endearing Young Charms" and any of the other old favorites can be used well.

And have you ever tried community singing? Here would be a good opportunity to devote one day a week to this. Get slides made of the old time songs, and if possible employ a really good singer to "carry the tune."

For the longer run houses we would still suggest a few bars of one of the old songs as a prelude to the pictures and to use the popular favorites as orchestra or special numbers.

IF you are running a fairly long show, whether for one night or a week, we would suggest that you use the two-reel Western as the first of the pictures, then your news weekly to jump the people right back to the present, then your feature, and to end up with one of the old Keystone comedies. You are giving your program then not only novelty, but you are challenging comparison of your pictures and are providing a whole lot of word-of-mouth advertising.

But let the comparison be largely by inference. In other words, we would not for the world put on a current comedy and then one of these reissues next to it and then ask the people to say whether one is better than the other. You don't want to lend yourself to "knocking" any part of your bill. We have already suggested that you can use one of these pictures presenting a certain star and then one of his or her current feature attractions, but that is an entirely different proposition.

In that case you are centering on the star, his development or whatever may have happened. You are playing on his personality, and you can get away strong with it, but here, as in every other case, do not simply invite the public to say which is the better PICTURE.

THERE is plenty of paper supplied by W. H. Productions for the advertising of the four series of pictures. There are one and three sheets on the Keystone and ten 8 by 10 photos. On the Kay Bees there are one, three and six sheets and ten 8 x 10 photos. The various scenes have been selected for their punchy power and these should be used liberally, but do not crowd your lobby up with them, and by all means do not cover up the original title.

A mighty good stunt that could be used with the introduction of these pictures is to arrange a special frame carrying the pictures of some twenty or thirty present-day stars of the first rank who appear in these pictures and then to use a card something on this order: "You know what they are doing today. Do you remember what they were doing five years ago? The Empire theatre is going to show you."

Play the scene cuts as strong as you would those of the feature.

Don't use the freak in a lobby display unless you can work out some good idea on the individual picture. And in many cases that is easy to do. But in working out these ideas do not use camouflage.

Keep remembering that the success that these pictures made five and six years ago is the insurance for your box-office, and play that for all that it is worth.

"Borrowed Clothes" Is the Most Recent Jewel Production Starring Mildred Harris. It Is Said to Be Booking Steadily and Heavily

U. S. Service Men Back to Jewel

Old Positions Are Waiting for All Former Jewel Men in the Service, and Many Are Already Back

H. M. BERMAN, sales manager of Jewel Productions, who returned a few days ago from an extended trip over the country, reports that Jewel exchange staffs are being greatly expanded to take care of men who are returning from war service.

"Jewel Productions is keeping its word to all its old employes who left to serve Uncle Sam in the army or navy or any other branch of the war service," he said. "We promised these men that they would find their old jobs waiting for them when they returned. Now these men are beginning to return, and we are making good.

"It has been necessary to create new places for many persons who were employed to fill the vacancies left by those who went to war. This has caused an expansion in the size of our forces in many exchanges.

"We haven't lost a single man through the influenza shutdown. All those compelled to drop out for the period of the epidemic have returned."

Among the exchange men who have returned to their posts from the war are Curley Calvert of the Omaha exchange and Milton Feld of Kansas City.

Mr. Berman reports he found a big demand for first-run bookings of late and pending productions featuring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. The exchange men had evidence showing that the exhibitors were eager to book all the pictures of this little star because of the great public interest created by her recent marriage to Charlie Chaplin.

Among those who signed up arrangements on a large scale for the Mrs. Chaplin pictures was the firm of Rubin and Finkelstein of Minneapolis and St. Paul. This office contracted to handle the entire output of Mrs. Chaplin productions in its territory.

Red Cross Films Make Vaudeville Debut

The weekly American Red Cross War Work films began appearing generally as a regular part of the United Booking Offices program on November 24 at the principal vaudeville houses all over the country. Wherever the films were shown reports are said to indicate that they were received with enthusiasm, and their debut is regarded a success.

Every General Film Company exchange was kept busy providing prints for the dates which opened the series of bookings. In New York the Red Cross films as program subjects made their principal first appearance at the Palace theatre. The picture chosen was "Rebuilding Broken Lives," a visualization of the manner in which soldiers minus an arm or leg are fitted to pursue the arts of peace and industry.

"The Cabaret Girl" for December 30 Release

The release date of "The Cabaret Girl" has been changed from December 16 to December 30.

Advance statements from Bluebird officials in reference to this Ruth Clifford feature say that the young star has achieved in this picture a wide range of talent.

St. Paul Film Concern on New Footing

In a reorganization of the Raths-Seavolt Film Manufacturing Company at St. Paul, W. R. Mills, assistant general passenger agent of the Great Northern Railway, has resigned his railroad position to become vice-president of the film concern now known as Raths, Mills and Bell, Inc.

O. N. Raths, for many years active as an exhibitor and formerly owner of two St. Paul theatres, has been postmaster of St. Paul for the last few years and is president of the newly re-organized company. C. E. Bell is secretary.

The new company will take over the plant of the former organization at 817-823 University ave. An office also will be maintained in Minneapolis.

The company will engage in community and industrial promotion, general advertising and motion picture film manufacture.

Mr. Raths and Mr. Bell have been engaged in the moving picture film manufacture in St. Paul for the past five years.

Vitagraph Announces Its December 9 Program

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of December 9th has been scheduled as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature—Five Parts—"The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," featuring Earle Williams. Written by Bess Meredyth. Directed by James Young.

Serial—Two Parts—"The Man Eater," Episode No. 8 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Special Comedy—Two Parts—"Daring and Dynamite."

Losanco Super-Plays, Inc., Has Been Formed

A new producing company, known as Losanco Super-Plays, Inc., has been recently organized in Los Angeles for the purpose of producing superior picture-plays based upon the policy that "The Story's The Thing."

J. W. Early, one of the pioneer producers of the industry, is director general of the new organization, and H. M. Gilliam is business manager. Everett C. Maxwell, short-story writer and photo-dramatist, heads the scenario department, Carl Stearns Clancy is writing the continuity for the first "super-drama," and Clyde McCoy will direct it under Mr. Early's supervision.

Harl McInroy, a writer and director, will produce a series of one-reel comedies. Robert Phelan is head camera-man. Theodore Kleine is technical director, and Clarence W. Fry the location man.

George Barr McCutcheon Story for Brady

While Alice Brady's Select Picture, "Her Great Chance," is being shown in first-run houses, announcement is made by Select that her next attraction will be "In the Hollow of Her Hand," a story by George Barr McCutcheon.

Among his best-known books are "Graustark," "The House of Graustark," "The Prince of Graustark," "What's His Name?", "The City of Masks," "From the Housetops," "Congressman Humphrey," and "In Africa."

Edna Mayo Stars in "Hearts of Love"

Edna Mayo will star in the Southern drama, "Hearts of Love."

As Virginia Rutledge, the devoted belle of the plantation period of the South, Edna Mayo has a part which she is said to be especially fitted. Her most conspicuous work in the past was as the heroine in the serial story, "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

Broadway Electric Signs Show Select Stars

The determination of Select Pictures Corporation to keep the names of its stars prominently before the public, is shown in a striking way in electric light signs erected on Broadway.

Along that famous thoroughfare, in the short distance between 42nd and 50th streets inclusive—the most brilliantly lighted half mile of city streets in the world—separate signs displaying to the public the names of all Select Pictures' famous stars may be seen.

On a recent night, for instance, one might have walked from the southern end of Times Square to the northern end of Longacre Square, and passed in doing so electric signs which proclaimed in turn, Constance Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Marion Davies, Alice Brady and Norma Talmadge, the latter star, indeed, appearing twice in the course of the brief walk, as her name is seen year in and year out in letters six feet high on the face of the New York Theatre.

It is interesting to note that as soon as Mitchell Lewis became a Select star, a Select Star sign proclaiming that fact was added to the five other brilliant advertisements of Select luminaries already on Broadway. The new Mitchell Lewis sign appeared immediately beneath that of Clara Kimball Young on Broadway and 46th street.

"The Common Cause" Had Trade Showing December 3

"The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's newest Vitagraph special, was given its initial trade showing at the Rialto theatre last Tuesday (December 3) morning.

Among those present were exhibitors from Greater New York and nearby territory, representatives of the foreign film market and of exhibitors throughout this country. Prominent members of the cast in the picture were also present. Among them were Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Rawlinson.

Rothacker Smile Film Reels Along

The Smile Film made recently by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, in co-operation with the Chicago Herald-Examiner will furnish the boys "over there" considerable amusement—the camera was mounted upon a rolling device and as the cameraman turned the crank he rolled it completely over, which will show the city suddenly rolling over on its back. The title preceding this reads: "When you come home boys, this is what we will do to the old town."

Answering a telegraphic appeal to rush the "Smile Film" along one day sooner, four of the young ladies at the Rothacker plant gave up their Saturday half-holiday and two of them worked all night so that the film might be sure to get to the boys "over there" by Christmas. Misses Irene Love and Marie Lehman are the ones who gave up their holiday. Misses Marie Linke and Cecilia Virginia Wittbrod are those who worked all night.

When the thirty-four reels of film are completed all the staff who have worked day and night on the picture will be given a rest. The work is to begin on a new duplicate film for the use at home. It will be grouped slightly different, however, but the long lines of people will be just the same in each. When printed it will probably be shown by home organizations to promote mutual acquaintance and friendship, and aid in establishing a permanent memorial in Chicago to the heroic deeds of their boys living and dead.

Anna Case Completes "The Hidden Truth"

"The Hidden Truth," the first picture Anna Case, the singer, has ever appeared in, is completed and was shown to a few invited guests in the projection room of the International Film Service Company, Inc., the producing company.

And the aforesaid invited guests have been talking, and according to the tone of their remarks it is of a calibre to please the most blase of picture fans.

Pathe Man in Kentucky Barrage

"Colonel Cal" Seeks Refuge in Y. M. C. A. While Jenkinites of Both Sexes Use Shotguns in Peace Celebration

H. P. GALLOWAY, "champion salesman" of the Pathe Cincinnati branch, is known throughout the mining and mountain districts of Kentucky and West Virginia, his fields of activity in which he has many warm personal friends as well as steady customers.

He is familiarly known as "Colonel Cal" and has passed through many odd and exciting adventures; but none of them had the spectacular and deadly quality of the impromptu peace jubilee into which he found himself projected, and describes it in a letter to F. B. Chase, Branch Manager at Cincinnati:

"I have been with Pathe nearly three years," he writes, "and can honestly say that I have never in my life seen such a demonstration that was pulled off at Jenkins, Kentucky, this afternoon.

"I left Huntington at 5:30 A.M. Monday morning and arrived at Jenkins, Kentucky, at 7:15 P.M. At the depot there were hundreds of men and women shooting revolvers and shot guns. I hurriedly went to the Y. M. C. A. building and inquired for the manager, Mr. A. W. Jordan. I was informed that he was out. I left my grip and brief case and overcoat outside, and went to the club house, trying to locate Jordan, and, when I returned some one had shot two holes through my grip.

"Women were shooting shot guns and one woman fired a double-barrel shot gun which kicked her flat on her back in the middle of the road. I got Mr. Jordan to let me inside of the building and I slept in there all night on a bench, as it was really dangerous to be outside.

"A friend said the only way to do was to get into the shooting myself. He further offered me a revolver but I preferred staying inside. I did not go to dinner as I did not feel safe in doing so.

"Every window in the Y. M. C. A. building and the company offices were shot to smithereens. I cannot explain to you in this letter just how rough they were, but I will remember Jenkins, Kentucky, as long as I live. Four of the miners were shot and two were killed outright. While no doubt you were enjoying the celebration at Cincinnati I was bombarded and afraid to stick my head out of the train."

This demonstration, be it said, was an unbridled expression of sheer patriotic exhuberance, for the inhabitants of the territory covered by Mr. Galloway, many of whom cannot read, nevertheless have been steadily and fully informed concerning the war through the Official War Review, which, in the social service furnished by corporations and in the motion picture houses in towns and villages, has reached within a small fraction of a hundred per cent distribution, according to Sales Manager Quimby of the Pathe Home Office.

Many Stars in Red Cross "The Greatest Gift"

IN wealth of costume, variety and beauty of setting, artistic photography and notable cast, "The Greatest Gift," the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call picture, stands in a class quite apart from any single reel production hitherto attempted, it is claimed.

In the making of it the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation turned over to the Red Cross Bureau of Pictures not only its studios, but its directors, assistant directors, property men, scene painters, carpenters and electricians, with instructions that no pains were to be spared in turning out a "five-reel feature" in one reel.

The players, all of whom volunteered their services, entered into the spirit of the picture with an enthusiasm equalled only by that of the technical staff. The cast contains such names as Barbara Castleton, Peggy Shanor, Myrtle Stedman, Yolande Duquette, Mrs. Philip Boileau, Eugene O'Brien, Frank Mills, David Powell, Daniel Pennell, Herbert Standing, Jr., Fred C. Jones, and dozens of others whose faces are familiar to motion picture patrons.

One of the most charming portions of the production is said to have been that contributed by eight of the Florence Fleming Noyes aesthetic dancers, who interpreted five scenes with the classic grace in which they have been so carefully schooled. An ideal background for these dances was provided by the elaborate Greek Gardens of Mr. Samuel Untermeyer's estate at Hastings-on-the-Hudson. These gardens are perhaps the most costly specimen of landscape culture in this country and have never before been shown in motion pictures.

Another feature of "The Greatest Gift" is that it introduces to the screen Agnes Tait, the lovely model who posed for A. E. Foringer's celebrated Red Cross poster, "The Greatest Mother in the World." Miss Tait appears in the original costume made famous by the poster and is shown with the refugees and unfortunates of the war-torn world appealing for help in their hour of need.

In several scenes genuine Red Cross nurses, hospital hut workers and canteen workers who were awaiting their sailing orders volunteered to take part in the picture.

Prints of "The Greatest Gift" furnished by courtesy of the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories are distributed free of charge throughout the country at General Film Company exchanges for use in theatres before and during the "Christmas Roll Call" membership drive of the American Red Cross.

George Loane Tucker to Join Mayflower

George Loane Tucker has signed a contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to produce a series of productions under his personal direction.

He left for Los Angeles with Mr. John W. McKay, business manager for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and will start at once on his first production.

Alice Joyce Is Starred by Vitagraph in "The Captain's Captain," a Blue Ribbon

Vitagraph's Three Units Gives Varied Bill

Vitagraph's weekly program for the year includes three separate and distinct units of service, which nevertheless offer in their entirety or in a variation of combinations, a service that the company claims will fit every need of every theatre.

Each week Vitagraph releases a five-part Blue Ribbon Feature in Star Series. These rotating Star features may be booked in their entirety or on the basis of individual Star Series.

Vitagraph's serial service provides a serial-episode for every week in the year, giving exhibitors an unknown chain of chapter-plays of known and proved quality and box-office power.

There is, in addition, a two-reel comedy service. Each week Vitagraph releases a big "V" special comedy and it is claimed for them that they have grown into country-wide popularity with amazing rapidity.

Doris Kenyon's Company Works on "Twilight"

Doris Kenyon and a company of twenty-five players left for Hendersonville, N. C., where the exteriors of Miss Kenyon's next picture, "Twilight," will be made. The picture will be directed by J. Searle Dawley, with Ned Van Burean as chief cameraman and Thomas A. Persons, studio manager for De Luxe Pictures, Inc., in general charge of the production under Theodore C. Deitrich, president of the company.

Frank Mills, leading man in Miss Kenyon's last picture, "Wild Honey," which is now ready for release, will again be Miss Kenyon's leading man in "Twilight."

George Ovey Not with Sunshine Comedies

George Ovey wires Motion Picture News that there is no truth in the recent rumors that he had been engaged by Henry Lehrman. He declares that he has not associated himself with Sunshine Comedies.

Goldwyn Pre-Releases Two at Broadway Theatres

Goldwyn had the unusual distinction this last week of having two productions shown simultaneously for pre-release first run on Broadway at the Rialto and the Strand.

Rex Beach's newest story, featuring Frank McIntyre, "Too Fat to Fight," had its first presentation at S. L. Rothapfel's Rialto, and Madge Kennedy's newest picture, "A Perfect Lady," from the story of Channing Pollock and Reunold Wolf, was the week's bill at the Strand.

"It is a pleasure to watch it," wrote the reviewer of the New York Times. "Madge Kennedy is one of the comparatively few screen players who would be a star whether she were advertised as such or not. She is a remarkable pantomimist and, as always, a delightful person to look upon."

Allen Visits All Paramount Exchanges

J. W. Allen, special representative of the Famous Players-Lasky distribution department, has left the Cincinnati exchange of that company, where he had taken charge since last July, and is now making his headquarters at the Cleveland office, with Detroit as the next stop.

Mr. Allen, in his tour of Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, is giving attention to details with an idea of enhancing the service to exhibitors. With the approval of Walter E. Greene and Al Lichtman, in charge of the distribution department, Mr. Allen appointed G. G. Rich, for several years with the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges at Pittsburgh and Cleveland, as manager. C. C. Wallace, formerly a representative of the company in Indiana, was made assistant manager.

More Metro People Leave for West Coast

Margaret McWade, who plays Nurse Cavell in the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc. super-feature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," will go to California soon, where she expects to appear in a number of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc. productions.

E. J. Connelly and Paul Le Brett are others who will leave New York for the Pacific coast. Lilie Leslie, who plays the Katherine Kaelred part in the coming Screen Classics, Inc. production, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," and another member of the same cast, Julia Calhoun, are also going West.

"Sporting Life" Bookings Get Flying Start

"A big picture of big scenes" is the way Famous Players-Lasky describe its Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Sporting Life," released December 1. It is reported that the bookings have eclipsed all expectations on this production of Maurice Tourneur's, which is a picturization of the Drury Lane production.

About New Pictures

Two Goldwyn Star Series productions recently released. "Hidden Fires," Mae Marsh's first Star Series picture, and Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," with Will Rogers, received the coveted star mark from the Kansas censors.

Enid Bennett has a novel role in the part of Susie, daughter of a prospector, in the picture, "Fuss and Feathers," her Paramount release for December 1 from the Ince studio.

Anita Stewart has left for Los Angeles to begin work on "In Old Kentucky," second of the Louis B. Mayer productions for distribution by exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Lois Weber will direct her.

Marguerite Clark, the little Paramount star who recently became the wife of Capt. H. Palmerson Williams, returned to the 56th street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation after spending her honeymoon in Washington.

Fanny Cogan will play the important part of the Empress Victoria, mother of the ex-Kaiser, in the coming Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns."

"For Freedom" has been chosen as the name of the William Fox Standard Picture which William Farnum recently completed as a de luxe production at one of the Fox studios in New Jersey.

Sylvia Breamer, who is now working in "My Lady's Garter," Maurice Tourneur's new production for which she was loaned by J. Stuart Blackton, to whom she is under contract, hails from Australia.

In "Too Many Millions," Wallace Reid's new Paramount Picture, released December 8, the hero, Walsingham Van Dorn, is first introduced as a poor and lonely book agent.

Bert Lytell's coming Metro production, "Hitting the High Spots," was written by himself and directed by Charles Swickard. A gay Mexican fiesta, the cinquo de Mayo, is shown in full progress.

"Something different" was Charles Maigne's watchword when he directed Alice Brady in her latest Select attraction, "Her Great Chance." This picture is based on Fannie Hurst's novel, "Golden Fleece."

In the latest Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Sheriff," released November 24, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle enacts the role of a Western limb of the law, who seeks to outdo the heroes of the pictures.

Charles Miller is the director of the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., seven-act super-feature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," which has a dozen leading characters, a large number of minor ones, and twelve hundred or more persons in the ensemble scenes.

Three of the most famous of the Sennett comedians, Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Myrtle Lind, portray the leading roles in the latest Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Her First Mistake," which was released December 1.

Gladys Brockwell is Starred by William Fox in "The Strange Woman"

Mitchell Lewis Exclusive for Select Pictures

Select Pictures Corporation wishes to deny the impression which seems to have gained ground in some quarters that Mitchell Lewis will make pictures to be distributed through other concerns than Select. Mitchell Lewis is a Select star.

His new pictures will consist only of Select Pictures. These will be made and marketed as the Mitchell Lewis Select Star Series in just such fashion as the features made by Select's other stars.

Due, perhaps, to the fact that Mitchell Lewis is to be seen in current features offered by another distributing company, reports seem to have been circulated to the effect that Mr. Lewis' affiliation with Select is a temporary matter and would not preclude the production by this star of pictures to be distributed through other channels.

Universal Purchases a Paul West Story

What is believed to have been one of the last stories on which Paul West, author and playwright worked before he was found dead apparently from suicide in Paris, has been purchased by the Universal for adaption to the screen.

The story is entitled "Cherries are Ripe." Mr. West worked on it in collaboration with Maximilian Foster.

It will be recalled that Mr. West died mysteriously by drowning in the Seine River in Paris. He had been at the front in war work, and had been gassed. This is said to have greatly affected his mind. His relatives were warned at the time to guard him against suicide.

"Too Fat to Fight" Is Endorsed by Y. M. C. A.

Rex Beach's drama, "Too Fat to Fight," has been officially indorsed and given the highest possible recommendation by the Young Men's Christian Association.

A committee of Y. M. C. A. officials, headed by William Sloane, chairman of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A., attended a private showing of this Goldwyn picture and placed the stamp of the organization's approval on this new Rex Beach story, which depicts the wonderful work of the Y. M. C. A., Y. M. H. A., Y. W. C. A. and Salvation Army in the interests of humanity.

Gladys Leslie in Second Vitagraph Star Series

Gladys Leslie is presented in the second of her nine star series releases in "The Beloved Impostor," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature scheduled for release the week of December 16.

In this little drama, adapted from "Betty's House Party," by Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariana, Miss Leslie has a spirited role in which she is seen to splendid advantage, according to an advance statement by Vitagraph.

Screen Classics, Inc., Has Filmed "The Man Who Stayed at Home" from the Stage Play. The Cast Includes King Baggot and Claire Whitney. The Film Will Be Distributed by Metro.

Stanley Frames in Many Leading Lobbies

THAT the Stanley frames are in the lobbies of many leading Eastern theatres was shown at the Stanley Frame Company headquarters at 440 West Forty-second street, New York City, in a comprehensive list of their customers.

A glance over this list showed many chains of first-class theatres, such as Harry Crandall of Washington, D. C.; Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss, Sablosky and McGuirk and the Stanley Company of Philadelphia.

The Stanley Frame Company is exclusive manufacturers of theatrical lobby display. William F. Libman and Arnold Kornicker are on the service end of the Stanley Frame Company, and it is their opinion that the recent epidemic has brought a realization to a great many exhibitors, who have heretofore felt they have been too busy to do more than show films in their theatres, that it is high time that theatre surroundings be made so inviting that they will at all times be looked upon as meeting places where light and art and beautiful surroundings will serve as health resorts rather than disease spreaders.

Mr. Libman is said to be an expert in theatrical lobby display work and has had many years of experience back of him. Mr. Kornicker, too, has grown up in the theatrical lobby display business. The sanitary, sunlit factory of the Stanley Frame Company is under the supervision of Morris Mero, who has been in this business for the past eighteen years and who is personally responsible for every foot of lobby display built by the Stanley Frame Company.

Said Mr. Libman in the course of his interview:

"We realize that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the exhibitor looks to us for the suggestions for the improvement of his theatre, and to this end our Service Department is ready at all times to give exhibitors the full benefit of our combined ideas and experience. We pride ourselves on the fact that the Stanley Frame Company is really an Idea factory."

John Kunsky Objects to Long Film Titles

IN a protest against the use of long titles for feature productions, John H. Kunsky, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the state of Michigan, said:

"I wonder whether the trade journals have ever investigated the results to exhibitors of the long titles for productions? It is an evil which has contributed many difficulties to the ordinary troubles of the theatre operator.

"In many cases manufacturers put such long titles on their productions that it is almost impossible for the exhibitors to get any kind of a showing in their newspaper advertising without spreading copy over half the page at an enormous cost. Take such titles as "The Woman the Germans Shot," "The Dawn of Understanding," "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," "For the Freedom of the World," "Italy's Far Flung Battle Line," "Rosemary Climbs the Heights," "Why I Would Not Marry," or any one of a score of others that have been released recently and analyze the exhibitor problems in advertising them.

"We know that a newspaper ad, like a trade journal ad, should have three predominating features; a catch line, an illustration, and the name of the production should be sufficiently large to stand out.

"Next comes the name of the theatre. In advertising a long title, the exhibitor is obliged to take a long, narrow space or add possibly a column width to his usual space in order to display it properly.

"In lettering his banners or lobby cards, he cannot give size and boldness to a long title to make it visible at a distance.

Red Cross Films Claim a News Beat

How efficient and important a film organization exists in the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures is declared to be demonstrated by the news beat it has claimed as securing and distributing the first news reel of the big victory celebration in Paris.

So timely was this film that it was taken by all the Keith theatres in New York as an added special for their Thanksgiving Day programs.

On the same day dozens of prints of the Paris Victory Celebration were rushed to all points of the country to be distributed as an American Red Cross release through the General Film Company exchanges.

Coming on the heels of a similar beat by the Red Cross when it went into the Rivoli theatre with the first American-French Fourth of July celebration in Paris, the present achievement is declared to have demonstrated particular ability by the Bureau of Pictures to present live world events to the public of the United States through the medium of the screen.

The Paris Victory celebration is claimed to be a news beat upon an even wider margin than the former subject. It brings the Bureau of Pictures into prominence as a factor in the topical field.

"The Cavell Case" Goes Big in South

J. S. Woody, general sales manager for Select, has gone to Atlanta, Ga., where he will be in conference with Branch Manager T. O. Tuttle of the Select Exchange in that city. This is Mr. Woody's first official trip since he became general sales manager for the select organization.

The occasion of the visit to Atlanta has to do with the placing of contracts and the securing of play dates which Branch Manager Tuttle has rolled up for the latest-to-be-announced Select Special, "The Cavell Case," the drama in which Julia Arthur is presented as the British Red Cross Nurse whom the Germans shot.

Rothacker "Outdoors" by Exhibitors' Mutual

Forthcoming short-reel subjects to be released by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, under which name the reorganized Mutual Film Corporation will hereafter be known, include the Rothacker outdoor pictures.

"Bad Men and Good Scenery," the second in the series of outdoor subjects produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, was released through Exhibitors-Mutual November 24. It is a visit to the famous "Jackson Hole," notorious in the annals of the bad men of the West, who made it their rendezvous after a daring raid or hold-up.

"Peaks, Parks and Pines," released December 1, are scenes in the vicinity of Mt. Ranier, Washington, jealously called Mt. Tacoma by the inhabitants of Tacoma, Wash. For sheer beauty and the thrills of mountain climbing this "Outdoor" is declared to be a gem.

On the schedule of December 8 is "A Maori Romance," said to be the first drama ever produced by a semi-barbarous tribe. The picture was made in New Zealand, the home of the Maori, and every actor is a full-blooded native.

Special attention has been given to the titling of these "Outdoor" pictures. The human appeal is conveyed by titles which connect the scenic episodes in narrative form, and the title expert has caught the spirit of the subjects and emphasized them with light and humorous touches.

Harold J. Binney Moves to New Haven Studio

Harold J. Binney, producer of the Vangie Valentine Star Series that is being distributed by the William L. Sherry Service, will move his company to New Haven, Conn., where there is now being completed a modern studio at 254 Crown street.

A building that was originally built for garage purposes is being remodeled and equipped with the latest in the way of lights, laboratory, dressing rooms, projecting rooms, cutting rooms and business and executive offices. The studio proper consists of one large rom, 57 x 132 feet, with 30 feet overhead space.

The principal players with Mr. Binney are Vangie Valentine as the star, Neal Hamilton and William Bechtel. Included in his technical staff are all of Mr. Binney's old employes, all of whom have been with him for one or more years, most of them four years. They are Fred Bezerill, E. K. Barnard, V. W. Eldred, George Edwardes-Hall and that premier camera man, Arthur A. Porchet.

Night Court Scene

A graphic scene in a night court is described as one of the interesting incidents in "Sylvia on a Spree," the Metro screen romance to be released soon, with Emmy Wehlen as the star.

Not only does Sylvia appear in the night court, but she has to ride there in a patrol wagon.

Patriotic Production Prophetic

That Coming Events Always Cast Their Shadow Before It Is Demonstrated by Screen Classics, According to Metro

CURIOSITY in regard to the disposition to be made of Wilhelm Hohenzollern, former Kaiser of Germany, is declared to have aroused new interest in "To Hell With the Kaiser," featuring Lawrence Grant with Olive Tell and a cast of 3,000, the seven-act patriotic Screen Classics, Inc., production which created quite a furore throughout the country when it was first shown.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is said to be an instance of a production in which the interest is cumulative, and this has been due partly to the fact that this picture did not merely chronicle past events, but apparently foreshadowed coming ones as well.

Metro, who is distributing the picture, declares that it is in receipt of hundreds of letters from exhibitors who wish to play it again or use it for special runs since the war is over.

This prophetic quality is seen not only in "To Hell With the Kaiser," but also in the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns."

Events forecasted in this production had been acted before the camera by the Screen Classics, Inc., players, as written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller, before they actually had historic being.

Moreover, some of the events have not happened yet. But they exist at this moment on the film in the safe where the Screen Classics, Inc., celluloid is kept.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is declared to be as timely right now as it was when it was produced several months ago—because it has ancicipated history. That anticipation was built on a logical interpretation of the trend of events—and the same is said to be true of "The Great Victory."

Motion picture exhibitors throughout the country are still booking "To Hell With the Kaiser," and they are also said to be asking for the rights to show "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser?" as soon as it has received its New York premiere.

Every town that has sent a soldier to the war evidently wants to see both productions, according to Metro, since each gives an idea of the way in which the American "doughboys" have shown their mettle.

In "To Hell With the Kaiser" the love story is between an American girl, Alice Monroe, played by Olive Tell, and Winslow Dodge, an American aviator, played by John Sunderland. In "The Great Victory," the sweethearts are a young Alsatian, Conrad Le Brett, played by Creighton Hale, and an American girl who is a Red Cross nurse, played by Helen Ferguson.

The Kaiser is played in the first production by Lawrence Grant, in the second by Henry Kolker. The "men around the Kaiser" are played by the same men wherever practicable, these being known for their cleverness in making up to resemble Wilhelm's advisers.

They include Emil Hoch as von Hindenburg; H. C. Carvill as Count von Bismarck, Carl de Mel as von Moltke, and Carl Dane as von Bethmann-Hollweg. Also, Frank Farrington again plays General Pershing. Frank Currier is a member of both casts.

Bessie Love Makes Bow as Vitagraph Star

BESSIE LOVE makes her bow as a Vitagraph star in the Blue Ribbon Feature "The Dawn of Understanding," scheduled for release the week of December 2, and it is stated that she never has appeared to better advantage than in this prairie romance.

"The Dawn of Understanding" was produced on the stage by Frohman some years ago under the name of "Sue" and starred Annie Russell. It was adapted from Bret Harte's "The Judgment of Bolinas Plains."

In this love story from the pen of the famous delineator of Western life and character it is said that Bessie Love has the fullest opportunity to show her talent as a clever comedienne and a dramatic actress.

The picture was filmed in Southern California and out on the Mohave desert. David Smith directed the feature and is said to have obtained many striking scenes. He crossed the California-Arizona line and invaded Death Valley in search of true Bret Harte atmosphere and in this he is said to have been remarkably successful.

Miss Love is fortunate also in her first feature in having a cast including J. Frank Glendon, G. A. Williams, Jack Gilbert, George Kunkle and Jack Abrams.

The story is described as a quaint romance, colorful of the West in the gold days, of pathos and near tragedy and relieved by touches of comedy so typical of Bret Harte stories. There is said to be action at all times that commands and holds the interest

Sue (Miss Love) is a pathetic little picture, the saddest on Bolinas Plains, left there by her father, a prospector, when her mother died as the family was trekking West in a prairie schooner and she refused to leave the grave. Her home is the ranch of Ira Beasley, a young fellow untouched by romance who lives a lonely life with his help, an assortment of white men and Chinese women, with nearest neighbors away below the horizon line

Mildred Moore in Leads for Lyons-Moran

Mildred Moore has been engaged as the new leading woman of Lyons-Moran comedies, taking the place of Dorothy De Vore.

Miss Moore has previously played many light comedy roles in Universal and Bluebird productions.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Production Activities Open Up

DESPITE the failure of health authorities to lift the Influenza ban in Los Angeles, which means the theatres are still closed, not more than eight people are permitted in an elevator, not more than twelve people can attend a funeral, and no more than sixteen may work together without special permit from health authorities; production activities have materially increased during the current week.

New production units went to work at a number of the studios on new subjects during this time, and in most instances these were new ones made up of stars who had arrived in Los Angeles from the East within the past few days.

There have been many additions to screen notables to the west coast film colony during the past week. Maurice Tourneur with his son and entire producing staff arrived Saturday, and will shortly begin filming a big production at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City where he has leased space, and at present is arranging for accommodations.

Anita Stewart, accompanied by her mother, Business Manager R. W. McFarland, and Virginia Norden, arrived Friday, and began work Monday under the direction of Lois Weber at the latter's studio on the filming of "An American Girl." Jack Holt will be Miss Stewart's leading man. Juanita Hansen will also appear in this cast.

New Company Comes In

The Famous Players-Lasky Company has sent another organization to the coast for the filming of a Salvation Army picture which will have a very remarkable cast. Cathrine Calver, Eugene O'Brien, and Evangeline Booth, Salvation Army head, are all to appear in this film which is being directed by Edward Jose. All have arrived and are at work at the Lasky studio except Miss Booth, who is expected in a few days. Ruby Deremer also came West with this company.

Henry Walthall with his bride, Mary Charleson, is expected on the coast within a few days, and by the time he arrives everything will be in readiness at the National studio for the filming of his first subject, "The Long Lane's Turn," from the Cosmopolitan serial of the same title by Harry Ermine Rives. Louis Chaudet will direct this production, while Bertram Bracken works with the scenario department in the preparation of the next. Frank Glendon has been engaged by General Manager Isadore Bernstein and he with Chaudet and Bracken will alternate in the direction of the Walthall and Billie Rhodes companies. Harry Pollard is also a new member of the National staff, and will direct the Smiling Billy Parson comedies being made for Goldwyn.

Roy Stewart Appears Satisfied with His Position in "The Silent Rider," Triangle Play

Universal added another company this week, that of Harry Carey directed by Jack Ford. Two Bret Harte stories, "The Outcast of Poker Flat" and "The Luck of Roaring Camp," have been merged into one melodrama by H. Tipton Steck of the Universal scenario department. The entire cast has not been selected and the company is at work on a number of exteriors.

Billy Mason has been engaged by the Universal as leading man for Edith Roberts, and will make his appearance in "Cherries Are Ripe," now being directed by Jack Dillon.

Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford are to be co-starred again, and they are now at work on a story titled "Pirates Gold." These two played together in "The Savage" and "The Desire of the Moth." Their present subject is a modern melodrama with a prologue based upon ancient sea piracy.

Burlesque Universal Films

Two of Universal's recent releases, "A Soul For Sale" and "Her Body in Bond," are to be burlesqued by Lyons and Moran in a Star Comedy titled "His Bondy For Rent."

A large western village has been built at Universal City, and is to be used by J. P. McGowan in the production of "The Fifth Ace," a new serial which will star Marie Walcamp. This producing unit will begin work during the coming week as scenario, cast and properties have all been prepared.

Arrangements were made this week for the Pacific Coast editing of Hearst International Weekly, and Gardner Bradford, who has been identified with Pacific Coast papers and more recently served as title writer for Triangle and Universal, has been selected as western editor on film taken by western states cameramen, which will be shipped to Universal City for developing, editing, titling and assembling. A Pacific Coast edition of the weekly will also be compiled here.

The publicity department at Universal City has been materially enlarged by the engagement by Hammond Beall of two additional members. M. A. Morrison, formerly of the Los Angeles Times, and S. E. Schlager, late of the Los Angeles Examiner, are the new members.

The Universal this week chartered a portion of a baggage car on the Sante Fe Limited for the use of Allen Holubar and Frank Lawrence, editor-in-chief of Universal City. While en route to New York, Messrs. Holubar and Lawrence will give the recent Holubar production, "Victory," its final editing. Mr. Holubar was accompanied by his wife, Dorothy Phillips. During the absence of Lawrence, George Arthur will be in charge of the film editing department.

Tarkington Baker, managing director of the Universal publicity department, who has been at the coast visiting exchanges and Universal City, departed this week for New York.

D. B. Ledderman, supervising director of the Universal exchanges, while on tour of the country, spent several days of the past week at Universal City and with Manager Dave Bershon of the Los Angeles Exchange.

Vitagraph Forges Ahead

Production continues at full speed at the Vitagraph plant, despite the damage done by the wind storm early this week. After a short delay the serial company making "The Iron Test" with Antonio Moreno, under the direction of Ronald Bradbury, resumed work. The final episode of this will be completed within a few days.

David Smith continues on "The Enchanted Barn" starring Bessie Love supported by J. Frank Glendon, and James Young has "The American Ace" about half finished. This is from scenario by H. H. Van Loan, and the subject stars Earle Williams supported by Grace Darmond.

William Duncan this week staged the greatest thriller of his screen career when he dropped off a twenty-foot cliff at a forty-mile speed. The up-slant, built on the cliff to insure that the machine would not topple over immediately, was too

YOU don't have to label this one "Not a war picture." It is one of the good old comedy-dramas with the heart appeal, and as clean as a whistle. Our very first advice to exhibitors is to make it plain what sort of a picture it is. Some might jump to the conclusion from the title that it is a sex picture, when as a matter of fact it is as far away from anything of the sort as it possibly could be.

Keep all of your advertising essentially human. People like to see pictures with real Americans in them and this takes you from the thieves of the big city to the purity of the best people of a country town. There is nothing sensational about the production, but you can give it a general appeal to every member of the family if you will get the spirit of it first, for it is a heart interesting story of environment, the influence of good associations.

But don't say that. The minute that you spring such words as "regeneration" and "environment" on your patrons a lot of them conclude that it is some sort of a problem play and stay away. You can get the same message over, but in a more attractive way, as we will show you a little later on, by using simple language.

IN the first place there is nothing more attractive to most people than the character of a tomboy, and certainly there are few stars that you would think better suited to this rule than Mae Murray. She appears in boy's clothes during the first portion of the picture and then is just as attractive later when she blossoms out into the village belle.

With the exception of a few flashes at the start, the setting is in a country town and there is plenty of humor in these characters and a heart throb for the old mother whose son has disappeared and for whom she keeps a light in the window each night.

Let's look at the interest. Muggsy Mulane is the housekeeper for a band of safe-crackers and on occasions is called upon to help in operations, but she always gets the small end of the division of the loot. Finally "Jimmy the Eel," the newest member of the band, takes her part and demands that she be given a fair share. That starts a quarrel and in the midst of it the police come. All escape but Jimmy, Muggsy making her way to a freight train. After a long journey she comes out of the box car for air and then a brakeman sees her and gives chase. The train pulls away and leaves her in the country town.

Night comes and she is attracted to the home of Aunt Sarah by the light that the old woman has placed in her window. There Muggsy is befriended, and it is only after she has seen a picture of Aunt Sarah's son and has recognized that it is none other than her champion, Jimmy, that she reveals that she is a girl. She admits that she knows the son and explains that he is a "police judge" in New York.

BUT Jimmy has refused to "squeal" on his companions, as the girl learns from a newspaper, and Muggsy determines to repay his loyalty and the goodness of Aunt Sarah by caring for the old lady's interest. Judge Cotton, the richest and meanest man in town, has a mortgage on her home and when the interest comes due Muggsy tries to help out. And she does when the judge tries to kiss her in his office and she tells him that the town gossip is just outside and that she is going to reveal all unless he gives her $300, the amount of the interest. The hypocrite comes across.

All is not well, however, for "Bud," the second richest man in town, editor of the local paper and quite the town "sport," overhears, and to throw him off the track Muggsy tells him that she has really come to Cottonville as a representative of the oil company that is willing to pay big money for twenty acres Aunt Sarah owns. And Bud's greed for money causes him to rush to Aunt Sarah to offer her $10,000 for the property, much to her astonishment. Then Muggsy slips the money from the clock where the old lady has hidden it and settles up the mortgage. The end of Jimmy's year in prison comes and Muggsy is waiting to take him home to his mother, and eventually we see that she is to be his bride. And everything works out all right for everyone except the judge, because the oil company really does want the land and the property she has left makes Aunt Sarah rich, while Bud cleans up for himself.

This is a very brief outline of the story and does not undertake to bring out its human touches specifically.

Two column cut for advertising in mat and cut form

USE the title of this picture strong. Its name comes from an incident early in the picture when Muggsy sees a sign, "Danger—Go Slow," which directs her to Cottonville and a new life.

This title offers splendid opportunities for attracting attention to your advertisement, but then we would go ahead and tell more about what the picture is like.

There is the rural quaintness of "The Old Homestead" about this picture. Tell your public that the girl was only a debutante safe-cracker, but her flight from the police carried her to a gossipy small town where she was able to get the better of avaricious people who were trying to take the last property from a lonely widow.

Tell the public something like this:

"You'll thrill a little, laugh a lot and never know how it's all going to turn out in the end, but when the finish comes you'll find that it all happened just the right way."

Or here's another one:

"All the meanness of the world was not confined to the band of New York safe crackers. There was lots of it in the little village where the girl burglar landed, but she got the better of them all after she had found her true self."

Make your appeal strong to the women and the children. They will all like this. It is every bit action that all can understand and that gives no possible offense. They'll go away from your theatre with a smile on their faces and the tears that came now and then dried away.

"Muggsy" works her cunning twice. She "collects" when Judge Cotton tries to kiss her, and she bests Bud who thinks he is cheating the widow

Straight Heart Appeal Way to Play This Picture

YOU have a strong title in "Danger—Go Slow" and one that will attract attention, but we wouldn't advise you to go too far on the freak stuff in your exploitation. Certainly do not do anything that is calculated to alarm anyone through mysterious messages, and the like. In other words, use the title to attract attention, but let it be kept plain that it is a picture to which you are referring.

Attempts to plaster simply the title of the production around the city will probably result only in the exhibitor getting into trouble with the authorities, but if you use the one sheets and other paper that is supplied by Universal exchanges you attract the same attention that you would get with the teaser campaign and at the same time stir the interest in the story itself. Running simply the name of the picture at the bottom of your regular advertisement for a week preceding the announcement of the production will aid in arousing the curiosity.

We emphasize this point because the temptation is great to resort to the use of the title as a teaser. It is well to remember that when you can use a title or anything of the sort without any harm, it is good stuff, but it does not pay your theatre either for one picture or in the long run to employ a stunt that will cause anyone the slightest worry. There are a lot of people who resent things of this sort and it is well to stay clear of them.

AND you do not need any such thing. In the first place you have a noted star and then you have a strong supporting cast including fans who are known to every fan, and all of this is plus the story and the heart appeal that you ought to put over.

In the first place play this as a strictly American story. If you are in a large city call particular attention to the fact that this is a story of a small middle western town. Most of us citizens of big cities came from the smaller towns anyway and there is no more popular type of story with the big city person, especially when there is really something to the plot and the interest in the picture is held to the end.

Get just as many of the stills that are furnished with the picture used in your newspaper as possible. They have especial charm and will give a good idea of the character of the picture's appeal without a large amount of reading matter. We would use largely the ones that show the scenes in the small town and just enough of the burglary incident to show the great change that came over "Muggsy."

You want to keep the comedy element strong in all of your exploitation. People want to laugh these days, when these laughs come alternated with a throb, and when the humor is of the infectious, human sort. There is a relaxation now that peace is near at hand and the exhibitor who does not take full advantage of that fact is missing a great deal.

ALL AMERICAN

They're All Wanting to See Happy Pictures These Days

TELL your public that this is an all-American picture. It puts on the screen human types that all of us know—that can be found in almost every community.

There is not a hint of the war—before the war, during the war or after the war in it. We don't have to thrill with a single patriotic song and except for the police brush with the cracksmen in the introduction of the story there isn't the suggestion of a shot being fired.

Let it be known that it is a happy picture; that one never knows how it is going to come out until the end has come, but that then everyone will be satisfied that just the right things have happened.

THERE are one, two and three column portions of advertisements supplied by the Universal exchanges. We use the word "portions" advisedly for the designers have very wisely intended these as only the illustrations for displays for those who are not able to make their own cuts. The exhibitor is expected to put in his selling talk, and this should be adapted to the size and the character of the community. There is also a single column star ad cut.

But for the man who can design his own advertising and have his cuts made we suggest that he can get a most attractive arrangement by using portions of some of the stills that are available. There are several which show Miss Murray in boys' clothes. If you are going to use considerable space, which you will find to your advantage in this case, there is one of the stills which shows Miss Murray with a pistol in her hand standing beside a closed door. This could be used for a cut-out in the upper left hand corner of the display. It will get the eye immediately, and then in the lower right hand corner should be used a second picture of Miss Murray, but this one should be as the girl in the country town—all dressed up.

Then alongside the cut at the top of the display use the title of the picture in as large type as is justified by the size of the entire display. In this case we would use the title of the picture ahead of the name of the star though we would not fail to make Miss Murray's name very prominent. Then follow this up with your selling argument.

SUPPOSE that you wanted to describe a good book to a friend. You wouldn't merely say that this was a story that your friend ought to read, but you would go ahead and give some idea of the content. That is just what should be done in this case.

Let's look at some of the selling lines:

"When she was a chambermaid and had a gun in her hand she knew how to use it, but it wasn't until she

How Mae Murray looked as "Muggsy," the debutante burglar, and then as the belle of the village when she came into her own came to the village and basked in the affection of a pure mother that she found her heart—and she knew how to use it, too. A good girl she was, as clever as she had been as a helper of the crooks and she set things right in Cottonville and brought happiness to all the others that deserved happiness—and to herself."

Or again:

"She was a little girl, and she didn't know that theft was a crime until the spark of love kindled her heart and a man took her part. And when she met his mother and that kindly soul cared for her there came a new look on life and she saved the mother the fortune and brought home to her the son she, and the girl herself, longer for."

HERE are some lines that are designed to give the village twist to the story, and, as we have said before, the comedy element should not be ignored in "Danger—Go Slow."

"Down in Cottonville Bud was about the cleverest thing in the way of making love that had ever been seen. All the village gossips and the old maids thought that he was 'just charming,' but along came a little girl who just escaped the law, and she won Bud completely. But his avarice was too much and so while he thought he was robbing the widow, he provided her with the money to pay the mortgage. And the little girl grinned at him from behind the portierres—except they call them curtains in Cottonville."

And this:

"Judge Cotton thought more of a dime than he did his dearest friend, but this little girl, former burglar, made him pay $300 for a near kiss, because the judge was so 'good'—he thought the village gossip was outside and that he was about to be exposed. Then the village sport thought that he had won her, and he boasted of his money, but he was willing to rob the widow to get more, and so he had to pay in the end."

IF you have a special day when you can attract the women and the children to the theatre, this is a good time to feature this picture. It is not "over the heads" of anyone and it will please all except those who are looking for the ultra-sensational. It does not glorify crime, but on the contrary it shows, without the tiresomeness of seeking to point a moral, that it pays better in the end to be honest. There is nothing of the lecture about it, for the interest and the humor always holds the attention.

If you are in the habit of sending out occasional letters about pictures we would put emphasis on this one. But at any rate include a "talk" about this in your program or on special heralds. If you have a children's matinee this picture will have its appeal there and it will have the same appeal at night when you are expecting the grown-ups at your theatre.

Take this for your text:

"This little girl became a safe-cracker, because she didn't know any better. She was a victim of the 'gang' until a member championed her and then chance led her to a little village and to the kindliness of a motherly widow in whom she recognized the mother of her benefactor. "Danger—Go Slow" had warned her and led her to this haven.

"And there her cunning came in again, not that she might aid a band of criminals, but that she might fight the sanctimonious robbers of the weak and defenseless. She blossomed out into the village belle. The miser robber tried to kiss her, and she made him pay not for herself, but for the widow. And the village Beau Brummel, whom all the old maids 'just adored,' thought that he had used her for his profit, only to find that he himself was the victim.

"And the old lady loved her and profited by the cleverness of the girl who had never robbed again until she stole the heart of the son.

"You'll laugh with 'Muggsy' and still sob a little with her, but you will see in the end that she was just the rightest sort of a sweet little girl."

"An epic of a country village and the 'sweetest girl.'"

"'The Old Homestead' of the Screen."

"A story for the heart, with a laugh and a thrill."

Or use these:

"A girl burglar becomes the village belle and hearts are her easy prey."

"She was only a debutante safe-cracker in the city, but in Cottonville she queened them all and won them all and had all that her heart desired, for what she sought was to bring happiness to others. And she'll bring the sunshine of happiness to you."

DON'T be afraid to use salesmanship talks in all of your advertising and vary these as much as possible to get the various elements of the picture in day after day.

Exhibitors have gotten too much in the habit of trying to bring out some single sensational element in their advertising.

But what your audiences really want is solid entertainment, good acting, a worthwhile production, an interesting story and Americanism throughout with and ending that lets everyone go home with a smile on their faces and at peace with the world.

That's the way to talk to them about "Danger—Go Slow."

At the left one of the one sheets, in the center a six sheet and at the right one of the three sheets. Useful for cut-outs

How to Use the Lobby and the Star's Appeal

THERE is an unusual opportunity for lobby displays in "Danger—Go Slow." One of the one sheets which bears a circular sign with the words that form the title and a portrait of Mae Murray in the center offers an excellent suggestion for use in front of the theatre. These can be placed on posts along the sidewalk directly in front of the theatre or suspended from the marquise or sign over the sidewalk. It would even be better to have a local artist paint these in even larger sizes and in that case the special photos of the star can be used for the neater effect.

The very title of this picture in front of your theatre will stop the public. We have already warned against the possibility of getting into trouble with the local authorities if you try any teaser stunt about the city with the use of the title without coupling it up with the picture, but for use right in your theatre itself you are not open to that criticism for everyone immediately knows that you are referring to one of your attractions.

If you use draperies at any time in your lobby, by all means use red as the main background here. Red lights should be exclusively employed at night, the more of them the better.

ATTRACTIVE cut-outs can be made from the three sheet which includes a figure of Miss Murray as a little girl in a snowstorm. Smaller ones can be made from the one sheet which shows her in a boy's cap and working at the combination of a safe. The same idea is brought out in the 24-sheet, but in a larger size. Now you can use these cut outs separately or together, coupling them up with the line over them "Can you imagine these being the same little girl?"

We would suggest the element of reformation in any of the lobby display rather than anything of the criminal element. It is well to repeat that this is not by any means a crook story in the way that we generally know them. That only gives a setting for the story. So long as you merely portray the girl in the role of a burglar you are right, but don't do anything like reproducing a safe or using guns or burglar's lantern in your lobby. They will be misleading and will keep people away rather than bring them in.

HIT IT UP

Material A-Plenty of All Sorts for Boosting This Picture

MUCH of the material for exploiting "Danger—Go-Slow" is illustrated here, but the exhibitor will do well to call at his Universal exchange and see the various matter that he can have. We have suggested a number of ideas here, but after an inspection of the matter itself there will probably occur to the showman other good ideas.

The paper includes two one-sheets, one half sheet, two 3 sheets, one 6-sheet and a 24-sheet.

There is a set of black and white stills 8 x 10, a set of gelatines 11 x 14 and a 22 x 28 picture of Mae Murray.

Advertising cuts some in one, two and three column sizes, there are scenes in one, two and three column cuts and a cut of the star suitable for advertising purposes. In addition, the stills give wide scope for individual advertising effort.

IF you care to go still further in your lobby display and to avoid anything of the red effect you can do one of two things very easily and inexpensively. Either have the front of the "opry house" or "town hall" of a country town rigged up as if a show were going on that night, or you can have the country store arrangement. But if you do the latter do not make the mistake of having people sell things. It is a bad thing because it distracts attention from the public doing just what you want them to do—buy tickets. In either case you can have your cashier dressed as a country girl, sunbonnet and all.

Your whole bill should be arranged in keeping with the happy character of the picture. You can use comedies or news features or educational, but be sure that you get nothing sombre. This is the sort of a picture with which you aim to send everyone away from the theatre feeling better that they have seen this particular picture.

Keep all of your exploitation clean and let nothing of the suggestive creep in even by inference.

Ask your people in so many words do they want clean, charming, heart-interest plays. And they, answer them by saying that if they do they shouldn't miss the story of the little girl in "Danger—Go Slow."

EVERYONE knows Mae Murray as a former member of the "Follies," and as a motion picture actress of the first rank, but this is her introduction as an authoress. In collaboration with her director, Robert Leonard, she wrote the story of "Danger—Go Slow." That is a point worth featuring in one of your newspaper stories.

Miss Murray herself has a big following everywhere and we have already suggested that you play up her name in your advertising. Recently she has scored a success in big pictures and your patrons will remember her appearance in "The Bride's Awakening," "Face Value," "Princess Virtue" and "Her Body in Bond." These have all been released as Universal Specials.

This striking twenty-four-sheet will get the attention

She was another recruit from the stage to the screen, her beauty and ability as an actress attracting the attention of film magnates. Her first appearance was with Lasky-Paramount in "To Have and To Hold" and this was followed by "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," "The Dream Girl," "The Plough Girl," "The Big Sister" and "The Primrose Ring." It was after completing these that she went with Universal.

Play up strong the fact that she appears as a boy in the first part of this picture. There are a lot of people who will want to see this winsome little girl in such a role and you will have all of her admirers coming to your house.

IF you have any serial following in your section you will want to use the name of Jack Mulhall. He has one of the principal roles in this picture. His recent appearance in "The Brass Bullet" won many new followers for him. As a matter of fact Mulhall is one of the best known players on the screen. He played leads with Biograph for four years and after that went to Universal where he has been since. Some of the prominent pictures in which he has appeared have been "Love Aflame," "The Terror," "The Great Adventure," "Sirens of the Sea," "High Speed," "Boss of Powderville" and "Madame Spy."

Lon Chaney is another actor that is mighty well known. His screen career has been with Universal for a number of years, and during that time some of the most striking successes in which he has appeared have been "Bondage," "Pay Me," "Broadway Love" and "Anything Once."

Joseph Girard and Lydia Knott also have important roles. There are a large number of extras. The setting may not be called lavish, but they are convincing and especially those in the little village will have a very strong heart appeal.

Seabury Talks on Distributing

Organizer of Film Clearing House and Vice-President of Independent Sales Corporation Tells of New System

WILLIAM M. SEABURY organized the Film Clearing House, and is also vice-president of the recently organized Independent Sales Corporation. As an attorney, Mr. Seabury has had an active experience in the film industry and made a thorough study of the marketing and distributing branches of motion pictures.

In an interview with MOTION PICTURE NEWS Mr. Seabury discusses to some length the innovations proposed by the two above named recently formed organizations. That they are going ahead with their ambitious plans is evidenced by their recent purchase of all the George Kleine exchanges throughout the country.

"In my judgment the most important thing that has happened in the film world in some years is the recent announcement that the Film Clearing House is open for business," said Mr. Seabury.

"The establishment of the Clearing House is the first important step toward the reconstruction of the industry which must inevitably take place.

"It is the first step toward economy in distribution.

"It is one of the greatest opportunities to cut down useless expense, extravagance and waste.

"It is a means of vital importance to the industry, by which it can discharge its increasing obligations and burdens and live.

"Without it some are confronted with the painful alternatives of going out of business because they cannot pay their present charges; or of going out of business because they cannot survive if they do not pay them. So that on the present basis these unfortunates expire in either event, whether they pay or do not pay.

"While I was trying to establish the Clearing House all sorts of doubts were expressed as to its practicability. Some feared one competitor would be favored over another if several competitors distributed through the same medium—forgetting apparently that the work of distribution involves only the physical handling of film and does not involve the sale of competing product.

"If the physical service rendered is not efficient it can be terminated, but there are no competitive features involved in the Clearing House plan of operation.

"There is no more reason why one producer should refuse to distribute through the Clearing House because his competitor distributes his product through it than there is sense or reason in one merchant refusing to use a certain express company or railroad because one of his competitors uses the same means of transportation.

"Practical business men have no time to waste in unfair discrimination against their own customers.

"No business which tolerates discrimination or any unfair or dishonest practice can make a lasting success today.

"The cheap little crook may snatch a hasty profit and escape, but he cannot survive for any length of time.

"All such ideas will soon be shown to be unsound, and the real benefits of the opportunity afforded to combine distribution without sacrificing individuality or identity will be strongly felt.

"The Clearing House is an invitation to the industry to curtail extravagance and waste.

"It is an offer to assume the liabilities incident to the physical handling of films.

"Some day it will dawn on some of the concerns which are still maintaining physical distribution facilities all over the country at a loss that they could save about 10 per cent on their gross by availing themselves of the facilities afforded by the Clearing House. It is popularly rumored that 10 per cent or less to some of these concerns is the difference between a profit and a loss—the difference between success and failure, and ultimately the difference between existence and bankruptcy.

"It is idle and harmful to attempt to conceal the situation by false publicity.

"Several concerns have already crumbled under the strain, each announcing failure as a new form of success, yet only the very ignorant are deceived. No one else has the slightest difficulty in discerning failure, even when heralded as an achievement of remarkable success.

"Readjustments are bound to come, and the sooner they are undertaken the better it will be for every branch of the industry.

"The formation of an independent sales corporation is the natural outgrowth of the establishment of the Film Clearing House, although the two concerns are entirely separate and have no more to do with each other than any two corporations, one of which contracts to render the other a mechanical service.

"The Clearing House supplies the physical facilities for the distribution of films.

"The Sales Corporation maintains an extensive sales force to market the product of its patrons using the facilities afforded by the Clearing House for distribution.

"In this way the selling function is separated from the mechanics of distribution.

"Each company attends to its own business and develops it to the highest degree of efficiency.

"Each company bears its own expenses and stands on its own feet.

"It is only a question of time when benefits of centralized distribution open to all those who have meritorious product will be appreciated.

"The volume of desirable product which is bound to go through the Clearing House will soon enable it to distribute more cheaply than concerns which cannot command an equal amount of similar product.

"The existence of an independent sales force and clearing house mean that independent producers of meritorious product at last have an approach to the market which will yield them the returns to which they are entitled.

"They will no longer be obliged to sacrifice their pictures to the state rights buyer. Nor will they be obliged to have their pictures sold in competition with others sold by the same sales force.

"The existence of the Clearing House makes it possible for groups of independent producers having non-competitive pictures to organize their own special sales force and arrange for distribution through the Clearing House.

"For example, one independent producer who has no sales force or means of distribution cannot afford to establish or maintain either, and he must have both.

"But several producers, one of whom produces Western dramas, another comedies, another scenics, another serials, can afford to maintain their own sales force and distribute through the Clearing House.

"It is easy to predict that in a short time the independent producers will get together and organize more than one independent sales force, each using the Clearing House as its medium of distribution.

"This has not been possible heretofore.

"There has been no national organization engaged exclusively in the physical distribution of films.

"Any concern which had such facilities and offered to accept product generally, with or without the use of its sales force, was engaged in renting its own product in direct competition with the product they offered to distribute physically.

"The Independent Sales force has a great future before it, and, as I have said, I predict that time will produce not one but many such organizations."

Harry Rapf Releases "Sins of the Children"

"The Sins of the Children" recently made, but held up through the influenza ban, and now released is described as a startling photoplay. It was made from one of Cosmo Hamilton's novels.

Those who have seen the production claim that it will be a box-office attraction, as it is a story portraying human emotions carrying in detail the same vein that the Cosmo Hamilton books are known for.

The cast includes Alma Hanlon Stuart Holmes and Mahlin Hamilton. The settings and productions are said to be of high standards.

Emmett Dalton, Who Contributes a New Production to the State Rights Market

"Beyond the Law" Has Premiere Showing

The premiere showing of "Beyond the Law" was held at the Wurlitzer Fine Arts and Concert Hall, November 26.

A large gathering composed of film men well-known in the industry, including state rights buyers, foreign buyers, film executives of various producing and distributing organizations, attended the initial screening of Emmett Dalton's motion picture version of his original story which appeared in serial form in the Wide World Magazine from May to September, 1918.

The picture which was played to the accompaniment of appropriate music left nothing to be desired after it had been shown, it is reported.

Attractive Paper Planned for Bert Hall Film

Unusually attractive one, three and six sheets and twenty-four sheet stands are said to have been issued for Carle E. Carlton's "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieut. Bert Hall, the American ace, and Edith Day.

The designs by Asa Cassidy are said to be the composite results of a recent contest in which fifty members of the American Society of Illustrators at 215 West 57th street competed.

"Stars of Glory" will Honor Pershing

Leonce Perret, the French Film Director, is so grateful to General John Pershing for having brought Victory and Peace to France, that he has decided to dedicate "Stars of Glory" to America's greatest General.

He has just sent a cablegram to General Pershing, notifying him.

Independent Sales Corp. Announces Officers

The list of names announced of officers and directors of the newly-formed Independent Sales Corporation reveals men of large affairs in the industrial and banking world as well as those closely allied with the film industry.

Henry F. Mollenhauer, who, as a director and officer of a number of large refineries, is said to be a power in the sugar industry, appears as one of the directors; G. Trowbridge Hollister of Hollister and Barnes, bankers and brokers, is another, while Frank G. Hall and William M. Seabury, both prominent for many years in motion picture activities, are officers of the company.

While the operations of the new corporation are definitely limited to the maintaining of a large force of film salesmen throughout the country for the sole purpose of booking pictures and it will not be concerned in the producing of pictures or in the physical distribution of productions, an important part of its functions is the financing of producers in so far as a cash advance on finished negatives is concerned and also the furnishing of prints and advertising.

This places the Independent Sales Corporation in a position where it can close with producers, or groups of producers, immediately to take full charge of the advertising and marketing of their pictures while at the same time sharing with them the burden of the cost of production.

S. J. Kaufman Author of "Wanted for Murder"

S. Jay Kaufman, known as one of the critics of motion pictures, has now written a picture himself. It is called "Wanted for Murder," just completed by Harry Rapf.

Mr. Kaufman is the author of several one-act plays, one of which, "Kisses," is known as a vaudeville classic. His column "Round the Town," appears in the New York Evening Globe.

Big Demand Claimed by United

Recent Trade Showings in Principal Cities Show That United Pictures Are in Demand, Says Berst

Jack Levy, who has joined United Picture Theatres, Inc., as a District Manager

THE excellent reports among exhibitors throughout the country which followed upon the recent trade showings of "The Light of Western Stars" in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh and other centers, together with the publicity campaign which is being energetically pursued by United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., in the promulgation of its superpictures, have already produced a remarkable and widespread demand for that Dustin Farnum feature together with active enquiry for United's impending releases which include "Adele" with Kitty Gordon, "A Man in the Open," another Dustin Farnum supervehicle and the as yet unnamed Florence Reed first United picture, according to President Berst.

This demand is not limited to the United States, for a report from the office of David P. Howells, the sole foreign distributor of United product, states that Mr. Howells has closed with the Cinematographica Sud-Americana, of Sariento 1755, Buenos Aires, for the entire output of United Picture Theatres of America for the Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile.

The contract for these foreign rights was signed through Mr. Jose Donati, representative for those countries in New York. The Cinematigrafica Sud-Americana is declared to be one of the oldest established, largest, and wealthiest concerns dealing in motion picture films in South America.

Preparatory to the arrival of United pictures in South America a comprehensive plan of press and other advertising is being carried out through Mr. Donati's activity in connection with the exhibitors in those countries.

Commenting on a recent statement by J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres, Inc., anent the advantages of screen plays made from popular published works of fiction and the ready-made public that awaits such offerings, a communication received from Messrs. Grosset and Dunlap, the publishers, encloses copy of a letter received from Carl H. Milai, assistant to the director, American Library Association Headquarters at the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.

The letter deals specifically with the popularity of the Zane Grey books from which a number of screen superfeatures have been made, including "The Light of Western Stars," and bears out the arguments in favor of screen versions from book sources.

"We simply cannot get enough of Zane Grey books," the Washington communication reads. "The demand comes not only from the hospital libraries, but also from all large U. S. camps and from branches and stations of the Y. M. C. A. and K. C. huts, and posts, from battleships and other vessels and from the men overseas."

A questionnaire sent out by the Chicago Daily News to all soldier camps in the United States, asking the librarians whose books were most called for, whose writings the troops asked for most, revealed the fact that Zane Grey's works headed the list.

"Romance of the Air" Gets Month in Boston

"A ROMANCE OF THE AIR," the seven-reel production featuring Lieutenant Bert Hall, the American ace and member of the original Lafayette Escadrille, and Edith Day, the prima donna of the Broadway musical comedy success, "Going Up," will open at the Tremont Temple theatre, Boston, on December 30, for a four weeks' run at that house.

On the strength of the large receipts to which this picture is said to have played at the Rivoli theatre in New York, the management of the Tremont Temple felt justified in booking this production for at least a month's run.

Carle E. Carlton, president of Crest Pictures, which organization is presenting and releasing "A Romance of the Air," will now arrange for this love story of the clouds to be shown in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Chicago, either simultaneously with or following the Boston engagement.

Boston is said to be particularly anxious to have this picture because of the reported popularity there of Edith May, who has been playing the leading role at the Colonial theatre, in the Cohan & Harris musical farce, "Going Up," where she has duplicated her success of her run at the Liberty theatre in New York all last season.

When "A Romance of the Air" is shown at Chicago, Miss Day will be appearing there in person in this same musical comedy, her Boston engagement coming to an end the latter part of December.

During the entire run of "A Romance of the Air" at the Tremont Temple theatre, Lieutenant Bert Hall will make a personal appearance.

"Platonic Love" to be Screened by United

THE pronounced activity which for some time past has marked the progress of United stars and has resulted in the acquisition of "The Light of Western Stars" and the production of "A Man in the Open," now nearing completion with Dustin Farnum; "Adele," with Kitty Gordon, and the forthcoming offering in which Florence Reed is to be seen under the banner of United, is further exemplified by the announcement just made by J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

He states that his organization has now completed arrangements for the screen production of "Platonic Love," to be picturized from the play by Captain Leslie T. Peacocks.

"Platonic Love" will be the starring vehicle for Kitty Gordon to follow the successor to "Adele," which last has just been completed at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, where work will shortly be started upon the recently acquired play.

President Berst makes also another announcement in connection with the United star Dustin Farnum. "The Light of Western Stars" and "A Man in the Open" are to be followed by "Square-Shootin' Dan" (temporary title) as that star's third United supervehicle, arrangements for which have been completed. Director Ernest C. Warde has already started work on this production at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, following the selection of a cast in support of Dustin Farnum.

Final Episode of Houdini Serial Completed

WITH the taking of the final scenes of the last episode, B. A. Rolfe, for the Octagon Films, Inc., yesterday completed at its Yonkers Studio the picturization of the fifteen episode serial, "The Master Mystery," in which Houdini, the handcuff king, makes his starring debut on the screen.

That the producers are heaving sighs of relief now that the serial has been completed can be readily understood when it is made known that ever since work was begun on the picture four months ago the number of injuries reported as sustained by star and members of his supporting cast has made studio reports resemble a casualty list from overseas after a local operation.

"The Master Mystery" is described as a serial replete with drama, mystery and thrills. In his extreme desire to make each of the feats he performs of greater interest than anything he had done before, it is said that Houdini devised for this serial many new stunts of a particularly dangerous nature—so dangerous in fact, that in the performance of one of them he suffered a broken wrist.

Houdini has been doing hazardous stunts for years but this is said to have been the first time in his long record that any feat he attempted has proved so difficult in its accomplishment that he sustained injury.

Houdini Serial Novelized for Exhibitors

As a means of creating interest among theatre-goers and to aid exhibitors in their exploitation campaigns, arrangements have been made whereby the story of the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., will appear in book form.

The novelization of the serial has been prepared by Arthur B. Reeve, one of the authors of "The Master Mystery," and a fiction writer known for his Craig Kennedy stories, and John W. Grey, one of the collaborators in writing the serial.

The book, which is to be published by Grossett and Dunlap, will appear shortly, and will be illustrated with reproductions of scenes from the fifteen episodes of the film.

"Flying for Uncle Sam" Series by Gaumont

The second instalment of the series of pictures showing the making of a United States aviator from the time he enters the service until he is graduated a finished flyer, which the Gaumont Company made at the request of the Government, appears in No. 36 of the Gaumont News, which was released Tuesday, November 26.

This series of thrilling scenes was made under the personal supervision of Pell Mitchell, editor of the Gaumont News and Graphic, who spent nearly two months with a corps of his most experienced cameramen at the various flying fields in the Southwest. His painstaking labor has resulted in what is said to be a most enlightening as well as thrilling motion picture of the conquest of the air.

The first instalment showed the groundwork necessary to put the cadet in perfect physical trim. This instalment shows how the student is instructed as to the mechanics of the airplane and how the propellers, etc., are made and balanced. Other instalments which will appear weekly will cover every detail of this newest phase of warfare.

John W. Grey Enters Writing Field

John W. Grey, whose advertising copy for the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., created favorable comment, has forsaken the advertising field and will hereafter devote all of his time to writing.

He has just formed an affiliation with Arthur B. Reeve, the novelist, and the two, as collaborators, will write serials for production by manufacturers.

For many years Mr. Grey has been writing for the screen, contributing starring vehicles for various stars.

not long ago sent out rules governing the distribution of newspapers and periodicals, failure to observe which meant a possibility of the offender not getting a supply of print paper.

These restrictions have now been withdrawn insofar as they apply to periodicals, but in the withdrawal periodicals are strongly urged to live up to a number of the rules.

One recommendation is in effect, that QUANTITY guarantees be disregarded in advertising contracts.

It has been the policy of Motion Picture News always to emphasize quality.

In our judgment the essential is to cover the "live" theatre men—those who read and think—being sure that this is done first, and counting afterwards how many there are.

Soap, Water and a Broom

I WAS much interested to hear one of the leading supply dealers of the country say that ever since he had been in business he had been preaching cleanliness to the smaller theatre owners. He told of a campaign by letter and circular which he had once instituted but except for scattering cases it had done but little good. It was just a case of Soap, Water and a Broom but, as most small houses are under-illuminated anyway, what difference did dirt make? It could not be seen.

Contrast or rather compare with this the statement by a minister who told me that he was planning to use pictures in his church. He said that there were two small theatres, so called, in his town but that they were dark, untidy places where the people did not like to go, though they did like motion pictures. He was therefore going to put them in his Sunday School room for those who wanted to enjoy them under sanitary conditions. He finally admitted he liked them himself, but as he liked his health better, he was willing to forego the theatres in order that he might keep well.

This is no unusual happening. It is going on every day in a great many towns and will continue unless cleanliness is more universally practiced in the smaller houses. Churches, schools, Y. M. C. A.'s, and other gathering places are installing projection machines in answer to a demand from their members who want to see motion pictures projected in a clean, well kept place where they can go without getting filled with dust and dirt.

This is not so in every town or city in our land, but is true in enough places to cause us to wonder why the theatre owner or those working with him do not awaken to the realization that it is their own fault that an opposition is developing: FIRST, because they do not co-operate with those in charge of the churches, schools and other places. The theatre men should work with them, learn of the demands of the people and see that the pictures which are wanted are supplied and that the people are notified of the fact—in other words co-operate. SECOND, because there is not enough of the "elbow grease" used in the theatres. We go in and smell some vile, cheap perfume scattered about but how often do we smell the good old soap and see signs of the mop on the floor?

In how many small houses in the country do we find the vacuum cleaner working between shows to carry away the dust? How often a house would have been successful which in reality failed because they could not advertise the fact that it was cleaned with a vacuum cleaner once a day and therefore, was free from dust and therefore practically free from germs.

Advertising to the public by the theatre men in any town is necessary in making a big success. It is the means of making money or losing it though some theatres make expenses in spite of themselves. We see a house of six hundred seats advertising cleanliness, good ventilation, good music, service, comfort, good clean pictures, making a success and a reputation and in the next block a house of the same size with really better possibilities absolutely going to rot for want of patronage. This is because of a short sighted manager without brains enough to see the folly of walking ten blocks and back for his service and wasting an hour kicking with the manager of the exchange over a difference of fifty cents on some rental charge when he should have been in his theatre seeing that it was cleaned, washed, scrubbed, perhaps painted, at least put in order so that a self-respecting public would want to go there.

A certain priest was talking this over with me not long ago. He said he could not stand the condition of the houses in his part of town, so he decided he would teach the theatre men a lesson. He bought a projctor and screen for his church. He said the exchange men and theatre owners were not much pleased with his new resolution, but after some persuasion he brought the exchanges around so that he was able to have a show regularly. He said the theatres were not making money anyway, so that he did not feel guilty of putting them out of business. From the very start his audiences increased beyond belief. Finally one of the theatre owners came to him and said that certain people had approached him and asked to buy an interest in his house, as the community was becoming picture wild. This he had allowed one man to do.

This fellow at once began to turn things upside down. The first thing he did was to shut the house and hire a staff of painters. He put in a new lighting system, installed a new ventilation system, bought an electrically operated vacuum cleaner and put in good music. He went to his projectionist and supplied his needs so that the entire place was in the very best possible shape. He then came to the priest and told him what he had done.

The priest congratulated him upon his business sense and at once said he would co-operate with him. He took it upon himself to tell his parishioners, after being sure of the class of pictures to be seen, of the renovated theatre and advised those who wished good amusement in a clean place to go to this house. He himself cut his church shows to once a week and when he stopped for the summer he turned the remaining episodes of a serial he was running over to the theatre man to finish.

This was co-operation, and showed business judgment, for combined with his advertising the house went over as nothing else could possibly have put it over and today the church and this theatre are working together in every possible way. If more house managers would realize that pictures in the churches, schools and other places are not run for spite, nine out of ten times, but merely because of a lack of Soap, Water and a Broom in the theatre, they would be better off.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Conducted by Alfred S. Cory

Cleveland from the Projection Viewpoint

AFTER proceeding "back to town" from the Hertner factory, we next called on our friend, Mr. H. H. Cudmore, at the offices of the Argus Enterprises, 815-823 Prospect avenue. Mr. Cudmore started out, a little over a year ago, with the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, exploiting the now well-known Sheck Adaptor, but his genius for organization, and his desire for expansion, have found outlet in the newly formed Argus Enterprises, which embrace the following: Argus Lamp and Appliance Company; Argus Theatre Supply Division; Argus Motion Picture Company, manufacturers and distributors of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Screen Magazine; Ohio distributors for the Educational Film Corporation of America; manufacturers of commercial and industrial films, and sales agents for De Vry portable projectors for Ohio, Buffalo, Washington, California and other territories.

In spite of the increasing scope of Mr. Cudmore's activities, the Sheck Adaptor still remains the apple of his eye, and he seized the opportunity to show us the latest improved form of this compact attachment for incandescent projection. As a result of careful re-designing, the Sheck Adaptor has been so much simplified and improved that it can be readily applied to any standard motion picture projector in two ways, viz., it may be installed in place of the customary carbon-arc lamphouse, or it may be attached to the front of the carbon-arc lamphouse, thus leaving both types of light source available to the projectionist.

To facilitate the correct installation and adjustment of the Sheck Adaptor, even by mechanics or projectionists in remote localities, to whom the device is an entire novelty, Mr. Cudmore has had a large cardboard folder of instructions prepared, which is interesting enough to deserve notice. This instruction folder contains a series of fifty large half-tone and line illustrations showing all of the parts of the Sheck Adaptor; how to attach the device to the various types of standard projectors; how to properly connect up the Adaptor and its complementary electrical devices; how to align the optical system and how to focus the light-source and the mirror. This elaborate instruction folder is, moreover, issued in two editions; one giving directions for the installation of the Sheck Adaptor in place of the customary lamphouse, and the other showing how the device is to be attached to the front of existing lamphouses.

The Adaptor itself has been so simplified that only three adjustments require to be made to put the light source in the best operating position. One adjustment moves the incandescent lamp backward and forward for focusing; another adjustment moves the mirror for focusing, and a third moves the lamp sidewise for purposes of alignment. These adjustments being made, their permanency is assured by locking the moving parts with large convenient thumb-screws. The base supporting the incandescent lamp in the Sheck Adaptor is, in addition, made of insulation material, and any part inside the lamphouse may be handled while the current is on without subjecting the projectionist to a shock.

The next item of interest to projectionists shown us by Mr. Cudmore was the Argus "Crystal Bead" Screen, a new projection surface which was sufficiently demonstrated to us in the projection room of Argus Enterprises, to allow of our here making a brief report on the same for our readers. We say "new" advisedly in announcing the "Crystal Bead" screen, for it has not been previously manufactured on a commercial scale, but we saw a surface of this type at least five years ago, and this original sample is, indeed, still in existence in New York City.

The "Crystal Bead" screen surface consists of small glistening particles of some mineral substance which may be likened to coarse sand, which are thickly strewn over a canvas or other suitable cloth support, and held in place by glue or cement. As these particles of glistening sand are insoluble in water, the Crystal Bead screen may be washed, should occasion require, without detriment to its high reflecting powers, but a possible cause of deterioration of the Crystal Bead screen surface is the gradual dropping off of the small grains or pebbles, which would, in time, deprive the surface of its high reflecting properties. This was a cardinal fault with the earliest screen surfaces of this type, and whether this difficulty has been surmounted in the Argus screen can only be ascertained after extended study of these surfaces under theatre conditions.

From the standpoint of projected results, however, the Crystal Bead screen surface makes a most creditable showing. It is highly reflecting, giving bright, clear pictures, with moderate amperage, and what is also a desirable feature in a highly reflecting screen, there is much less "fadeaway" effect on the Crystal Bead screen than on most other reflecting surfaces now on the market, when the screen picture is viewed at an acute angle. This was demonstrated by Mr. Cudmore in a fair test, conducted in the Argus projection room, where various types of screens were mounted (one behind the other) on hinges attached to a side wall of the room. The various types of screen surface could therefore be studied, one after the other, just like turning the pages of a book, and each screen surface could be inclined at any desired angle to the light rays from the projection machine.

On the first day of the Motion Picture Engineers' meeting at Cleveland, it developed that New York, and the other large movie centers, had nothing on Cleveland when it came to newspaper and motion picture enterprise and intelligence, for at the close of their first session the Engineers were marched before a movie camera in front of their hotel, and their actions and countenances recorded for presentation to Clevelandites via the Cleveland Plain Dealer Screen Magazine, a weekly release which is shown in most every theatre in Cleveland.

It is noted above that the "Screen Magazine" is produced and distributed by the Argus Enterprises, so, while on their premises, we prevailed upon Mr. Cudmore to show us the laboratory where this weekly release is printed and developed. The laboratory of the Argus Motion Picture Company is located in the basement of the building containing the Argus offices, and comprises a lantern-slide making department in addition to the arrangements for processing film.

The first thing to attract our attention in the Argus film laboratory was the title-making device, which showed considerable ingenuity in construction. With this device the title cards were laid horizontally and photographed from above by a camera arranged with the lens pointing downward. This camera, an Ernemann A, was mounted to a vertical steel girder, along which it could be moved upward and downward, to secure the proper degree of magnification in the photographed images, and the camera was driven by a motor connecting with the single-picture or trick spindle. A large dial mounted at the front of the title-making apparatus recorded the number of feet, and the number of images, photographed at any time.

To illuminate the title-cards, or copy to be photographed, an ingenious lamp has been contrived by the Argus laboratory. This is a Cooper-Hewitt mercury-vapor tube of circular or ring form, which was made from a straight Cooper-Hewitt tube, and is suspended above the title-cards at just the right height to illuminate them intensely and evenly. Titles made with this arrangement appeared very uniform upon the screen.

In the printing-room of the laboratory were a Williamson and a Prevost printer, the former being equipped with rheostatic controls for light intensities and operating speed. Adjoining the printing room was the dark-room for film development, fixing and washing, and right next to this the drying-room. The drying-room contains two motor driven drums, and to promote the circulation of air, boards have been attached to the interior supports of the drying drums, which, upon the rotation of the drums, act as fans and stir up a lively breeze.

Night had fallen by the time we had completed our "cellar to garret" inspection of the Argus premises, but our friendly guide, Mr. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, still remained faithful to his duties, and after leaving Mr. Cudmore's hospitality we proceeded a short distance down the street to the Standard theatre at East Eighth street and Prospect avenue, where we found Mr. Joseph Grossman, the owner and manager, right on the job.

Upon entering the long lobby of the Standard theatre, one is greeted by attractive pictures, especially painted, showing scenes of interest in the current attraction, and it can be said that the Standard's advertising matter is in every way equal to the finest theatrical displays seen on Broadway.

The operating room of the Standard theatre, and the office of the management, are located on the second floor, where we found Mr. Grossman at the point of vantage from which the theatre's operation is directed. The model operating room of the Standard theatre was described and illustrated in detail in a recent issue of the NEWS, and need not therefore be further considered here, but in selecting the location of the manager's office Mr. Grossman exercised all the sagacity which characterizes the selection by a general of the viewpoint from which he witnesses an important military operation.

In short, the managerial office of the Standard theatre is located midway between the ticket-box and the screen, and within clear view of both, so, as Mr. Grossman says, looking out upon the lobby, "I can see my day's business in this direction," and, looking in toward the screen, "my bread and butter in that direction." It is the realization by the management of the Standard, that the picture on the screen is what the exhibitor is selling, that has made the house such an unqualified success, and Mr. Grossman sees to it that his projectionists have all the necessary equipment and supplies to maintain high-class projection. A "Crystal Bead" screen is used at the Standard theatre, and a sharp, brilliant picture is projected thereon, correct tempo being also observed in screening the pictures.

Much as we would have liked to witness a complete performance at the Standard theatre, we had already promised Mr. Fred E. Albinger, one of Cleveland's leading projectionists, that we would have a look at the "screen goods" which he is putting over at the Stork theatre, a recently opened house located at 83rd street and Lorain avenue. A short car ride brought us to the Stork theatre at about eight o'clock in the evening, where we found Mr. Albinger's show in progress.

At the Stork theatre the seats are all on the main floor, while the operating room is on the second floor—being reached from the lobby by a short stairway. The house is a long one, in excess of 100 feet, consequently the projectors are in an approximately straight line with the screen, and the picture perfectly rectangular and free from distortion.

Mr. Albinger, the projectionist, uses two Power 6 B projectors, and derives his current from two Hallberg A. C. to D. C. motor-generators, a special switchboard being installed which carries the volt—and ammeters and controlling devices for these generators. Half-size objectives are used, as they are of long focal length, and Mr. Albinger fairly "burns up the screen" when he shoots about 65 amperes through the average film which is projected.

The operating room at the Standard theatre was formerly presided over by Mr. Albinger, and the care and cleanliness which prevail there (see article on Standard operating room in NEWS of September 14th) are likewise to be noted in the operating room of the Stork theatre. Mr. Albinger keeps his lenses bright and sparkling, his machines well cleaned, and the entire room shipshape, and he is provided with a wash-bowl and other accessories, which permit him, even while working, to present an appearance in keeping with the title "projectionist." The projection equipment at the Stock theatre occupies but a small fraction of the operating-room which is spacious and therefore conducive to health and comfort for the occupant. In common with numerous other Cleveland projectionists Mr. Albinger believes in fitting the revolving shutters of his projectors to the requirements of the theatre where they are to be used, and we noted that he used special shutters, cut from black cardboard, on the machines at the Stork theatre. The object of the special shutters is, of course, to reduce or to eliminate flicker, which is possible by making the shutter blades wide enough, at the expense of considerable wasted light.

We "called it a day" after paying all the visits described in the preceding, but bright and early on the following morning we set out alone for Nela Park, to visit and be shown around by our friends R. P. Burrows and J. T. Caldwell of the Engineering Department of the National Lamp Works, and to pay our respects to Mr. S. E. Doane, Chief Engineer, who, by the way, is a sterling advocate of rational standardization.

The first thing we looked at was a wonderfully complete collection of incandescent electric lamps, ranging from the earliest types up to the latest, high-power Mazda constructions. It has undoubtedly taken considerable time and trouble to bring this remarkable collection of incandescent lamps together, and we regretted not having the time to study them at leisure. A most eloquent testimonial to the efforts of the National Elecric Lamp Associations' work along the line of standardization is to be found in a large wall cabinet at one end of the room containing the lamp collection. Here are displayed several hundred lamp bases, each of different type, all of which were in promiscuous use in the United States up to a few years ago. In the center of this heterogeneous collection of lamp bases are shown the six bases which have been standardized by the N. E. L. A., and are now used exclusively in this country. This, surely, is sane and effective standardization which, according to Mr. Doane, consists in the selection by competent engineers of what is the best in a given line, and then adopting it as the standard.

It is as well to mention here that the primary function of the tremendous organization at Nela Park is the investigation of incandescent lamps, illumination, and lighting devices, and the testing of the product of manufacturers of lamps under the G. E. patents.

Photometry naturally plays an important part in this work, and a huge amount of photometrical work is done in the various sections of the testing laboratories at Nela Park. There, for instance, is located the largest photometer for measuring spherical candle-power, and countless others, ranging from Ulbricht spheres of fifteen feet and upward in diameter down to the smallest portable and bench photometers.

Our good friend Robert P. Burrows, of the Engineering Department, took us down into the basement and showed us the room and appliances where all of his practical experiments and tests on motion picture projection with Mazda lamp light sources have been made. Mr. Burrows uses an optical bench, instead of a cine projector, which allows unlimited flexibility of adjustment, and permits many experiments to be carried out which could not be undertaken with a projection machine. The light-source, lenses, apertures, etc., used in his experimental work, are attached to suitable supports which are adjustable up, down and sidewise for purposes of alignment. These supports can, of course, be slid along the bench, allowing any desired experimental conditions to be realized. The recent standardization of a Mazda light-source for motion picture work was largely based on data secured by Mr. Burrows with this apparatus, and especially to be noticed is the work carried out in order to determine the most suitable area for the filament in this class of lamps. In this work a graduated, adjustable aperture was used in front of the light-source, and measurements made using a considerable series of different source areas. This adjustable aperture is only one of the many useful devices and attachments which Mr. Burrows has at his command for experimental work.

The beam from the optical system mounted on the bench is projected on a screen at the further end of the room, and screen readings are taken with a Weber photometer, which is a highly precise portable instrument. Readings are taken at 16 points on the screen, the surface used being clean white blotting-paper. Each projection lamp tested in this department has its history, performance and characteristics minutely recorded on a special report blank, which, when completely filled out, furnishes a useful and valuable record of the behavior of a given lamp under a given set of conditions.

It was an item of good fortune that we were able to spend a short time in the company of Mr. S. E. Doane while at Nela Park, because after hearing his remarks at the Motion Picture Engineers' dinner, a few evenings previous, we felt that we would like to hear more about standardization from his viewpoint. Following our examination of Mr. Burrow's experimental arrangements, we therefore sought out Chief Engineer Doane, who gave us a vivid outline, supported by documentary evidence, of the enormous amount of deliberation, debate and investigation involved in keeping pace with the progress and requirements of the thousands of different conditions under which incandescent lamps are used, and the judgment which has to be exercised in formulating wise, practical standards. While the requirements of the use to which a given type of lamp is to be put have to be carefully ascertained, partly by securing information from the users of the lamps, Mr. Doane pointed out that in the final act of standardizing a unit it is the manufacturers (represented by the N. E. L. A.) alone who have the necessary complete knowledge to carry this through intelligently; consequently no outsider has any voice or influence in the adoption of a standard by the National Electric Lamp Association.

We had been promised a look into the Nela Research Laboratory, whither we proceeded upon the conclusion of our interview with Mr. Doane. The Research Laboratory is a purely scientific institution, under the directorship of Dr. Edward P. Hyde, whom we were fortunate in meeting and engaging in brief conversation. The Research Laboratory occupies a separate building, and investigations are there carried out in the fields of physics, physiology, psychology and applied science. The work of the institution becomes known to the scientific world through the medium of papers, prepared by the investigators, and published in the leading scientific and technical journals. To do an institution of this sort adequate descriptive justice would require a separate article, longer than the present one, so we must refrain from going into details here, as the work of Dr. Hyde's laboratory, however interesting to us personally, has not, at present, a direct bearing on motion picture projection.

The manufacture of incandescent lamps next came in for attention, this work occupying another large building at Nela Park. The wonderful machinery and skillful operators employed in lamp production are items for any visitor to admire. The business of lamp production is, however, so well and entertainingly shown in a motion picture film produced at Nela Park, and shown publicly on many occasions, that we need not attempt to go into detail concerning it here. On the top floor of the manufacturing building is a sight worth seeing, however, this being the department where lamps are tested to ascertain their useful life or burning period.

Large testing racks completely fill this room, and all of the racks are in turn filled with incandescent lamps of all conceivable sizes and shapes, which are being burned to determine their useful life. The special features of the testing arrangements are (1) the lamps are lighted and extinguished after a predetermined time interval by an automatic system controlled by clockwork, each lamp to be tested having an indentifying number and a corresponding report card; (2) each socket on the test racks has an individual transformer, which supplies exactly the voltage at which it is desired to test the lamp; (3) each lamp is tested by burning it under the exact conditions in which it will be normally used; for instance, a Mazda lamp for motion picture work is burned in a regulation lamphouse with spherical mirror and condenser, so that the temperature and radiation conditions are those met with in practice.

The foregoing will give some slight idea of the vigilance which is constantly exercised by modern manufacturers in keeping production and product up to a specified standard, and a visit to Nela Park is an education in the scope and requirements of work of this sort. All visits must end somewhere, however, and following this excursion through the testing department we bade farewell to Messrs. Burrows and Caldwell, and hied ourselves back to the heart of Cleveland, where it remained to look up Mr. Alex. Weiss, another star in the firmament of Cleveland's projectionists.

We found him at the offices of the United Theatre Equipment Company, 714 Huron road, where we also had the pleasure of meeting the U. T. E. Cleveland manager, Mr. Mandelbaum. Another day had practically rolled by, and after feeding the inner man with Mr. Weiss, we took a run out to the theatre at which he officiates as projectionist—the Main theatre, 25th and Scovill streets.

While Mr. Weiss has not the advantage of such a spacious operating room as some of his fellow projectionists, the picture he puts upon the screen will stand comparison with any other

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

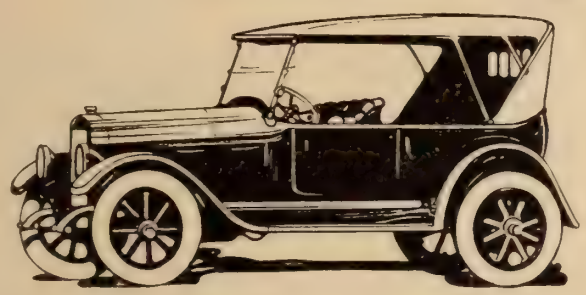
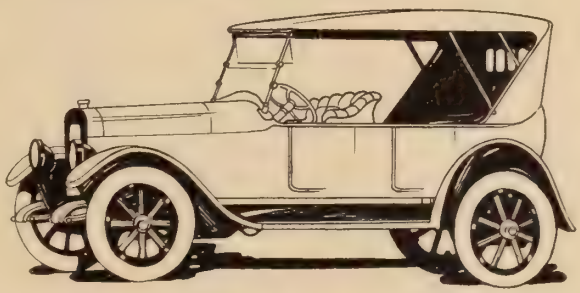
Simplex

Isn't this a fair comparison?





To the man who doesn't know, one automobile looks much like another; and when he sees two cars of the same general style he's likely to put them in the same class as to quality.

But when he becomes acquainted with automobiles he stops judging by general appearance, and goes deeper. In fact, he learns that often the cheaper car is built more for looks, at the expense of quality in vital parts.

In this respect it is fair to compare Projectors with automobiles and to point out how unwise it is to say "Oh, a Projector is a Projector; they're all about alike."

Nothing of the kind. They must of necessity resemble each other in general appearance, the same as automobiles; but in the VITAL PARTS, that's where the big difference lies.

It is the quality of these vital parts that determines the performance of any Machine, and not the finish. A die-cast gear is a soft-metal gear no matter how heavily you nickel-plate it; and a cut cast-iron or steel gear with a decent machine finish will outlast a number of them.

That's the kind of stuff the Simplex is made of; and that's why its projection is not only perfect when the Machine is new, but PERMANENTLY so.

The screen doesn't show how the Projector looks, but how it is built

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive Motion Picture Film

PART II—TONING

TONE C

Tone C—Red Brown (Uranium)

Positive Employed—Medium.

The toning formula employed and the instructions to be followed are the same as for Tone B (see last week's issue), the time of toning being about 5 minutes at 65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

TONE D

Tone D—Brown (Uranium)

Positive Employed—Normal.

The toning formula employed and the instructions to be followed are the same as for Tone B, the time of toning being about 3 minutes at 65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

TONE E

Tone E—Sepia (Uranium and Iron)

This particular tone is obtained by suitable mixture of red and blue toning solutions. By varying the proportions of these baths, tones varying from red to sepia may be obtained.

The following is only one of the many tones produced by this method. Increase in the proportion of the iron bath makes the tone colder, and vice versa.

Positive Employed—Medium.

Immerse the well washed film in Solution for tone B (red brown), 5 vols.

Solution for tone H (blue), 1 vol.

Time of Toning 3 to 4 minutes at 65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

The instructions regarding method of procedure, life of bath, etc., are exactly the same as for tone B.

TONE F

Tone F (Sulphide)

Positive Employed ——

With a thin positive a warm brown tone is obtained, while with denser film the effect is that of a blue-black tone.

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
A. Potassium Ferricyanide	8 lbs. 5 ozs.	4000 grams
Potassium Bromide	2 lbs. 2 ozs.	1000 grams
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters
B. Sodium Sulphide (crystal)	2 lbs. 2 ozs.	1000 grams
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

A trace of iron in the sodium sulphide will do no harm providing the solution is boiled and the precipitated iron sulphide allowed to settle before use. The well washed positive is thoroughly bleached in A, washed for 5 minutes, and immersed in solution B until the film is thoroughly toned.

Temperature of Toning—65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

Time of Toning—Four to five minutes.

Time of Washing—Ten to fifteen minutes.

Life of Baths.

The toning baths A and B are comparatively stable and will keep until exhausted.

TONE G

Tone G—Olive Green (Iron)

Positive Employed—Thin to medium

The best tones are only obtainable on film developed in an Elon-Hydrochinon developer. Thoroughly bleach the well-washed film in:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
A. Potassiuum Ferricyanide	20 lbs. 12 ozs.	10,000 grams
Ammonia (concentrated .89)	½ gal.	2 liters
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Time of Bleaching—two to five minutes.

After washing for 10 to 15 minutes, tone in the following at 65 degrees to 70 degrees F.:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
B. Ferric (Alum (Ferric ammonium sulphate)	4 lbs. 2 ozs.	2000 grams
Potassium Bromide	2 lbs. 2 ozs.	1000 grams
Hydrochloric Acid (concentrated)	13 ozs.	400 cc.
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Time of Toning—

Toning should be complete in from 3 to 5 minutes.

Time of Washing—Ten to fifteen minutes.

If the highlights are stained blue, or if the image will not completely tone in the shadows, this is due to insufficient washing after bleaching. When bleaching, it is important to examine the film as little as possible, otherwise streaks are liable to be produced due to the action of the air at those parts where the solution drains off the film. It is also important to tone immediately after bleaching and washing.

Bleach A

Providing the solution is screened from the light and kept covered to prevent the undue escape of ammonia, the bath keeps fairly well, but if it shows any signs of weakening, it should be revived by the addition of a further quantity of ammonia equal in amount to that originally used. If so revived at intervals, 50 gallons will bleach 40,000 feet of film before exhaustion.

Solution B.

Fifty gallons of solution B will tone 30,000 feet of film without further addition of acid, when it should be thrown away.

TONE H

Tone H Blue (Iron)

Positive Employed, Thin or Medium, according to result desired.

Tone in the following:

	Aviordupois.	Metric.
Potassium Bichromate	75 Grains	5 grams
Ferric Alum (Ferric ammonium sulphate)	8 ozs. 85 grs.	250 grams
Oxalic Acid	1 lb. 4 ozs.	600 grams
Potassium Ferricyanide	6½ ozs.	200 grams
Ammonium Alum	2 lbs. 2 ozs	1000 grams
Hydrochloric Acid 10%	6½ ozs.	200 cc.
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

The method of compounding this bath is very important. Each of the solid chemicals should be dissolved separately in a small quantity of warm water, the solutions allowed to cool, filtered into the tank strictly in the order given, and the whole diluted to the required volume. If these instructions are followed, the bath will be a pale yellow color, perfectly clear, and will remain so for a considerable period.

Time of Toning—Five to ten minutes at 70 degrees F.

Time of Washing—

Wash for ten to fifteen minutes until the highlights are clear. A very slight, permanent yellow coloration of the clear gelatine will usually occur, but should be only just perceptible, when it will have no effect on projection. If the highlights are stained blue, then either the film was fogged during development or the bath was not compounded correctly. Washing should not be carried out for too long a period, especially with water inclined to be alkaline, because the toned image is soluble in alkali.

Life of Bath——

If the acid is renewed to the extent of the original amount after toning each 5000 feet, the bath is capable of toning 15,000 feet per 50 gallons of solution.

If, even after revival, the tone remains flat, the bath is exhausted and should be thrown away.

After continued use, a slight bluish sludge will collect in the bath, but this is not harmful. Should this form, however, to any appreciable extent, it is due either to incorrect mixing, the action of light, or to contact with metallic surfaces.

TONE I

Tone I—Pale Blue (Iron)

The instructions are as for Tone H with the following modifications:

Positive Employed—Normal

Time of Toning—Two to four minutes according to depth of tone desired.

New Tones

TONE J

Tone J—Red (Dye Tone)

By first toning in Tone A, washing, and then immersing the copper toned film in an acid solution of a basic dye, the dye is mordanted to the toned image, thus modifying the color.

Nature of Positive—Medium

Tone for five to ten minutes in solution as for Tone A, and after washing for ten minutes immerse in the following dye-bath.

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Safranine A (National Aniline and Chemical Co., Inc.)	7 ozs.	200 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	32 ozs.	1000 cc.
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Time of Toning—

Five to ten minutes, according to depth desired.

Temperature of Toning—65 degrees to 70 degrees F.

Time of Washing—

Usually only a slight rinse in water is necessary. If the highlights are stained, the film should be washed for five or ten minutes, or until clear. Stained highlights are caused either by insufficient washing after toning, too strong a dye bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye-bath.

TONE K

Tone K—Orange (Dye Tone)

The instructions are exactly as for Tone J, substituting the following dye-bath.

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Chrysoidin 3R (Nat. An. and Chem. Co., Inc.) or Chrysoidin Y (Extra)	2 ozs. 320 grs.	80 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	32 ozs.	1000 cc.
Water to 50	gals.	200 liters

TONE L

Tone L—Violet (Dye Tone)

The instructions are exactly as for Tone J, substituting the following dye-bath:

	Avoirdupois.	Metric.
Methyl Violet (Nat. An. and Chem. Co., Inc.)	2 ozs. 320 grs.	80 grams
Acetic Acid (Glacial)	32 ozs.	1000 cc.
Water to	50 gals.	200 liters

Intermediate Dye Tones

The depth of the dye tone is determined by the time of immersion both in the copper toning bath and in the dye-bath. Pale tones may therefore be obtained either by giving a short bath in Tone A and fully dyeing, or by toning for a longer time and giving a short immersion in the dye-bath.

By mixing the dye-baths J, K and L in varying proportions, intermediate colors may be obtained just as in tinting.

TONE M

Tone M—Pale Red (Dye Tone)

Positive Employed—Normal

Tone from one to two minutes in Tone A, wash for ten minutes, and then immerse in the following dye-bath.

Dye Solution for Tone J, one volume
Dye Solution for Tone K, one volume

When the desired tone is obtained rinse until the highlights are clear.

Compound Tones

TONE N

Tone N—Copper-Iron-Dye Tone

By first partially toning the black and white film (Medium) in Tone A for three to four minutes at 65 degrees to 70 degrees F., so that the half-tones are completely toned by the shadows only partially toned, washing for ten minutes and then completing the toning process in the blue toning bath H, the residual silver in the shadows is toned blue. In this way a double tone is obtained, the shadows appearing dark blue and the half-tones reddish brown.

By immersing the film toned in this matter in the Chrysoidin dye-bath as given under Tone K, the dye is mordanted to the half-that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

tones, which contain copper ferrocyanide, producing the effect indicated.

Combined Tinting and Toning

In many cases pleasing effects may be obtained by tinting film which has already been toned, the result being that the clear portions or highlights assume the color of the dye, while the shadows and half-tones project a tint intermediate between that of the dye and the toned deposit.

Considerable judgment is necessary, however, in choosing suitable tints to blend with any given tone.

The most successful combination of toning with tinting is in the production of sunset and moonlight effects over water, by first toning blue and then tinting orange, red or yellow.

The following combinations will cover most cases required:

Tones A, B, C, D, E, F, J, K, L. Tints No. 2, 5, 6.

Tones G, H, I. Tint almost any delicate shade.

It is considered unnecessary to illustrate every combination of tone and tint above, therefore only typical examples are given. It must be noted that toned film (except tones A and F) absorbs the dye more quickly than untoned film, and in order to duplicate any given samples, the dye-baths should be diluted accordingly.

Very pleasing effects may also be obtained by locally tinting toned film, the color being applied either by hand with a brush, or by stencilling.

Recent Activities of Ohio Simplex Distributors

THE Dwyer Brothers & Company, 26 West Naghten street, Columbus, O., with a branch office at 631 Walnut street, Cincinnati, O., report several Simplex sales recently made in Ohio and Kentucky.

Among the important ones are the following: George Bleich's Empress theatre, Owensboro, Ky.; Ada Meade theatre, Lexington, Ky.; White Eagle theatre, Toledo, O.; Princess theatre, Roseville, O.; Photoplay theatre, Columbus, O., and Edmon's theatre, Mason, Ohio.

Novelty Slides, Inc., Moves Uptown

AFTER six years on Twenty-third street, Novelty Slides, Inc., have moved their entire establishment to new and larger quarters at 209-211-213 W. Forty-eighth street, known as the Slide Building, situated in the heart of the motion picture and theatrical district.

From a small beginning, this concern has grown rapidly until today they are supplying almost every motion picture theatre in the United States with feature slides, announcement slides, and advertising slides, on glass, brass or mica.

A visit to the new quarters is a pleasant surprise for those who are likely to look upon the slide industry as an insignificant part of the motion picture business. Here is found an efficient organization specializing only in the manufacture and distribution of slides. With facilities second to none in the world, and with a capacity of 10,000 slides daily. Not only are the leading film manufacturers large users of Novelty Slides, but the foremost national advertisers in the country have recognized the value of screen advertising and have become Novelty clients.

With the rapid growth of the film industry, the slide has become one of its most important accessories, and must today be recognized as a very necessary factor.

General Manager Joseph F. Coufel, who has piloted the destinies of the Novelty establishment since its inception ten years ago, is at the helm of this new and larger establishment, and optimistically predicts a big future for it.

Our War Songs of the Past and Present

OVER fifty years have passed since the great Civil War was fought and now that the Blue and Gray have become more united than ever it is interesting to recall some of our old melodies that cheered the boys at the front. The army songs which sprang into existence then, although lacking in many of the requirements of musical composition, enjoyed a wonderful popularity during that period and have been sung over and over again ever since in all English-speaking lands.

It is really to be regretted that the names of the composers of these famous songs and lyrics are forgotten. I dare say that scarcely one of our readers could name offhand such famous men who wrote "Dixie," "John Brown's Body," "Maryland, My Maryland," "Marching Through Georgia," and many others. To enlighten our readers on this subject, I will herewith review some of our most popular war songs which at the time of publication gave little promise of their present popularity.

"Maryland, My Maryland," the most melodious and inspiring of all these songs, was composed by James R. Randall. It took nearly twenty years for the music-loving public to realize the value and the possibilities of this composition. There are many of these songs, such as "John Brown's Body," which was written by Charles Hall, "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," "Battle Cry of Freedom," and "Battle Hymn of the Republic," which were real disappointments to those men who wrote them and only became popular after their deaths.

As an example, I will mention a war song which from a musical standpoint is exceptionally well written and has a wonderful set of lyrics, but nevertheless is not very popular with the masses of today. The name of this song is "Who Will Care for Mother Now," a very inspiring title which could also be applied to the present war, a song which from a standpoint of pathetic sentiment even surpasses or equals the famous song entitled "Break the News to Mother." It is an established fact that this war has been the inspiration of creating more war songs than anything up to the present day.

As Musical Editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and being in constant touch with all music publishers, I can safely say that during the past two years I have been bombarded with an average of ten war songs a day from various publishers. Many of them like the famous subway song have fine lyrics and bad air, many of them fine air and bad lyrics; some of them are forgotten already and some of them will be forgotten, but in my estimation amongst all those songs which have been submitted to me I have found only one which proves to be what those old war songs of fifty years ago have proven to be to the present war, and this one song is "God Save Our President," called the Presidential Hymn, published by H. W. Gray Co. and exclusively handled for the Western Continent by Novello & Co.

This song has a set of wonderfully inspiring and remarkable lyrics and I am not exaggerating when I say that the music is the most fitting accompaniment to any set of lyrics I ever came across. It is a big maestoso movement of about thirty-two bars, splendidly written in such a way to sufficiently prove that the composer did not show only that he was a wonderful musician, but also a real American patriot. The melody is easy and somewhat on the style of our famous national song, "America" ("My Country, 'Tis of Thee"), which gives us certain proof that this song will be extremely popular in the near future, because it is easy in construction and within the reach of every man, woman and child who claims to be able to read, sing or play.

The above statements of this song may appear to some of our readers as if the writer is attempting to advertise something, and to once and for all eliminate such thoughts the song follows completely reproduced on the same page.

I really hope that this Presidential Hymn will not be condemned to the fate of some of our old-time war songs which have been in obscurity for twenty years after they have been written, it taking the public that length of time to realize what they have lost. As an ordinary accompaniment for motion pictures "God Save Our President" is very appropriate, as it is written, as mentioned previously, in a maestoso style tempo, and a clever organist can by embodying various chords make a real hit out of its performance.

I, therefore, suggest that motion picture exhibitors avail themselves of a copy of this song, not for patriotic reasons, but for the sole and only reason that from a musical standpoint they are acquiring a very valuable addition to their libraries. I don't know the price of this song if anybody wishes to purchase it, but I am sure it is worth any amount to me, and would advise all those who are interested in it to write to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for any information desired.

Hun Wedding Marches Scrapped

AMERICA can now boast of her own real live Wedding March, written by no less a famed personage than the Honorable Reginald DeKoven. As the first real American Wedding March, worthy of the name, it is a masterpiece, and with its publication the last obstacle to a 100 per cent American Wedding has been removed.

The New York Herald thought so much of it that it devoted a whole supplement to it which with the present h. c. of p. is going some. The Boston Music Company is the publisher, and the Wedding March is the first Number in their catalog by America's veteran music maker, but not the last.

Let the wedding bells ring!

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Flags of Freedom." John Philip Sousa's latest march hit. This number was the special feature of all Liberty Loan parades, patriotic gatherings, etc. It is a typical "Sousa" march, with the military snap, pep and brilliancy which show Sousa at his very best. Built on the national hymns of the Allied nations. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Square, N. Y.)

2—"To Victory." Two-step by Henry Hadley. Dedicated to the "Mothers of the Defenders of Democracy." Fine, snappy march hit. (Carl Fischer.)

3—"A Birch Canoe and You." By Lee S. Roberts, composer of "Smiles." The dreamiest dreamy waltz ever published. We cannot say too much for this number. It's great. (J. H. Remick & Co., 227 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

4—"I Am Glad I Can Make You Cry." New Shimme Fox Trot. The big dance hit of the year—double number with "Belinda Fox Trot." (J. W. Stern & Co., 103 W. 38th St., N. Y.)

5—"American Festival March." A remarkable patriotic composition, thrilling and inspiring, by Hugo Riesenfeld, celebrated conductor of the Rialto Symphony Orchestra, New York. (J. W. Stern.)

6—"We're Building a Bridge to Berlin." By Bart E. Grady. This is the great song of the Army and Navy Mastersingers. Arranged as a march. (Oliver Ditson Co., 178 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.)

8—"At the Coffee Cooler's Tea. Fox trot. Greatest of all novelty jazz numbers. By Harry De Costa. Get 'em struttin' to it. (Carl Fischer-Witmark Orch. & Band Dept.)

9—"Birds and Butterflies." By Paul Vely. A dainty rubato intermezzo capricioso. A characteristic composition which will admirably lend itself to phrasing, and the more often played, the more charm will be found within its pages. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

11—"You'll Find Old Dixieland in France." Fox trot by Geo. W. Meyer. Here's a brand-new one that is simply a gem. (Feist edition.)

12—"Rondo," from Beethoven's Sonata Pathetique, is also arranged by Irenee Berge, and is thoroughly complete in the form presented. Musicians will, from past experience, know the difficulty composers have in orchestrating a Rondo to be practical for all combinations, as the characteristic tempo usually requires a large body of performers to get satisfactory results. Players who have used this number all maintain that the arranger has shown traits of real genius in his excellent scoring, making it a particularly valuable number in every musician's library. (Belwin, Inc.)

THE BEACON THEATRE—This Theatre was Recently Remodeled and a Large Three-Manual Estey Theatre Organ Installed. Admission Fees Were Doubled, and Instead of Pictures, Vaudeville and Orchestra, the Entertainment Is Confined to First-Run Photoplays and the Organ to Interpret Them

The New Factor in Success

First-class theatres in all parts of the country are beginning to install the Estey Theatre Pipe Organ because its success has been proved.

We will be glad to tell you some theatre near you that has an Estey Organ, so you can hear it and judge for yourself.

The Estey Theatre Organ

is unquestionably the best music for motion picture theatres. Another big thing is that the public talks about it.

Use it for the music that goes with the pictures. Use it for a music program in addition to pictures, as hundreds of theatres do. No matter what kind of entertainment you give, the Estey Organ will make it better and draw more people. It can be built to fit any theatre.

The price will depend on what kind of an organ you require and can use best. Without cost we will send an expert to look at your theatre.

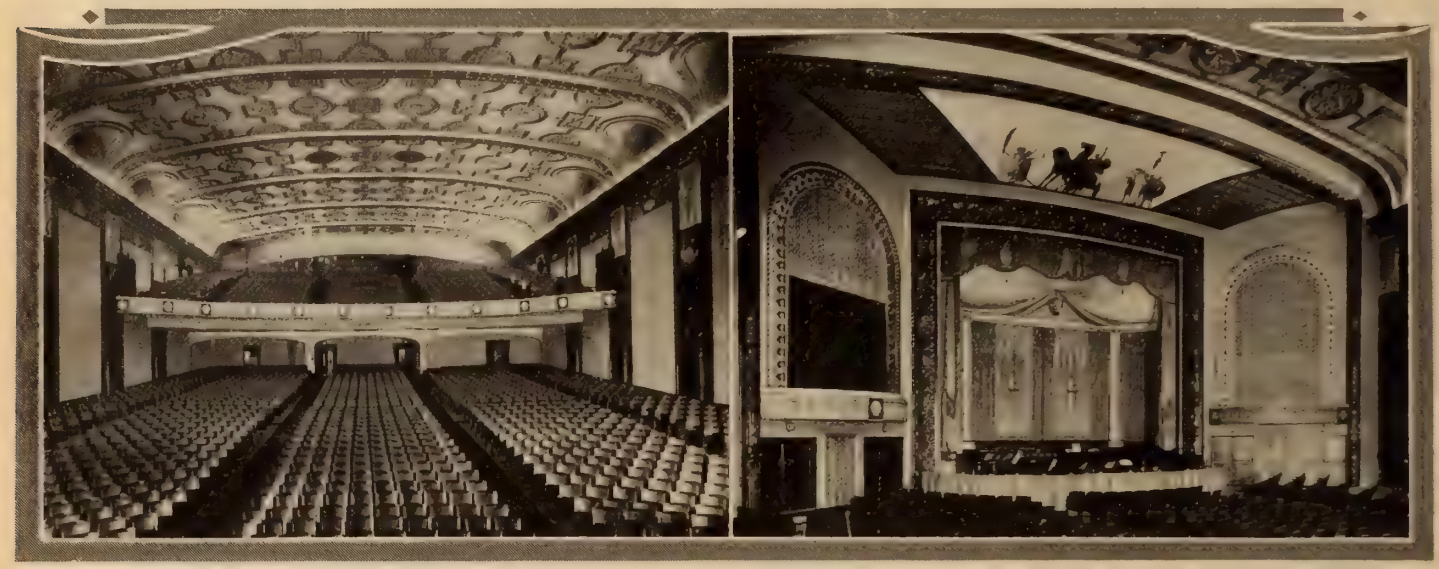
Things move fast in the theatre business. Write

THE ESTEY ORGAN COMPANY, BRATTLEBORO, VERMONT.

You can hear the Estey Pipe Organ at any of these branches:

Studios in New York, 25 West Forty-fifth Street; Philadelphia, 1701 Walnut Street; Boston, 120 Boylston Street; Los Angeles, 633 South Hill Street.

Theatres Worth While



Two views of the auditorium of the magnificent new Pantheon theatre in Chicago. At the left is a shot from the stage toward the entrance, and at the right is a view from the balcony of the stage and orchestra pit

Pantheon Takes Place Among the Leaders

ON the evening of September 11, 1918, 7,650 people were thoroughly impressed with the opening of one of the finest theatres in America—The Pantheon, 4624-42 Sheridan Road, Chicago.

This theatre is located at the intersection of Sheridan Road and Wilson avenue, in the famous Wilson avenue district of Chicago. It is eight miles from the loop, but is the local business center of 850,000 people.

Lubliner and Trinz have again proved that their judgment of theatre locations is keen; also that the public are fully appreciative of the best, and that a theatre for film presentation must be equal in design, construction, comfort and conveniences to that of any legitimate house.

At the beginning of this year they consulted Walter W. Ahlschlager, the theatre architect, to design and build for them the new Pantheon. He was instructed that it should have approximately three thousand seats, with not more than one balcony, and that its stage setting and lighting fixtures must be unique and at the same time majestic in splendor. In addition to the theatre proper, it must have stores and offices of such character as would justify the high price of the ground, namely, $193,500.

The New Coliseum theatre in San Francisco was opened to the public on November 23, and has already won a place for itself in the favors of the Coast fans

The architect choose the Pompeian style of architecture, which even the name justifies. "Pantheon" is the name of the old historic Roman temple which they dedicated to the gods. The ground has a frontage of 200 feet on Sheridan Road to 150 feet depth, the dimensions of the auditorium being 90 feet wide to 190 feet long. The ground floor locates 2,386 seats, and balance in balcony, as will be seen by illustration.

The entrance is by means of a 42-foot by 60-foot lobby opening directly into the large foyer. This foyer is approximately 32 feet wide and 90 feet long, and is one of the most popular attractions of the theatre.

The carpet, between tile border, is of striking red, and the walls are covered with blue poplin, draped. A red and gold drape around all openings as well as gold balustrade complete the Pompeian coloring scheme.

The entrance to balcony is by means of a large grand marble stairway case to the intermediate mezzanine floor which is 40 x 80 feet. This mezzanine floor is furnished in mauve carpet with blue poplin drapes on walls, and a large wood burning fireplace, all furnished in Pompeian furniture. Off this mezzanine floor, which is fully twelve feet above ground floor, are large retiring quarters for women and men. From mezzanine floor, entrance to center of balcony is by means of ramp twelve feet long by eight feet wide sloping four feet. A very interesting feature of this balcony is, that an examination of the crowd going into the theatre on an afternoon or evening, shows that, without instructions from the ushers, the balcony fills as rapidly as its ground floor.

The auditorium proper consists of large fabric panels in gold between marble pilasters. Capping each pilaster is a large heroic feature 6 feet 6 inches high modeled from architectural design by Emil R. Zettler, sculptor. The panels are different, being twelve in all each being symbolical of historical events, which presided during era of Pantheon at Rome. Over the large proscenium arch is a mural painting by Theodore Bear of Chicago, representing the winner of a Roman chariot race being announced to the public.

The stage setting is hardly describable in words. The proscenium draped in a pair of large blue velour curtains 29 feet by 35 feet wide, framed in blue and gold valance. The drawing of this main pair of curtains exposes a Roman colonade setting with a cerise silk dome and connected with three pairs of curtains in the colonade. When the center curtains are drawn, they expose the screen on which the picture is presented. The picture is 19 feet by 22 feet. On either side of aforementioned second set of curtains, is a small set of curtains which are drawn to expose a panorama of color typifying a Roman garden setting.

The electric lighting of the stage has been pronounced as having been developed to the minutest detail. The general lighting of entire auditorium is by means of 458-200 Watt nitrogen lamps inside of National X Ray reflectors concealed in cornice in both sides of auditorium. Upon each X Ray reflector is a color screen of four primary colors connected to a series of Cutler-Hammer dimmers in operating room. This entire auditorium, by means of the concealed lighting, may be lighted so gradually, that no one is aware of the starting of light, then the primary colors of red, blue, amber, green and any combination of direct colors, and a direct white and gradually receding to actual darkness. This is done absolutely without a flicker, likewise on the stage.

Immediately to the left of the stage will be seen a balcony supported by gold drapes, from which soloists, speakers, artists, etc., may give their presentation.

The ceiling is very ornate, in ornamental plaster. All details were developed from architectural drawings and taken by architect from historical details of Roman buildings, and then developed by Emil R. Zettler, the sculptor, in the full scale before application to ceiling.

The colors of ceiling are taken from an Etruscan vase, being a delicate salmon with low relief in black and high relief glazed in white over salmon to give an appearance of antiquity.

The ventilating system is installed by the Typhoon Fan System, designed by the architect. It was unique in the city of Chicago, and the local Board of Health department was unable to pass upon it, having never had a similar system come to their notice, but it was found to operate absolutely satisfactory on test, with the highest recommendations from the Health Department.

The exterior of building presents a novel lighting scheme. The Pantheon sign is supported by two large piers upon which the grotesque horses are supported. These piers from top of third-story windows to the support of the horse figures are glass. Likewise the eleven small piers above cornice in the remaining horse figures. These eleven small piers and two large ones are of glass behind which are located series of color lights, operating from dimmers in the operating room. These dimmers are motor-driven and its lights change in the primary colors of red, green, amber, blue, white and any combination every two minutes. Above the lobby will be seen a group of ten dancing girls in terra cotta moulded by aforementioned sculptor.

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ALI BABA (FOX EXTRAVAGANZA) (NOV. 24).....DEC. 7
"Not only entertaining but is an excellent production."—M. P. News.

ALL NIGHT (BLUEBIRD) CARMEL MYERS (NOV. 25).....NOV. 2
"An out of the ordinary comedy drama that satisfies."—M. P. News.

ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING (PATHE) RUSSELL (DEC. 1) (Six Parts).....NOV. 30
"Far below the regular William Russell standard."—M. P. News.

ANGEL CHILD (HODKINSON) CLIFFORD (SEPT. 9).....SEPT. 7
"Pleasing light entertainment in this picture."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Beautiful settings, good story, but epidemic killed business." "Big business two days."
Consensus—"Excellent production with good drawing powers."

JOHANNA ENLISTS (ARTCRAFT) PICKFORD (SEPT. 29)..SEPT. 14
"This sure fire light comedy should please all without distinction.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Gee, but this picture took my patrons like Uncle Sam is going to take Berlin and the Kaiser. Some picture and some Mary." "It pleased. Box office was pleased." "Pickford never made a better one." "Characteristic, Pickford at her best. Went over big." "Big business for seven days." "This is better than the average Pickford and well liked, but not big as to receipts." "Average business three days; influenza." "Best Pickford for some time. Business light account influenza scare. Quarantine just raised." "Star still big favorite and picture pleased."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with wonderful drawing power."

JUST FOR TONIGHT (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE (SEPT. 16).SEPT. 28
"Romantic comedy which should satisfy everyone, but nothing extraordinary."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very fair picture. Star still to be made." "Fair story." "Pleasing picture. Drew fair for two days." "Tom will work out into a comer. Picture nothing wonderful, but pleased Well staged and beautifully photographed." "Very good." "Fair. Got a big opening night but dropped the second night. Tom Moore has done better than this." "Tom Moore coming strong. Ladies like him. Fine picture."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture with average drawing powers."

"A comedy drama that sums up as average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture only fair. Average business."

"A strong feature of great dramatic intensity."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair."

KISS OR KILL (UNIVERSAL SPEC.) RAWLINSON (NOV.18).OCT. 19
"Thrills abound in this 'crook' play intelligently produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Priscilla Dean has pinned her hair back and we now put our ojcial 'O. K.' on her as a star."

KULTUR (FOX) GLADYS BROCKWELL (SEPT. 22).....SEPT. 14
(Six Parts)
"Extremely dramatic pre-war intrigue with tragic ending."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brockwell great in this picture and was going good until 'Flu' hit hard and all theatres closed." "A good picture, pleased." "Very good but drew poor."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture with very good drawing powers."

LAFAYETTE, WE COME (AFFILIATED) E. K. LINCOLN..NOV. 23
(Six Parts)

LAUGHING BILL HYDE (GOLDWYN) ROGERS (SEPT 30).OCT. 5
"Star's film debut looks like genuine success."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Went good until 'Flu' hit the city, then it was all off." "Good story, star, direction, photoplay, and best of all, good business." "Will Rogers is great. Subtitles worth price of admission."
Consensus—"Fine production with very good drawing power."

LAW OF THE NORTH, THE (PARA) RAY (SEPT. 23).....SEPT. 21
"Literally speaking, this is a carnival of blood."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture good. Star all right but would do better in Hoosier parts." "Average business three days." "After doctoring it made a good picture." "Pleasant story with strong characteristics." "Sjlendid production but story did not please Ray's following."
Consensus—"Not a pleasing picture but has fair drawing powers."

LIGHT OF THE WESTERN STARS, THE (UNITED) DUSTIN FARNUM (NOV. 17) .....OCT. 26
"Works up well in rugged outdoor atmosphere."—M. P. News.

LITTLE MISS GROWN-UP (GENERAL) JOY (NOV. 18)....OCT. 19
"Picture is not up to star's past performances. Story handicaps."—M... P. News.

LOVE'S LAW (MUTUAL) GAIL KANE (SEPT. 15).....SEPT. 7
"Average because fine acting of star is handicapped by poor story."—M. P. News.

LOVE'S PAY-DAY (Triangle) MORRISON-THEBL (DEC. 1)..DEC. 7
"Characters fail to win sympathy but production work is good."—M. P. News.

LURE OF LUXURY, THE (BLUEBIRD) CLIFFORD (OCT. 7).OCT. 12
"Intelligent acting of star saving an average feature program offering."—M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Average business two days."

MAKE BELIEVE WIFE, THE (PARA) BURKE (NOV. 17)..NOV. 9
"Fairly good picture with steady action and good scenes."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business five days."

MAN FROM FUNERAL RANGE, THE (PARA) REID (OCT. 6).OCT. 19
"Illogical and unconvincing melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Did not have a full house and many of our patrons did not like this Reid picture as well as some with a lighter plot."

MANTLE OF CHARITY, THE (PATHE) FISHER (NOV. 17).OCT. 12
"A good clean farce that should please everyone."—M. P. News.

And Index to The Complete Plan Book

MIRANDY SMILES (PARAMOUNT) MARTIN (NOV. 25)...NOV. 9
"Star upholds tradition by making another good one."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Highly entertaining. Good."

MISS AMBITION (VITAGRAPH) GRIFFITH (NOV. 25)...NOV. 30
"Lacks heart appeal although plot action is steady."—M. P. News.

MR. LOGAN, U. S. A. (FOX) TOM MIX (SEPT. 8).....SEPT. 28
"Picture will prove very satisfactory, especially to Mix fans."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Extra big business." "Very good western stunt picture. If Tom gets the right kind of stories he's a comer. Went big with a refined audience. Business good." "Attracted men and children but women were not interested. Good picture." "Some picture, Boys." "Mix is made if they give him productions like this. Broke house records." "On two-day run in good class suburban house the business much better second day."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with very strong drawing powers, sure to please."

MODERN LOVE (UNIVERSAL) MAE MURRAY (SEPT. 9).SEPT. 14
(Six Parts)
"A good picture that should entertain any kind of an audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Extra big business."

MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING (PATHE) FISHER (SEPT. 28).SEPT. 28
"Absurd, but joyfulness will please your audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture lacks punch. Good business first day, top notch second day—Saturday and Sunday—when public will patronize 'any old picture.' Fisher too old for these 'peaches and cream' holes. Her work in 'The Devil's Assistant' has not been equaled since. Better try another along those lines." "Good." "Good picture."
Consensus—"A light picture with just fair drawing qualities."

MY COUSIN (ARTCRAFT) ENRICO CARUSO (NOV. 17)....DEC. 7
"Caruso is an instant success and the story is good."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Utterly impossible."

MYSTERY GIRL, THE (PARAMOUNT) CLAYTON (DEC. 27).DEC. 7
"One for the imagination with lots of real entertainment."—M. P. News.

MYSTIC FACES (TRIANGLE) JACK ABBE (SEPT. 8).....SEPT. 14
"Ranks among best Triangles. Clean, wholesome, and suitable for all." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

NARROW PATH, THE (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (DEC. 15)..DEC. 7
"One of the 'wronged girls' kind with no appeal to emotions."—M. P. News.

NYMPH OF THE FOOTHILLS, A (VITA) LESLIE (SEPT. 9).SEPT. 14
"Well constructed melodrama that will appeal to all classes."—M. P. News.

ON THE JUMP (FOX) GEORGE WALSH (OCT. 6).....OCT. 19
(Six Parts)
"Clean picture with acrobatic stunts that thrill."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Extra big. A crackerjack to open up with after epidemic." "Star unusually good drawing card but fell down this time." "Pleased. Big business." "Average business."
Consensus—"A production of fast action and star that draws them in."

ONE WOMAN, THE (SELECT) (NOV. 16).....NOV. 30
(Six Parts)
"Production excellent; entertainment depends on politics."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Excellent cast. The theme of the story 'Free Love' will kill it for some exhibitors."

OUT OF A CLEAR SKY (PARAMOUNT) CLARK (SEPT. 15).OCT. 5
"This attraction is worth an extended engagement."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good." "Went good. Average business for three days." "Big business to average in four-day run." "The director had something else on his mind and the story was poor." "Average business seven days." "Good film and good star wasted in this production. 'Fatty' saved the day for us." "Good picture." "Clark a favorite but picture not up to her usual standard."

PALS FIRST (SCR. CLA.-METRO) LOCKWOOD (OCT. 13)..OCT. 5
"Best Lockwood offering in a long time. Everybody will like it."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A real knockout, biggest business we ever had and a classy picture." "One of the very best."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with wonderful drawing power."

PECK'S BAD GIRL (GOLDWYN) NORMAND (SEPT. 9)....SEPT. 28
"Star appears in the kind of subject that exhibitors have demanded." M. P. News.
Consensus—"Excellent production with good drawing powers."

PRETENDER, THE (TRIANGLE) WM. DESMOND (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Star registers good in clean Western picture."—M. P. News.

PRISONERS OF THE PINES (HOD) KERRIGAN (SEPT. 16).SEPT. 14
"This is just a clean average picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Poor picture. Receipts dropped each day on a four-day run."

PRIVATE PEAT (ARTCRAFT) HAROLD R. PEAT (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Faithful treatment of a famous book should put this over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. Out of the ordinary." "Bad business. People care nothing for war pictures now." "Pleased but patrons were a little disappointed."
Consensus—"Excellent production with big drawing power."

PRUSSIAN CUR, THE (FOX) MIRIAM COOPER (SEPT. 1)..SEPT. 7
(Seven Parts)
"A good production that will please American audiences."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Admission increased from twenty-five to fifty cents. Turned them away afternoons and evenings." "Only fair propaganda picture. Party playing Kaiser and party playing Wilson very rotten. Worst character for Kaiser ever seen." "Good money getter under normal conditions. People still afraid of 'Flu.' Never heard more applause in house on any picture." "Poorly constructed. Lacks continuity."
Consensus—"Good topical production with big drawing powers in most sections."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

QUEEN OF HEARTS (FOX) VIRGINIA PEARSON (SEPT. 15).OCT. 5
"Murder gives basis for strong dramatic picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good program. Fair business." "Pearson is a dead one."

"Beauty—of form and nature—shown here aplenty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Usual Kellermann stuff, same as her other two pictures. Fine photography, etc., that lets it out. Only average business." "What Foch did to Hindenburg we did to our opposition with 'Queen of the Sea.'" "Came good first day but did not hold up. Picture is a pretty thing. That's all."
Consensus—"Good production that draws big in most sections."

RAINBOW TRAIL, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM (OCT.13).OCT. 5
(Six Parts)
"Farnum scores again in Zane Grey sequel to 'Riders of the Purple Sage.'"—M. P. News.
Consensus—"Excellent production with strong drawing powers."

RECKONING DAY, THE (TRIANGLE) BENNETT (NOV. 17).NOV. 2
"Snappy action to this tale of those familiar German spies."—M. P. News.

RETURN OF MARY, THE (METRO) ALLISON (SEPT. 23)..OCT. 12
"The quality of this program offering does not exceed average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business three days." "Pretty love story but May Allison will never make a star." "Very good."
Consensus—"Just fair as a picture with just about average drawing powers."

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE (FOX) FARNUM (SEPT.1).SEPT. 21
"This picture will surely appeal to those who like Western photoplays."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of Farnum's best." "Extra big four days." "Great. Extra big four days. Going to have a return engagement." "Big Bill's best. It has everything; story, star, director, photography and punch. Wonderful." "Well liked." "Opened average and closed extra big in four days' run. Appeals to young and old." "Farnum is at his best and picture more than pleased. It was a great picture." "Excellent picture. Big business two days." "A very fine picture."
Consensus—"A most excellent and unusual production with wonderful drawing powers."

ROAD TO FRANCE, THE (WORLD) BLACKWELL (Oct. 14).OCT. 12
(Seven Parts)
"Absurd melodrama but title should draw the crowds in."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Other than patriotic sentiment this picture has not much to recommend." "An ordinary melodrama with some extra good shipbuilding scenes. Would have been better in five reels. Business so-so." "Great, went over big, first show after 'Flu' ban was lifted."
Consensus—"Just a fair picture with good drawing power in some sections."

ROMANCE OF TARZAN, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) ELMO LINCOLN (OCT. 13) .....NOV. 2
"Loads of action and thrills make this fitting sequel to 'Tarzan of the Apes.'"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Extra big business seven days."

"THE MAN WHO WOULDN'T TELL"—VITAGRAPH

Here's a Spy Subject That Should Deliver the Goods

ONE thing that will always be of interest to the present as well as to the future generations is the details of the operations of the German spy organizations before and after the war, and the countermeasures of the Allied Secret Service. Ask yourself if you would not give something to know how the famous "Spurlos Versenkt" telegrams were intercepted. Such curiosity is inherent in human nature. It is simply a desire to unravel the unknown. As this picture is based on such a subject, and as it has been handled intelligently and in the most convincing manner, it will undoubtedly satisfy that curiosity.

Some time ago, this department stated in a review that "Inside the Lines" was the most powerful spy subject produced to that day; and if the reports sent in to the "Box Office" Department be taken as a criterion, that statement has been justified. "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell" is a similar subject, except that, in this case, the U. S. Secret Service helps that of the British.

As regards to quality, this contribution may be considered even better, for the reason that Director James Young is well known for his care of details. Besides, the photography, interior settings and outdoor locations, are infinitely better.

In selecting the supporting cast, it is very apparent that Mr. Young had an absolute free hand. The success of the picture lies greatly to this fact. Every one of the characters fits well and portray their roles as if they lived them. Mr. Williams is at his best.

The picture is clean and very entertaining. Released Dec. 9.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Directed by James Young.

CATCH LINES

There were many men who, because they wore plain clothes, during the years of the war, were called slackers. And there were many men who were obliged to suffer this insult in silence. For it is part of every Secret Service man's job to keep quiet.

German U-boat plotters are foiled in the United States by British Secret Service agent, previously accused of being a slacker.

A youth pronounced dead for "diplomatic" reasons turns up in the end with a bullet in his shoulder.

He wore the Victoria Cross next his heart, but he could not show it to the girl he loved, and as a consequence had to suffer in silence when she denounced him as a slacker and a coward.

AD TALK

Courage as great as that which won him the Victoria Cross in France is shown by the hero in "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, which will be the attraction in the ———— theatre on ————. Hawtrey Burke (Earle Williams) is a colonel in the British army in this country at our entrance in the war, uncovering German plots.

A fine type of manhood and an especially good rider, he is welcomed by society—by all but one girl, Elinor Warden, just back from the horrors of Belgium. She loves, despite herself, but she spurns him as a slacker and a coward because he is not on the fighting line. And Burke, who is doing his duty as a secret service agent, takes her scorn in silence—and he loves her.

The picture is teeming with thrills and mystery clear up to the climax, where Burke saves the cruiser bringing the British War Commission to New York from a U-boat and appears in his true light and, of course, reclaims the love of a very happy but humbled girl.

Earle Williams is the star and in the supporting cast are Grace Darmond, Charles Spear and Edward Cecil. The picture was filmed on the California coast and many of the most beautiful places along the Pacific are shown.

THE STORY

Hawtry Burke, an Englishman, passes the summer at an American country club where he becomes noted for his skill at horsemanship and polo playing. Society capitulates to his charms—all but Elinor Warden, a young woman just returned from relief work in Belgium, who has seen its horrors and who cannot understand why a healthy, wealthy Englishman like Burke spends his time idling in America when other sons of his native land are giving their life blood on the battlefields of France. She finally calls him a coward to his face. But Burke, a thorough gentleman, puts up no defense for himself. It is his task—one of his tasks—to suffer in silence.

Dudley Warden, Elinor's brother, returns from France on a furlough. He meets Eric Werner, a German supposedly loyal who covets Elinor. One day at the club there is a lawn fete given and the guests are shocked to hear of the murder of Joseph Furhmann. The shock is intensified when young Warden is arrested for the crime. He refuses to speak in defense of himself. At the trial Werner appears against the soldier, saying that he saw him flee from the dead man's apartment after the shot was fired. At this Warden is aroused. He leaps to his feet, but just then the lights in the court room go out. There is a shot and when the lights go up Dudley Warden is found crumpled in a heap by a chair. A pistol lies near Burke and at first it is apparent that he fired the shot, but finger prints prove him innocent.

Then Burke disappears. America declares war and when the British Commission visits America Burke is seen in the uniform of a colonel wearing the Victoria Cross. Werner is apprehended as a German spy and the real murderer. And naturally Elinor is penitent when she sees how she misjudged the man she really loved all the time.

"WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY"—FOX

Not as Spicy as Title Leads You to Think; Very Entertaining

DO not dread this feature, as it is not as bad as the title might lead you to believe. In the first place, although strong, it is not vile; and in the second, it contains several features that will make it entertaining to a good number of pleasure seekers. The story, for instance, has suspense and, due to intelligent construction, will hold the interest of the spectator; the action, on the other hand, is progressive; human sympathy, to supplement the above, is awakened by the thoughts of the story.

The main object of the plot is to show that Man, after all, is not as angelic as we pride ourselves to be. Oftentimes he will not stand scrutiny any more than Woman.

The picture opens by showing the heroine, a beautiful young lady, wooed by four men. Being unable to decide which one to marry, she looks up their future by gazing into a glass given her by a clairvoyant and finds none of them what they profess to be. In the end, she goes into business and is about to make a rank failure, but she meets a real man, who saves the enterprise. He wins her admiration and they marry.

The story of the first husband is the only point that might be objected to by Puritan audiences. He is a bank clerk, and hating drudgery, he steals and gambles; and as is usually the case, loses. To save himself from prison, he urges his wife to sacrifice her honor to the bank president. As it happens, although she calls on the bank president, she sacrifices nothing. But it will be remembered that a similar situation "made" the stage hit, "Paid in Full."

What helps the picture mostly is the fact that the heroine, all through the story, does nothing to deprive her of the sympathy you bestow upon her right from the start.

The last reel is comedy and helps leave a happy feeling.—Released Nov. 24.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

When Adele Moore hesitated over which man to choose for a husband a Swami appeared before her and permitted her to peep into the future, along four different roads, each one representing her travels provided she married a certain man. Each road ended in a mire of degredation. What was she to do?

Because Adele Moore saw into the future and saw herself unhappy with four of the men who professed to love her she renounced all men as beasts in human form.

Four powerful portrayals of unseen dangers confronting a girl through marriage.

Shows the young woman how to avoid the temptations of today.

The sheer veil of marriage torn away with startling results in this sensational production.

Adele Moore looked into the future and because of what she saw there had no further desire of marrying. What did she see that she should be so against her sacred duty?

AD TALK

"Why I Would Not Marry" is the title of the William Fox production which the management of the ———— theatre will present on ———— of ———— week for a run of ———— days. This picture deals with a vital topic of today in an engrossing manner. The central figure of the picture is a modern society girl, possessed of a small sum of money who finds herself suddenly confronted with the marriage question. She has four suitors and the one she favors is the youth who has only a poor financial standing as compared with the other three. As these four men await her in an adjoining room—wait for their answer, a Hindu Swami appears before her and bids her look in a crystal globe.

Then she gazes and one by one sees the four fates that await her whatever her choice may be with respect to the men in the next room. She sees a faithless husband in the lawyer; in the banker she finds a dishonest and corrupt mate; as the doctor's wife she is neglected; and married to the poor youth she is finally obliged to sacrifice herself on the altar of his employer's greed.

So she says "no" to all four of the men and they depart. Just how this girl finds true happiness it will not be your privilege to learn except from the screen of the ———— theatre. The ultimate outcome is logical but at the same time quite unexpected. At any rate this morality play is well worth your while. It deals with a question of the day in an engrossing, dramatic manner. There is never a moment when the interest slackens and many indeed when it quickens.

It is every woman's problem that confronts Adele Moore, society girl. Four men—a lawyer, a banker, a physician and an impecunious youth—have professed love for her. She believes them all—does not know, even while they await her answer in an adjoining room, which one of them to accept. She thinks she could be happy with any of them, but her choice, perhaps, inclines toward the lad who is the least financially fortunate. And then she remembers: A greedy but beloved father favors the banker, the richest of the suitors. The men wait for their answer. The girl hesitates. And then, suddenly, as by magic, there appears out of the Nowhere an Indian Swami. He sets before Adele a mystic globe and bids her peer into its depths.

She gazes—and starts in amazement. One after another are enacted before her the chapters of the lives she would lead as the wife of each of the waiting men. She sees a career of misery with the lawyer, who casts her off for an adventuress. She discovers the banker is a party to felonies for which an innocent man is serving imprisonment. She lives through the agonies of a life of lonesomeness and neglect as the wife of the studious doctor and, finally, finds herself willingly forced by the poor youth to sacrifice her soul on the altar of his employer's greed. Every womanly instinct in her is in revolt ere the last cycle of her experience has been revealed. Human nature asserts itself; she turns to extremes. She rejects her suitors and dismisses from her mind all thought of marriage. She seeks solace in business in a small town, but discovers only a new sort of trouble. And then again, but not as mysteriously as before, the Swami appears. And this time he presents her with the key that unlocks the door to true happiness.

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; two three-sheets; one six-sheet; one twenty-four sheet. Paper on this production well worthy of the title.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Ten 8 x 10 black and white; ten 11 x 14 black and white; three 22 x 28 colored.

SCENE CUTS:—Five two-column; three one-column.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—In all there are nine advertising cuts provided on this production coming in both one and two-column size. They display the title prominently and contain telling catch-lines.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET also procurable.

SUGGESTIONS

You only need to glance at the title to judge regarding the sensational advertising possibilities of this picture. Naturally a mere display of the title would serve to arouse the interest of the public that is attracted by the idea of the sensational. So of course that is the first step. If you follow out this plan, insert one or two catch-lines in your lobby and newspaper advertisements that further emphasize the sensational character of the production. The advertising cuts prepared for this production are compiled along these lines and could be used to excellent advantage.

The Fox press books (the usual book is supplemented by a special issue) contain a variety of material that might be used in connection with the feature. For instance, the divorce laws of various states are given, statistics as to blackmailers, etc. These stories are hooked up with the production in hand and will make interesting reading if you can get them across in your newspaper. At least you might work this marriage law compilation in a special frame in your lobby. If you can get an artist to make a large, presentable copy of it and place it in an advantageous position you will certainly attract considerable attention. Use the same heading as is provided in the press book, "Queer Marriage Laws."

The picture also gives you the opportunity to institute a good teaser ad campaign if you plan running it for any length of time. Such a title, repeated several times in the newspapers previous to the arrival of the picture will serve to create unusual interest. When you announce the film, play it up big. Flash it from your screen on a slide one or two weeks in advance.

Have throw-aways printed with the title alone displayed, on the back being just the name of your theatre. In our opinion Mr. Fox has given you a wonderful box office asset in this title, providing you cater to the appropriate sort of audience. There are so many advertising angles to it that to enumerate them all here would be impossible.

AN ART DISPLAY

BIG exhibitors accustomed to use original paintings or drawings for lobby advertising will be able to secure some good ideas from the paper supplied on this production.

An effective picture might be drawn as follows:

In an upper corner a girl's head, her eyes fixed intently on a crystal globe which takes up the major portion of the space.

In the center of the globe use the following wording: "This girl looked through the crystal globe into the future. Her vision made her forswear MARRIAGE. What was it she saw?"

The two one-sheets neatly framed and placed on either side of the lobby will also attract business.

"TOO FAT TO FIGHT"—GOLDWYN

"Nobody Loves a Fat Man"—But They'll Vote for This One

ACTION of plot has been sacrificed somewhat to the element of heart appeal. This act is perfectly justified, however, since this element carries the picture over in good shape. On the other hand, the comedy resulting from some humorous subtitles as well as the appropriate acting of the fat star, add the necessary "seasoning," so that the resultant picture offers satisfactory entertainment.

The story, by Rex Beach, revolves mostly around a hero, who, when war against Germany is declared, applies for enlistment, but is rejected because he is too fat. By using the influence of a wealthy friend, he succeeds in joining the Y. M. C. A. forces.

While still feeling joyful at the thought that he will now be able to do his "bit," the hero is transferred to France. His happy nature and clean jokes amuse the boys and help keep up their spirits. While trying to save a wounded soldier, he is himself wounded seriously.

During a Hun raid over the hospital, he prevents a panic by singing "Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here," etc. Thus he wins a decoration for bravery under fire. In the end, his sweetheart from back home, who is a nurse, tells him she didn't know how much she loved him until now. This makes him forget all pains.

The picture is clean and should appeal universally.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

You can read the story in the January number of the "Cosmopolitan." Read it there and then see it at the ——— theatre. Then tell us which you think the better medium of expression—the printed page or the screen.

You know the work—the wonderful work that the Y. M. C. A. did in France—the work that it is still doing today. It is all shown in "Too Fat to Fight," the humorous, the pathetic story of a man whose corpulent lines kept him out of the army.

Frank McIntyre will make you laugh—that is the accomplishment of not a few fat men—and he will make you dry your eyes and thrill to a simple, sweet story of human sacrifice—that is the accomplishment of no fat man except Mr. McIntyre.

AD TALK

It is apparently a tradition of the screen and stage that fat men are to be laughed at. There is something about a bulging figure that strikes our universal sense of humor. If the fat man has a bald head his efforts to awaken laughing response in his audience meet with even further approval. But where, oh where is the fat man who can bring a tear to the eye and a throb to the heart? To be quite truthful that man is at the ——— theatre beginning on ——— of ——— week in the Rex Beach-Goldwyn picture, "Too Fat to Fight." That man is Frank McIntyre, who has made many thousands laugh through his quips and jibes on the boards of the speaking stage. But when he entered pictures he chose to make us cry—mostly that is. He makes us laugh too—and in great measure, but at least Mr. McIntyre puts to rout that ancient tradition.

Mr. McIntyre appears as a man of wealth, known to his associates as Dimples. When war breaks, Dimples finds himself considerably in the background. His friends start going one by one. He sees lounge lizards turned into soldiers, business men into officers, speed demons into kings of the air. He remains at home, idle after a futile effort to reduce in the gymnasium. How Dimples succeeds in serving despite his weight, how he proves a hero, and how he wins the love of a girl, make a throbbing, human tale of "Too Fat to Fight."

Hobart Henley, Goldwyn's foremost director, who was responsible for the great success, "Laughing Bill Hyde," took charge of production on "Too Fat to Fight" and again acquitted himself creditably. There is one note that Mr. Henley never fails to sound—that is the human note. It is the "theme" of this picture.

When the United States declared war Norman Dalrymple, known to his intimates as "Dimples" because of his great weight and good humor, found that, something like his country, he was unprepared. When his friends started going into the army he tried to go too—but the army had no place for a three hundred pounder. When one of his friends suggested that he go as a tank Dimples got real peeved and hied himself to the nearest branch of the Y. M. C. A. and said "Take me." "Do you drink?" he was asked and Dimples replied "Sure, what have you got?" which, of course, ended his immediate prospects. But friends count and before many moons had passed Dimples found himself bringing hot soup and sandwiches and smokes up to the boys behind the guns.

Then one day, or one night to be correct, he saw his friends go over the top with cold steel flashing. And he saw his friend—a major—swirl and fall. Not heeding the whizzing bullets, over he went to get his friend. There was a flash and an explosion and Dimples lay still. When he came to he was in a hospital. He carefully moved himself about in the bed and discovered——. He had said that he would give a leg for his country. He had given it. As he lay there the Huns bombed the hospital! The men were frantic, but Dimples controlled himself and started to sing at the top of his lungs: "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here, What the ——." And for this he was decorated, for the army recognized such deeds as deeds of valor.

But there was one thing that Dimples appreciated more than the decoration and that was Helen's promise to be his. Helen, by the way, was a nurse.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is frankly a picture of war time, it is different from the usual run in that it shows the work of the "Y" in France in an intensely human and dramatic fashion. You have a good title to play with in your advertising and there is good comedy too in the picture. The subtitles taken from the Beach story are in many instances unusually humorous. So you are justified in advertising it as a "comedy-drama of war time" or just as a comedy-drama.

You have a variety of angles to work from in your advertising. First it is the initial appearance of the star on the screen. Second the branch of the Y. M. C. A. will certainly be only too glad to cooperate with you on this feature. Give the officials a private showing, have them endorse it in the advertisements and you will be able to get a good story regarding it in the newspapers. Next there is the fact that the story has just appeared in the January number of the "Cosmopolitan" magazine, one of the monthly publications that has an enormous circulation. Get copies of the magazine and arrange them in your lobby as an additional display. Open several of them to the beginning of the story. Then too there is Rex Beach's name, a name that means much in the world of fiction and the world of photoplays. Display it prominently. Don't forget Hobart Henley either. His last Goldwyn, "Laughing Bill Hyde," went big and is still going strong.

"BEYOND THE LAW"—EMMETT DALTON

Entertaining Picturization of the Dalton Brothers' Story

IN the past a picture based on an outlaw story meant something that was uninteresting to better audiences, and amateurish. Now-a-days, if we are to be guided from those few produced along these lines lately, conditions seem to have been reversed.

"Beyond the Law" is a real good picture. What is more, it is presented in an intelligent and skillful way. The thing that impresses you most is the speed of the action. The characters do not tire you out with needless talk, but do things in such a swift way as to hold your interest and attention.

The story, which was published in the World Magazine, is based on actual facts. Emmett Dalton, who personally appears in the picture, is one of the brothers and the only survivor. After serving a number of years, he was pardoned by the governor.

This picture should have a wide appeal.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

You oldest inhabitants! Remember the Dalton brothers? The bank robbery at Coffeyville, Kansas? Remember that time when all the Dalton boys were shot and killed except Emmett? Well, Emmett tells the whole history of that famous band of men in "Beyond the Law" now at the ——— theatre.

Remember when you were a kid how you used to go around trying to imitate the Dalton brothers? Trying to be a regular hold-up man? Small boys will look up to bandits and Charlie Chaplin wasn't in it then. See your old idol, Emmett Dalton, on the screen at the ——— theatre in a faithful picturization of the history of the Dalton band.

This is no western with manufactured situations—train hold-ups that never happened—impossible bank robberies. Everything in "Beyond the Law" is history. You will find it written in the annals of several of the western states. See it on the screen at the ——— theatre with Emmett Dalton, the last remaining member of that famous band, in the leading role.

Here is a real western picture with Emmett Dalton, the man who used to hold up trains and rob banks and perform other little jobs of this sort, playing his original role.

AD TALK

The management of the ——— theatre will present a distinct novelty on ——— of ——— week when "Beyond the Law" is screened for the first time in this city. "Beyond the Law" is a true story, a bit of history of the southwest enacted not so long ago. In brief it is a picture concerning the activities of the famous Dalton brothers and their partners who were known as expert train robbers and safe crackers. Those of us who can harken back a score or more years ago remember the Dalton brothers. That bank robbery at Coffeyville, Kansas? And the subsequent quashing of the Dalton gang forever after? These are events which many will recall as topics of their times or as related to them by their fathers and mothers.

Now Emmett Dalton, the only surviving member of the band, has told all the Dalton history on the films. He begins with the causes that led the brothers to turn against the law and finishes with the sensational bank robbery at Coffeyville, when all the brothers but Emmett were shot to death. Emmett himself was tried and sentenced to life imprisonment, but the persistent appeals of his mother and sweetheart resulted in a pardon and he is now free.

The story of Dalton's life appeared in print in the Wide World Magazine from May to September. Mr. Dalton himself appears in the picture in three different parts. As himself he is featured, but he also assumes the characters of two of his older brothers, Frank and Bob. We feel confident that the patrons of the ——— theatre will be more than usually interested in "Beyond the Law." It is decidedly different from the usual western picture.

Frank Dalton is appointed United States Deputy Marshal and loses his life in the faithful performance of his duty. In recognition of his fine services the government appoints Bob and Grat Dalton to serve in his position. During this time Emmett Dalton, the younger brother, acts as prisoner's guard and assists them in making arrests. The brothers soon discover that a Marshal above them is dishonest and, becoming disgusted, they resign. The three then move down to New Mexico, where they visit one of the gambling halls of the west. Bob Dalton indulges in a game of roulette and discovers that he is being cheated, so with his brothers and pals he takes possession of the gambler's gold and makes off. Thus are the Daltons branded as enemies of the state.

Having no desire to live down to this reputation, however, Bob and Grat Dalton leave for California to visit still another brother, Bill. Emmett remains on a ranch where he works throughout the winter. Grat Dalton is accused of robbing a train in California and is tried and convicted but escapes. A price is put upon his head. The Daltons at this juncture decide to get even with an express company that has continually persecuted them and there follows a series of sensational raids on the various offices of the company and large sums of money are procured. At one time Eugenia, Bob's sweetheart, in an attempt to warn him of the approaching sheriff's posse, is shot and killed herself.

The bank robbery at Coffeyville, Kansas, brings the activities of the Daltons to a close. They are apprehended and all the boys are shot and killed with the exception of Emmett, who is badly wounded. He is tried and sentenced to life imprisonment, but owing to the untiring efforts of his mother and sweetheart, Ruth Lane, he is eventually pardoned and again becomes a free man.

SUGGESTIONS

The older folks still remember the name of Emmett Dalton and the kids know about him too, for he has been the center of numerous "dime" novels. At any rate you can easily arouse interest in "Beyond the Law" by recalling a few of his escapades of the long ago. You can also take a number of the copies of the Wide World Magazine in which the story ran as a serial from May until September and use these to help out your display by opening them to various passages of the story.

It might be possible for you to have recourse to some old newspaper file and locate one or two of the stories regarding the Daltons. Of course these old files would be too precious for anyone having them in their possession to loan you. A good plan, however, would be to have your printer set up a facsimile story, using type as near as possible to the old style. You could display this story with the real date line above and arouse real interest in this way too.

Exhibitors who operate in any of the localities in which the Dalton brothers operated years since will surely find this feature of great interest to the local fans. The paper makes much of Dalton's name so display it prominently.

"INFATUATION"—PATHE

Has Good Possibilities in Gaby's Name

THE value of "Infatuation" to the exhibitor naturally rests on the advertising possibilities contained in the name of Gaby Deslys. As the title of the picture lends itself ideally to the type of exploitation needed and the star's beauty and costumes back up the proposition, the picture should prove a worth while asset.

As a picture, and judged on its appeal to American audiences, "Infatuation" may be termed a fairly good program offering. Gaby will satisfy the curiosity that draws your patrons in. She is found in a role peculiar for a heroine since the author allows her to steal and later to tamper with our sympathy by casting aside the hero after he has made her famous. She returns to him later because "the other man" wounds her feelings by refusing to introduce her to his mother.—Released Dec. 1st.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET also procurable.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture is being exploited along special lines by the Pathe Company and well it might be for with such an attractive title and with such a well remembered star as Gaby Deslys, the exhibitor has the jump on his competitor at the start. It hardly seems necessary to add that both the title and the name of the star should be prominently displayed in all lobby, theatre or newspaper advertising that is undertaken. Additional interest could also be created by announcing the fact that the film was made in Paris. If this course is followed be sure to add that it is not a war play.

In your lobby advertising aim to bring out the lavishness of the production in every possible way. The 22 x 28 of star provided in the display, very well accentuates this item of the production. Use this photograph. On the twenty-four-sheet there is a large figure of Gaby with a large feather head-dress. This might be used as a cut-out or your artist may be able to work out a painting along similar lines. The same figure is also found on the three-sheet. This is only mentioned because of the fact that the paper on "Infatuation" appears to be some of the most appropriate ever issued on a feature. At the same time it is of excellent quality.

Any other way in which to accentuate the picture's quality will be suitable for display purposes. Doubtless the picture will suggest various plans for advertising to the individual exhibitor. Get the most out of this angle of it, play up the title and star and you should have a real box office success.

THE STORY

Flora Nys, a poor flower girl of Paris faces hard times. Her rent overdue, Le Baron, the landlord, oppresses her and puts before her a shady propostion. Indignantly she orders him out of her room. When she takes up her flowers, preparatory to going forth to sell them, she discovers that Le Baron has trampled on them. Tempted by her poverty she steals a fur in a department store. Le Baron sees her and follows her into the street where the girl, conscience-stricken, throws it away. Le Baron picks it up and follows her to the home of Paul Bernard, an actor, who every year gives a Christmas party to certain poor children of Paris. Bernard redeems the fur and, attracted by Flora's loveliness asks her to become his wife.

In time, Flora becomes an expert dancer and leading woman at Bernard's theatre. Gray Stanton, a wealthy rounder, attracts Flora. He endeavors to entice her away from her husband in which task he is assisted by Le Baron, who harbors revenge. On the night of the opening of a new production, Flora deserts the theatre, influenced by a trumped up story regarding Stanton's injury. She discovers the lie and returns to Paris to discover that her husband is suffering from an attack of brain fever occasioned by her flight. She devotes her time in efforts to bring back his memory and finally when another Christmas rolls around she dons her old clothes and sits before the open fire place as she did when Bernard first met her. This has the desired effect. Bernard's memory is restored and he readily forgives the past when he learns the unhappy story of Stanton from his wife's own lips.

AD TALK

The management of the ——— theatre takes great pleasure in presenting as a special holiday attraction, "Infatuation," a new picture, of Parisian make starring the brilliant dancer, Gaby Deslys. Mlle. Deslys will be remembered through her several appearances on the American musical comedy stage and in vaudeville when she visited this country before the days of the war. At that time she also appeared in a picture for the Famous Players Company. "Infatuation" is her second venture in the world of the films and she gives a performance that will endear her still further in the hearts of her many admirers in this country.

"Infatuation" was produced under the direction of Louis Mercanton, one of the premier directors for the Eclipse Film Company of France—in fact, one of the leading directors in that nation. The story is the work of Marcel L'Herbier, also a Frenchman. These two have collaborated in the production of an offering that ranks well up with our own domestic product. We venture to predict that "Infatuation" is only one of many films that will come from the other side of the water now that peace is upon the world. Followers of the motion picture business will remember that in ante bellum days the producers of France were responsible for many a good picture exhibited in local theatres. And already have these producers again begun to strike their stride. It will be interesting to see what the future holds forth.

As for "Infatuation," let it be said that this production in lavishness, in heart appeal and in its fitness for the star, leaves nothing to be desired. The noted artiste of musical comedy plays with a grace and surety of expression that stamps her as a versatile lady indeed.

SUGGESTIONS

There is a lot of appeal in stories regarding Secret Service operatives during the war—real heroes who were forced to pose as slackers before the world—and the girl—in order to secure their information. Such a picture is "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," and if you can bring this out in your advertising by all means do so, for it is the picture's strong point and people have not had a chance to grow tired of this sort of a war picture.

You have a recognized star in Earle Williams and a beautiful leading woman to advertise in connection with the feature. The title, though somewhat long, awakens the curiosity. Feature the stars and the title equally and you should get good results.

"THE TESTING OF MILDRED VANE"—METRO

A Well Built Typical "Movie"

SUSPENSE and plot building that is up to the standard are advantages making this a production that will hold the interest. It is played by an excellent cast and well staged.

The story, however, is a typical product of "scenarioitis." Before taking a business trip the husband places his wife under the care of a doctor friend. The latter attempts to take advantage of her. In defending herself, she strikes him, injuring him permanently. He bears malice in his heart for this and as she dies some time later, he determines to revenge himself on her child. He tries to make the father believe she is not his own child.

The father now despises his daughter and, leaving her under the care of the doctor, goes away. The doctor determines to ruin her through third parties. Her sweetheart, however, comes to the rescue in the end, proving to the father, who has now returned, that the doctor is lying to him. The doctor eventually confesses and, conveniently for the scenario writer, goes insane.

AD TALK

"The Testing of Mildred Vane" will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with May Allison as its star. This story is by Charles T. Dazey, prominent playwright, and has to do with the terrible revenge contemplated by one Dr. Miguel Hernandez toward the Vane family. Previous to the beginning of the story Hernandez and Matthew Vane had resided together in Paris. Then Vane married. Shortly afterwards he was called away and left his wife with Hernandez. She was obliged to protect herself from his advances and struck him on the head, rendering him unconscious. So he lay where he fell, one hand in the fire. This hand became withered as a result and Hernandez saw his ambitions of becoming a great surgeon blasted. When Mrs. Vane died he resolved to have revenge on Matthew and his daughter, Mildred.

So he plants the seed of suspicion in Matthew Vane, little by little, leading him to suspect the legitimacy of his daughter's birth. He finally gains complete charge of Mildred, supposedly for a psychological investigation but in reality with the idea of giving her into the power of a social snob. How Mildred's true love frustrates this plan and how Dr. Hernandez is shown up in his true colors puts an unusually dramatic climax on this tale. Miss Allison is supported by such distinguished players as Darrell Foss, George Field, Nigel De Brullier and Fred Goodwins, while the direction was in charge of Wilfred Lucas.

SUGGESTIONS

This offering gives you an opportunity to get in some sensational advertising if this type of display attracts your patrons. A glance at the story printed elsewhere on this page will give you an idea as to the character of the advertising to be made up if you desire this style. Doubtless your artist will be able to fix up a brace of paintings for either side of the lobby, basing his drawings on the doctor's effort to get the heroine into his power. A large male figure, his hand coming out in reach of the girl in the foreground might suffice.

You have a pretty and attractive and increasingly popular star in May Allison, while the author is well known to those who frequent the theatre with any degree of regularity.

THE STORY

Through the revenge harbored by Dr. Miguel Hernandez against Matthew Vane, this latter is led to believe that Mildred Vane is not his daughter. He is frantic and in this manner Hernandez secures the upper hand. He promises to determine whether or not Mildred is his child by carrying through a close study of the girl. Mildred is puzzled when her father abruptly leaves his home and goes to a hotel, and is still further startled when she finds herself made the prisoner of Hernandez and not allowed to see Albert Moreland, the man she loves. Instead Hernandez attempts to throw her in the company of Ralph Jeffries, a snob whom she heartily dislikes. At the same time Hernandez makes daily reports to the frantic Vane that his suspicions regarding Mildred are probably correct.

Mildred eventually succeeds in bribing one of the servants to deliver a note to Moreland. His answer to this is intercepted by Hernandez. As a result when Mildred escapes from the house with the intention of eloping with Moreland and enters a waiting taxi she discovers herself in the arms of Jeffries. Moreland arrives just as the taxi pulls away and, realizing the trick, makes all haste to Vane's hotel, where he tells him the story. Hernandez, also there, beats a hasty retreat and joins Jeffries in the road house where he has taken Mildred. Moreland and Vane pursue and after vanquishing the villains learn the whole foul scheme. Hernandez, having been repulsed and injured in the past by Vane's wife, sought revenge on the husband and daughter. The testing of Mildred Vane has been a mockery. After all this Mildred goes to the man she loves, Moreland.

"BUCHANAN'S WIFE"—FOX

Virginia Pearson in Highly Dramatic Production

"BUCHANAN'S WIFE" is an adaptation of the late Justus Miles Forman's novel and as prepared as a vehicle for Virginia Pearson shows unusual skill in respect to both continuity and direction. In fact it may easily stand as Miss Pearson's best Fox release of recent months.

The story tells how a woman married the man she loved, hoping that her former husband was dead and how he appeared finally, demented by a blow on the head. The moral code adhered to in the picture's production may appear a trifle stringent before an audience. It is accentuated by some subtitles that are rather ultra-emotional. Their elision would help the realism of the story.

Inasmuch as this is Charles Brabin's first picture for Fox it must be said that it is quite apparent that the producer has secured a director who is thoroughly well acquainted with dramatic values—almost sure-fire on a subject of this kind. Miss Pearson's emotional ability is well displayed under his direction, while Marc McDermott gives what is, to our mind, the greatest performance of his career as the first husband. The death-bed scenes of the final reel might be shortened and with better effect.—Released Dec. 1.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Beatrix Buchanan.....Virginia Pearson
Herbert Buchanan.....Marc McDermott
Harry Faring.....Victor Sutherland
"Kansas," the Tramp.....Ned Finley
From the famous novel by Justus Miles Forman.
Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

CATCH LINES

One of the most original conceptions of the "eternal triangle" ever thrown on the screen—a story that leaves you in doubt as to the ultimate outcome until the very last moment.

Virginia Pearson's emotional talent was never better displayed than in "Buchanan's Wife," one of the late Justus Miles Forman's last works.

Beatrix hoped that her husband was dead—he had disappeared completely and all chance of his return had dwindled—and so Beatrix married again—and then in the midst of her new-found happiness the long-absent man returned—see the dramatic denouement of this story in "Buchanan's Wife," now at the ——— theatre.

Virginia Pearson gives a splendid performance and is ably supported by Marc McDermott, who as Buchanan gives the best character portrayal of his long career.

AD TALK

Virginia Pearson will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Fox picture entitled "Buchanan's Wife," an adaptation of the novel of the same name by the late Justus Miles Forman. Without doubt this picture is one of the most highly dramatic in which Miss Pearson has appeared in to date. It tells the story of a woman who, believing and hoping that her husband was dead, married the man she really loved. In the midst of this happiness husband No. 1 appears—a pitiful wreck of his former self, unable to recognize her as the woman with whom he once lived.

Here is a dramatic situation indeed and one which the celebrated author developed to its fullest extent. It builds to a denouement of terrific force—the fate of all three characters hanging in the balance until the very close of the last reel. Both the scenarist, Adrian Johnson, and the director, Charles Brabin, have made the most of the abundant material supplied them in the printed book and as a result "Buchanan's Wife" ranks as a noteworthy achievement of the silent drama.

Miss Pearson, let it be said, has never appeared to such great advantage. Her penetrating emotional ability fits her well to carry the name part of the picture and her support is excellent. Marc McDermott, one of the oldest actors in the art in point of service, contributes a masterly characterization as Buchanan. His is the power to hold a scene by merit of his own ability and there is many a time during the five reels of "Buchanan's Wife' that his acting reaches truly great heights. Victor Sutherland is a pleasing hero while Ned Finley as a tramp, Kansas, gives a valuable character portrayal.

Beatrix has been forced into a marriage with Herbert Buchanan by her father when in reality she loved Harry Faring all the while. The marriage occurred during Faring's stay in Europe and on his return home he writes Beatrix a note expressing his surprise and sorrow at her choice. Buchanan sees the note and, with some fiendish purpose in view, sends him an invitation to attend a reception at their home. He watches Beatrix and Faring closely on the night of the affair and sees plainly that they are in love. Influenced by wine he openly insults Beatrix at the dinner table and orders Faring from the house.

Disgraced and friendless Buchanan plans suicide. He is interrupted by the appearance of a tramp, Kansas. With this man he decides to disappear. The last seen of him is when Kansas strikes him a terrific blow on the head. He falls over a cliff. Beatrix learns that her husband will not be considered dead by law until five years have passed, inasmuch as his body has not been found. She and Faring remain apart for a time, but then unable to stay away from him longer Beatrix identifies an unknown body as that of Buchanan's. Soon after they are married.

Then Kansas appears leading a white-haired, stooped, babyish man—Buchanan. Kansas plans to blackmail Beatrix, but instead she tells all to Faring. He goes in search of the two and hears Kansas's story—as to how he rescued Buchanan after the fight and found him demented. In a climax of great dramatic power, Buchanan dies, just after counselling Kansas to leave Beatrix and Faring unmolested. And so after this there is nothing to stand between the two who love each other.

SUGGESTIONS

You can safely boost this as the best of Miss Pearson's recent Fox pictures, as it presents a strikingly different version of the eternal triangle. A good line to play up would be the mysterious disappearance of the leading male character, Buchanan. As this is a most important point in the story and as a considerable measure of the dramatic force of the story results from this disappearance you could work this angle with effective results. If the picture is played for any length of time a teaser campaign could be conducted for a few days previous to the initial showing by inserting such lines as "Who is Buchanan?" and "What Became of Buchanan?" at either the top or the bottom of your regular advertisements. Follow this with the full announcement of the feature, worded appropriately, of course, so as to tie up the teaser ads with the name of the picture.

If your patrons are fond of Miss Pearson, dwell on the fact that she gives a great emotional performance and also mention the name of Marc McDermott. This character actor has been on the screen so long that all real followers of the pictures know him and his performance here is one of the best he has ever given. There is also the name of the author, Justus Miles Forman, who lost his life on the Lusitania, to play up. He was quite well known and a number of his novels have been put into pictures.

In the press sheet provided on this production the editors have advised exhibitors to play up the picture from its "hypnotic" angle. Evidently the original story differed largely from the picture. There is nothing about hypnotism in the offering as it is now presented, so disregard all press stories, special articles and advertisements that have been prepared with this side of the original story in view.

"THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Billie Rhodes Registers to Advantage

BILLIE RHODES' first attempt as a star in a long production can in many ways be considered highly successful. Miss Rhodes is pretty, she has personality, and all signs point to her development into a brilliant luminary.

"The Girl of My Dreams" succeeds in holding the attention closely till the close of the story. It contains plenty of comedy as well as some tenderly pathetic situations.

The theme, however, will bear examination and study. A father, ignorant of the fact that the heroine is his own daughter, takes a snap of her while she is swimming in a pool in nature's costume. Later, he exhibits an enlargement of the photo to invited guests at the club. At another time, with fire in his eyes, he attempts to enter the heroine's room, but she shuts the door on him.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Billie Rhodes, the heroine of over a hundred Christie comedies, makes her bow in a five-reel drama in "A Girl of My Dreams" and proves herself equally as successful in this line of endeavor as in the more familiar field.

Kenneth Stewart was bound to have "The Weed," an unsophisticated country girl, for his own. His efforts along this line were persistent, but evidence was presented to him that made him hang his head in shame because of his past actions. What this evidence was is only revealed in "The Girl of My Dreams" now at the ——— theatre.

The story of a poor country girl who inherited the millions of a city man because of one little kindness.

Does it pay to be kind and considerate of all others? It paid "The Weed," a little waif of the country, for she inherited the fortune of a city millionaire because of one charitable act.

AD TALK

Billie Rhodes will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her first five-reel picture, "The Girl of My Dreams." This also marks Miss Rhodes' debut into the dramatic field, her time heretofore having been taken up in playing comedy leads with the Christie Film Company. She has been heroine of an almost countless number of these comedies and the producers of "The Girl of My Dreams" realized that her popularity demanded that she appear in five-reel productions. The present feature is the first of a series to be produced by the National Film Corporation and if first pictures count for anything the following ones will be received with interest.

"The Girl of My Dreams" shows petite Miss Rhodes in the role of "The Weed," who lives with the Williams, who keep a farm. On one of her trips to a nearby summer resort to deliver the farm products she meets George Bassett, an old millionaire, who is there to regain his health. She performs a service for him and thereafter they are fast friends. The upshot of it is that Bassett takes "The Weed" under his wing and removes her to the city, there to look after her education.

In the city she meets a good-for-nothing, Kenneth Stewart, who several times tries to take advantage of her. She always manages to evade him, however. In a short time the old millionaire dies, leaving "The Weed" his entire fortune. Kenneth makes another effort to secure the girl for his own, but startling evidence turns up that proves him an even greater blackguard than before. Just what this evidence is comes in a striking climax to this dramatic story.

THE STORY

In the San Bernardino Mountains, in a cabin near a health resort, lives the Williams Family. A young girl, nicknamed "The Weed," also lives with them. In one of her trips to the resort to sell farm products, she meets George Bassett, an old millionaire, who is there to regain his health. Through a kindness shown to him by her they become acquainted. While Ralph Long is coming down the mountain, his automobile skids, falls off a cliff. He is injured badly. "The Weed" runs to the scene, drags him into her cave, treats him as best she can and then notifies the resort people. He is taken to the city.

Kenneth Stewart, a nephew of the millionaire and an aspirant of his millions, in coming across "The Weed" swimming in a pool in nature's costume, takes a snap of her, and when he returns to the city, he has an enlargement of it made which he presents to the club. It is hung in a conspicuous place.

The acquaintance of "The Weed" and Bassett ripens into a close friendship, and when he is ready to return to the city, he induces her to go along with him so he may educate her. Established in her new quarters, she is now the mistress of the house. Kenneth Stewart never loses an opportunity of accosting her. He once tries to enter her room but she prevents him.

George Bassett dies, willing his millions to "The Weed." In a landslide the Williams family is also wiped out. A neighbor finds a memorandum book, which he brings to Ralph Long, who is now completely recovered. Through the notes in the book, the fact is established that Kenneth Stewart is the father of "The Weed," his wife having died shortly after abandoning her. Feeling deeply his shameful conduct, he leaves the city and asks that his identity be kept from his daughter. Their friendship ripening into love, Ralph Long and "The Weed" become engaged.

SUGGESTIONS

It appears that the producers were rather unfortunate in their choice of a vehicle for Billie Rhodes' debut in the field of feature drama. Miss Rhodes has made her name as a comedienne and one naturally expected to see her in a subject akin in some small measure, at least, to comedy drama. However if the exhibitor be looking for sensational advertising opportunities a glance at the synopsis of "The Girl of My Dreams" will reveal to him quite a lurid angle from which to play the picture. It is advised, however, that care be taken if the picture is advertised from this twist of the story. It is not pleasant.

"TWO-GUN BETTY"—HODKINSON

Bessie Barriscale Pleases in a "Different" Role

PRESENTING Miss Barriscale in a totally different role, "Two Gun Betty" is thoroughly enjoyable. It is the kind that satisfies.

In the story, the heroine enters into a wager with a girl friend, whose brother owns a ranch, that she could pass as a man. Dressed as a cowboy, she visits the ranch and obtains a job. Of course every one of the ranch boys knows the new hand is a woman, but the heroine thinks they don't.

Having determined to have some fun with her, the cowboys put her through the third degree, ranch style; but she wins at cards, is able to lasso a steer, turns the tables on a would-be hold-up man, and, in fact, she outwits them at every point. In the end, the heroine captures a real "Bad Man," a famous cattle rustler, but she faints when told he is no fake this time. The display of so much nerve wins her the admiration of the cowboys and the love of the boss.

The success of this picture may be attributed chiefly to the following: Knowing how absurd it is to pass a woman as a man, the author permits his characters to know the identity of the heroine. Thus, neither the intelligence of the spectator, who, in a way, acts as a judge, is imposed upon, nor is his credulity stretched.

The picture contains plenty of light comedy. It offers a clean and wholesome entertainment.—Released Dec. 16.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

One of the most pleasing comedy-dramas seen in many a day will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when "Two-Gun Betty" is shown in this city for the first time. Bessie Barriscale is featured in this subject as a young woman who makes a wager that she can seek employment on her chum's brother's ranch disguised as a man and "get away with it." So Betty, for this is the young lady's name, dons male attire and sets out for the ranch. She is greeted by young Kennedy, the owner, and believes her triumph complete when he and all his employees treat her as a man. However, Kennedy and his man have immediately seen through her disguise.

They plan to see the game through, however, and there follows a wealth of comedy in which the cowboys invent all sorts of old melodramatic tricks with which to frighten Betty. She remains on the ground, however, and takes the joke all in good faith when they finally let her in on it. But she has a real surprise in store for them—and for that matter, in store for herself, when she brings a real bandit into camp at the point of a gun.

Miss Barriscale is seen to real advantage in this breezy play of the West. It was written for her by Howard Hickman, and Jack Cunningham, one of the busiest scenario writers on the Pacific coast, made the scenario, while Mr. Hickman took another turn in directing. The picture is well up to the high standard maintained in the best Barriscale pictures and ranks one hundred per cent as a production as well as in entertaining values. Other pictures on the bill for this date are ———.

Betty Craig makes a wager that she can pass as a man on the ranch of her chum's brother, Jack Kennedy, whom she has never met. So she assumes the name of Bob and hires herself to the Kennedy ranch. The owner and the ranch hands immediately see through her disguise but resolve to play the game through. As a consequence they put her through all the tricks that every tenderfoot is obliged to go through and she finds herself rather sore when it's all over. Then the boys decide to give her a further surprise. Although the town has been dry many years they rig up the dry bar as one of the old wet variety and stage a real old-fashioned brawl.

Jack and Dave, disguised in outlandish bandit rigs, hold the place up. Asserting he's "got a contract to fill a buryin' ground tonight" Jack begins shooting Mexicans, with an occasional white man into the bargain, and commands that the dead be dragged out. Betty, having passed from the scared to the angry stage, snatches her gun and jabs it into Jack's back. Then the dead come to life, Betty realizes the joke is on her, and they all go to the drug store for an ice cream soda.

A little group of Mexicans have a quiet little confab among themselves, then slip away in the darkness. The next morning a hundred head of steers are missing. Betty thinks it another joke on her, and, when she chances upon the Mexican, Miguel, and his band with rustled steers, at the point of a gun she brings him home and is so unprepared to learn that he is Miguel Carballo, a notorious cattle thief, that the knowledge that this has been the real thing makes her faint. When she recovers she finds her boy's wig has fallen off and Jack confesses that he had always known she was Betty Craig and that he loves her.

CATCH LINES

Betty thought she could dress up as a man and fool the cowboys at Kennedy's ranch. But they saw through her disguise immediately and put her through the paces of the tenderfoot. The fun runs riot in this picture—a new kind of western.

Bessie Barriscale appears as Betty, who thought she was fooling a lot of cowboys when she dressed as a man. But they knew her for a girl at the start and proceeded to do the fooling. But, though crossed and double-crossed Two-Gun Betty proceeds to have her innings at last in one of the most exciting climaxes that ever capped a picture.

A light and breezy comedy of the great West—a picture that has real laughs to the reel foot.

SUGGESTIONS

Get the most out of the fact that this is a spirited comedy-drama of the western plains. In all advertising or lobby decorations that you do bring out the comedy angle of the picture. Drawings or paintings of star could be made in an attempted "bad man" pose looking out of the picture with two guns pointed at the spectator. This also would be a good figure to use in news-

Doubtless you will be able to find a good comedy still among those provided on the production and if you have no artist you can make use of one of these. The title too is catchy so be sure to display it prominently. Placed above such a figure as referred to above it should give the spectator a good laugh and arouse his curiosity and interest sufficiently to bring him into the theatre.

"A PERFECT LADY"—GOLDWYN

Madge Kennedy Blends the Tear and Smile Delightfully

THE first question you will ask to yourself, after seeing this picture, will be, "Why can't more pictures like this one be produced?" So long as some producers think that sex stuff, and death-bed scenes, and murders, and suicides, and all kinds of rot is necessary to bring out dramatic values in a picture, that long it will be impossible. The minute, however, they fix it in their minds that the future of the motion picture business lies in making people feel happy, and that this cannot be accomplished unless pictures are free from all these objectionable features, that soon it will be possible.

The chief purpose of the story is to show the heroine's love for her sister and her willingness to endure hardships in order to make a happy home for her. In the pursuit of her object, a number of things happen that are extremely comical. So the story accomplishes two things at once, it stirs your emotions while making you laugh heartily.

If you happen to be in a dead town, you can use this attraction to infuse some new life into it. A regular chorus show with merry maidens in tights (very tight) is used. But don't be scared, it won't hurt you, as it is not indiscreet enough to shock even an old maid.

It is a clean picture.—Released Dec. 8.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

In which a burlesque actress proves herself the moral superior of the deacon of Sycamore in a series of highly amusing scenes.

Deacon Griswold was wont to hie himself to the Windy City for amusement and then return to Sycamore and preach on the moral question. But someone, somehow, got a moving picture of his most high-flung escapade and showed him up before the townsfolk.

Madge Kennedy's latest comedy is an adaptation of a stage play by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. It is filled with laughs from beginning to end.

The minister of Sycamore marries an ex-burlesque actress! Horrors! But wait! Just what do you know about burlesque actresses anyway? See Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady."

AD TALK

Madge Kennedy, the young comedienne who has scored such a great success in Goldwyn pictures during the past year, will appear in her latest offering entitled "A Perfect Lady" at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "A Perfect Lady" is an adaptation of the successful stage comedy by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf and proved an ideal vehicle for Miss Kennedy on the screen. Its comedy arises largely from contrast, contrast of a set of merry burlesquers with the staid, and, in some instances hypocritical, citizens of a little town called Sycamore.

When the burlesque troupe hits Sycamore the inhabitants are highly shocked. The morals committe rounds up the town constable and visits the playhouse on the opening night. They see one turn in which Lucille Le Jambon, known off stage as plain Lucy Higgins, is the leading light, and then ring down the curtain. The troupe goes broke and the minister of the place, an upstanding young man by the name of David Grayling, urges Lucy to reform from her burlesque ways. So Lucy opens an ice cream parlor and dancing school in Sycamore. But the deacon, the hypocrite of the village, still objects to her "contaminating influence" and decides that Sycamore must rid its respectable self of the former burlesque lady.

How Lucy proceeds to get "the goods on" the deacon and show him up before the townsfolk in his true colors puts an uproariously novel finish on this comedy. Miss Kennedy is seen to captivating advantage in the principal part, while others are Jere Austin, Walter Law and Rod La Rocque.

SUGGESTIONS

In "A Perfect Lady" there is offered the exhibitor a popular stage success in which Rose Stahl scored a hit, the names of well-known authors, Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, and last but by no means least the star, Madge Kennedy. Miss Kennedy has proven in the past that she is able to stand up without such aides as those provided her in this picture, so it seems a certainty that with the added advertising advantages held forth in her latest vehicle she will play to a good, big business.

Use the name of the star prominently and that of the play for it it has a catchy title, and be sure to accentuate the fact that the picture is comedy from first to last. Miss Kennedy's past appearances have paved the way for you to clean up more than ever on this, her latest feature.

THE STORY

Lucille Le Jambon, whose real name is Lucy Higgins, is a member of a burlesque show that strikes a snag in the town of Sycamore. The morals committee see to it that the show is closed after Lucille's dance. And the company, being not so affluent, goes quite naturally and quite completely broke. Reverend David Grayling, parson of the village church, becomes acquainted with Lucille and advises her to quit the troupe—which she does, opening in the town an ice cream store and dancing school. Her new business is a great success, but once again the morals committee, headed by Deacon Griswold, interferes. David is sent to demand Lucille's abdication. She refuses, telling him that she is the sole support of a mother and sister. Thereupon is David convinced that Lucille is much better than the old Deacon.

Deacon Griswold leaves for Chicago, threatening on his return to have Lucille run out of town. A week after his departure Lucille receives a letter from Fannie White, a former member of the troupe. Among other things Fannie writes that the deacon is cutting capers with the cabaret girls where Fannie is employed.

With the return of the deacon Lucille plans a surprise for the natives. She advertises a free motion picture show and all Sycamore, including Griswold and his followers, assembles for the occasion. Griswold is seen sneaking out of Lucille's place as the picture depicts him in revelry with chorus girls in Chicago. Fannie, with the aid of her employer, has followed Lucille's instructions to the letter. The Griswold expose is followed by another surprise when the parson, in view of all the villagers, embraces Lucille and announces that she has consented to become his wife.

"FUSS AND FEATHERS"—PARAMOUNT

"Cleanly Entertaining," the Verdict on This

BOTH from a production as well as from an entertaining angle, "Fuss and Feathers" is highly pleasing. Its success lies in intelligent handling by the director and the faithful interpretation of the heroine's role by the star.

There are two independent stories running parallel in the first part of the picture: the one concerns our heroine, the daughter of a mining prospector, who, at last, strikes it rich, sells the mine and moves to the city; the other, our hero, the son of the man who bought the mine. He is expelled from school and ejected from the house by the father.

The two stories are joined together towards the end of the third reel when the hero, robbed, beaten into unconsciousness and left by the wayside, while in an intoxicated condition, is found by the heroine. From this point and on the pleasing romance begins.

The story carries the human element to some extent, progressive action of plot, and suspense. The comedy resulting from the intelligent impersonation of the miner's role, also the wit and humor in several of the subtitles, increases the entertaining values of the picture by a whole lot.

It is a clean offering and it should appeal to all.—Released Dec. 1.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Enid Bennett, the young star who has risen to such prominence under the direction of Thomas H. Ince will be seen again at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Paramount picture entitled "Fuss and Feathers," a delightful little comedy-drama of manners. It introduces us to the Baldwins, father and daughter. Pete Baldwin, a character excellently portrayed by that sterling actor, John P. Lockney, is a miner who has labored long but unsuccessfully to accumulate his pile as a miner. His daughter, Susie, played by Enid Bennett, is a wild, untutored child of the gold fields.

And then one day old Baldwin strikes it rich and straightway goes to San Francisco, there to enter into negotiations with business interests regarding the development of his mine. And of course Susie goes along. The two are invited to the home of a business man, Martin Ledyard, and, it must be said, deport themselves not at all according to Hoyle. In fact, Mrs. Ledyard objects so strenuously to old Pete's table manners that Susie, hurt to the quick, escorts the old gentleman out into the air.

Then comes there "edication" as it were, and then too comes a charming little love story and an engrossing bit of melodrama to cap the tale. Miss Bennett is seen to delightful advantage in the stellar role, while aside from Mr. Lockney there appear Douglas MacLean, Charles K. French, Sylvia Ashton and that prince of villains Robert McKim. "Fuss and Feathers" was written specially for Miss Bennett by Julien Josephson and produced under the direction of Fred Niblo, now one of Mr. Ince's foremost directors. It will be remembered that only a short time ago Mr. Niblo deserted the screen that he might have the pleasure of directing Miss Bennett—his wife.

THE STORY

Susie Baldwin is the untutored daughter of Pete Baldwin, an old prospector living in the mining camp of Starveout. After many years of keen disappointments, Baldwin strikes it rich and he goes with Susie to San Francisco at the request of Martin Ledyard, a mining promoter, to arrange for the sale of his claim. Susie and her father dine at the Ledyard home where Mrs. Ledyard plainly shows her contempt for the couple because of their roughness of manner. Angered by the woman's sneers, Susie drags her father out of the Ledyard home and resolves to become educated. She employs J. Wells Stanton, an unscrupulous but polished rascal, to teach her the manners of polite society. Robert Ledyard, son of the promoter, comes home after being expelled from college for minor infractions of the college rules, and is driven away by his angered father to earn his own living. Stanton and Baldwin have a disagreement which results in Stanton's dismissal, and meeting young Ledyard, he knocks him out with a blackjack and robs him. Susie and her father find him in the roadway and take him home. He gives an assumed name and accepts the position of tutor made vacant by the dismisal of Stanton. He falls in love with Susie and one day he is recognized by a neighbor who notifies his parents of his whereabouts. They rush to the Baldwin home to "save him" from the wiles of Susie and arrive just as Stanton enters the house for the purpose of cracking the Baldwin safe. Young Ledyard discovers Stanton in the library and the latter is about to shoot the young man when Susie prevents murder by shooting Stanton in the arm. Explanations with the Ledyards follow and when Susie kisses Mrs. Ledyard, a reconciliation ensues and all ends happily.

CATCH LINES

A delightful little comedy-drama of manners in which an untutored girl from the California goldfields proves herself the measure of a grande dame of San Francisco society.

Pete Baldwin didn't know how to wield a fork in the prescribed manner of society, but his heart was in the right place—and his daughter was charming from tip to toe—Society eventually just had to take them in.

Susie Baldwin hated to see her father made fun of because he went through dinner without using all the silver laid beside his plate—and so she hired a tutor for him—and for herself. The tutor turned out to be a crook but, innocently enough, he was responsible for Susie's romance after all.

Enid Bennett never disappoints. "Fuss and Feathers" is another comedy-drama, the equal of which you will have to wait long to see.

SUGGESTIONS

Reports indicate that the public wants comedy-drama or plain comedy in these days. It seems to be the inevitable reaction after war. If this is the case with your patrons you can book "Fuss and Feathers," advertise it as a nice, clean comedy-drama and be successful with it. To be sure the picture does not offer you any great angle from which to advertise it except for the fact of Enid Bennett's appearance. While this star is not one of the biggest, she has appeared in so many attractive subjects of the same nature as this that it is certain she has a following of no mean proportions. Let it be known that she is in this picture and to plant her work still more firmly in the minds of your audience mention her last pictures, such as "When Do We Eat," "The Marriage Ring," "The Desert Wooing" and "The Biggest Show on Earth."

"THE KEY TO POWER"—EDUCATIONAL

Human Touches Make This Interesting

POSSESSING many of the qualifications that help make a picture entertaining, "The Key to Power" should find a sympathetic reception among pleasure seekers. To begin with, the story is human; and as it is interpreted in a natural way, it appeals to your emotions.

The hero wins your sympathy from the start for the following reason: Although he is wronged by being misunderstood, he bears the insults silently, preferring to let his actions prove his case, as happens at the close of the story.

Another incident that helps make the picture appealing is the attachment shown by the heroine's brother to the hero at the beginning of the story; also later, when everybody seems to be against him. Since you sympathize with the hero, it is natural for you to wish that others do the same. So when you see the young brother stick to the hero, it gives you great pleasure. You feel equally pleased to see the hero reciprocate that friendship.

Besides the human element, the story contains thrills and suspense; and as the action of the plot is progressive, it holds your interest undiminished till the end.

The picture is clean and will undoubtedly have a wide appeal.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

"The Key to Power" will be the featured attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This picture, the first feature offered by the Educational Films Corporation, presents a thrilling drama enacted around the coal fields of West Virginia. Besides its entertainment purposes it aims to show the immense value of coal to the land, particularly in times of war. Truly it is a Key to all our Power. Intermingled with the dramatic story there are interesting scenes taken around these coal mines of the middle eastern section of the United States. Or perhaps we should not say intermingled. Rather do these scenes form a background to the dramatic action of the picture, a background novel and different from that seen in the average feature picture.

"The Key to Power" was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and Caroline Gentry and produced under the direction of William Parke. It tells of the causes which led a United States Army Captain to surrender his commission and remain at home to look after his father's coal mines. Because he elects to take this course he is belittled by the girl he loves and her father, an old general who believes that no other profession should come before the army. But when it develops that German agents were seeking to gain control of the mine and that Bruce's remaining at home prevented them, the girl, at least, has nothing but praise to offer in his behalf.

The leads of the picture are taken by Hugh Thompson and Claire Adams. A good character portrayal is contributed by J. H. Gilmour while Frazier Nounan's playing of the "kid brother" is a delightful bit. Others are J. J. Dunn, Tom Burrough, Fred Radcliffe, George Pauncefort, Stephen Grattan and L. F. Kennedy. All in all, Educational's first venture in the feature field is a striking success.

Bruce Wendell, a West Point graduate and Captain in the American army, is the son of the owner of coal mines in the middle eastern section of the United States. He is in love with Ann Blair, granddaughter of old General Blair, a man who believes that the army is the only profession to follow. Another suitor of Ann's is Lieutenant Parrish, son of the chief owner of the B. & W. Railroad, the only outlet to the Wendell coal mines. Ann favors the Captain and so too does her little brother, Bobbie.

There comes to the town just before the rumblings of war are heard, Meyer, an agent of the German government, who influences President Parrish to refuse the use of his cars to Wendell, telling him that the mine promoters will then be forced to sell out to him and he will have complete control of that coal region, being able to name his own price. Parrish is in accord with this scheme and stops his cars. As a consequence the mine is closed. Wendell makes a big fight against the railroad but is the victim of foul play on the part of Meyer and his hirelings. Before he dies he exacts a promise from Bruce to give up his commission and continue his fight.

And this Bruce does, even though his course necessitates much explaining to the Blairs. But when the United States enters the war and Wendell does not return to the army, General Blair and Ann will have nothing to do with him. Bobbie is the only one who stands up for him. His exemption claim is granted. Anne's engagement to Lieutenant Parrish is announced. The mine owners refuse to give in and Meyer resorts to further violence. He causes an explosion in the mine and Bobbie is trapped inside. Bruce rescues him. Subsequently, Bobbie and Anne are trapped by Meyer. Bobbie escapes and summons Wendell. He then rides to the fort to get Lieutenant Parrish and his men. They arrive just in time to save Ann and Wendell from Meyer's minions who are worsting the hero in a terrific combat. After that Anne understands Bruce's reasons for staying at home and so he forgives her.

SUGGESTIONS

Probably your patrons have seen the Robert Bruce pictures and the numerous other offerings released by the Educational Films Corporation. This is that company's first venture into the feature-dramatic field. Aside from presenting a forceful drama—one of the few logical dramas springing from war conditions in this country—the picture has an interesting background—the coal fields of West Virginia. You might bring this out in your advertisements as the coal fields form a novel locale and yet never are allowed to intrude on the dramatic angle of the picture.

Anything suggesting a coal mine could be used as lobby decorations for this picture, but always be sure to bring out the fact that the main action of the picture is a regular dramatic story. Due to the fact that it is laid in the coal fields and released by the Educational Films Corporation, your patrons may get the idea that it is purely an educational picture unless you take care to drive home the fact that it is a drama. If you guard against this and make use of the possibilities which the locale of the subject gives you it will be more than likely that you make a success with the offering.

CATCH LINES

A drama of love, patriotism and sacrifice enacted in the heart of the West Virginian coal fields.

———

Directed by William Parke, the man responsible for "The Yellow Ticket," "The Shine Girl" and other successes.

———

One of the largest coal mines in the country is an ever-interesting background for this drama of love and patriotism.

"WIVES AND OTHER WIVES"—AMERICAN

"One of the Best Minter's Yet," Says Harrison

"WIVES AND OTHER WIVES" is one of the best pictures released with Miss Minter starring. It contains many entertaining qualities. The action of the plot is cyclonic and you can hardly ever guess what is going to happen next, your attention is held on the screen all the time.

The story is of the comedy-drama sort, the comedy end of it leaning towards farce. The fundamental idea of the plot is the desire of the wife to make her husband jealous, so that he will show more attention to her instead of the newspapers. This, of course, is the cause of many complications.

The mix-ups caused by the miscarriage of the heroine's plot in a country house, to which all the offending parties have been invited and placed in adjoining rooms, are very laughable.

There are some thrills also caused when the jewels of a married couple are stolen by their chauffeur and maid. The latter had overheard the Mr. and Mrs. planning a fake jewel robbery to collect insurance, so they beat them to it.

It is a clean and wholesome entertainment. The new faces in the cast create a most favorable impression.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Robin Challoner.....Mary Miles Minter
Geoffrey Challoner.....Colin Chase
Judge Corcoran.....George Periolat
Mr. Norma Craig.....William Garwood
His Wife.....Margaret Shelby
By Stephen Fox.

CATCH LINES

Mary Miles Minter in one of those delicious, little intimate comedies in which the author has used the foolish jealousy of a husband as the basis for one of the best farces of the season.

Hubby was jealous and enraged. He came home to patch up the quarrel and found a man apparently intoxicated draped across his wife's bed. Quite a good cause for being jealous and enraged! Of course he didn't stop to think of the peculiar chain of circumstances that brought this stranger into his home. If he had there would have been no "Wives and Other Wives." Thank heavens, he didn't stop to think!

Comedy is the spice of life these days and "Wives and Other Wives" is one of the most effective spices procurable.

The American company only a short while ago announced its intention of producing comedies—no gruesome pictures. A promise is a promise, but to live up to one in the way this company has in the hilarious comedy, "Wives and Other Wives" is a real achievement.

AD TALK

"Wives and Other Wives," the American picture starring Mary Miles Minter, which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, is by all odds one of the most enjoyable comedies that has been seen in many a day. Written by Stephen Fox, a writer who can conjure up more comedy situations to the reel than any other author in the land, so it seems, it offers Miss Minter the role of a young bride who, but a few days after her marriage, discovers that her husband spends too much time reading the papers. So she contrives a plan to arouse his jealousy. She lets him see her sneaking some love letters into the fire and when he questions her regarding them she will not answer.

Straightway is hubby jealous. The poor fellow doesn't know that they are letters penned by his own hand. He leaves the house in something approaching a rage. Then come further complications—complications that the little married lady neither bargained for nor expected. There is a bibulous person, another married man, who constantly crosses her path, and who places her in the most compromising positions that ever a young bride was placed in. To relate them all here would be to spoil the fun awaiting you at the ——— theatre.

Miss Minter is thoroughly charming in the stellar role, while the support she receives from Colin Chase, George Periolat, William Garwood and Margaret Shelby (the star's sister) is of a sterling order. The picture was produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, a man well acquainted with comedy values. Again we repeat "Wives and Other Wives" is a real treat in the comedy line—a series of laughs not to be missed.

Mary Miles Minter plays the part of Robin Challoner, a bride of a few days. Her husband enters as she is burning some love letters and becomes very jealous. She leads him to believe that the letters are from a rival and he leaves her. In the apartment above lives a judge and his wife. They expect a certain Mr. and Mrs. Craig to call and sublease the apartment. Through error Craig gets off the elevator at the wrong floor, and wanders into the Challoner apartment. He is mistaken by the young bride for a burglar. She shoots, he faints from fright. She thinks she has killed him. She runs out for a doctor. Her husband returns and discovers Craig apparently intoxicated, in his wife's room. This further kindles the flame of jealousy and Challoner decides upon a divorce. With a view to restore the domestic equilibrium, the judge invites the young bride and her husband to his country home for a visit. Mrs. Craig is invited, as well as some mutual acquaintances, the Doubledays. Mr. Craig gets slightly intoxicated. When he learns that his wife has gone to the country he follows. Because of his condition, the butler suggests that "he sleep it off" before being presented to the company. In his befuddled condition Craig staggers into Mrs. Challoner's room, and goes to bed. She enters and believes her husband has made up his mind to come back. She discovers that it is a stranger. She screams. At the same time Mr. Challoner in the suite across the hall is confronted by Mrs. Craig. Both appear very embarrassed. Between the two couples there now develops a series of situations as they try to find out just where they do belong. The Doubledays plan a fake "robbery" in order to collect insurance on their jewelry. Their maid overhears their plans. She immediately informs the chauffeur and the two decide to get the jewelry and skip. The Doubledays make known the "robbery."

The guests are discussing the "robbery." Robin's letters are found. The judge believes the letters to be a clue to the "robbery." He informs the guests that he will place the letters in a table drawer and that by morning he expects to see the jewelry in place of the letters or he will inform the police. Robin, not wishing her letters to be exposed, endeavors to obtain them. Her husband, anxious to find out who wrote the letters, sets out upon the same mission. The Doubledays find that their jewelry has actually been stolen. Meanwhile the maid and the chauffeur prepare to get away. Robin accidentally discovers them making their getaway. She turns the culprits and the jewelry over to the judge. The maid not only admits the robbery, but tells of the Doubleday's scheme. The judge requests the Doubledays to leave his home immediately. Challoner then finds out it was his own letters that caused all the trouble, and "after the heavy storm the sun shines again."

SUGGESTIONS

This is one of those intimate comedies that are all too infrequent on the screen. It contains numerous situations that unless handled in the expert way they are here would have been merely low comedy. So get the most out of the comedy by advertising its true quality. By the use of some paintings which your artist can fix up, bringing out the "boudoir" type of the main situations in the play, you can complete an attractive display. The stills also will suffice for preparing advertising copy as well as lobby display.

When you realize the good business that Constance Talmadge's comedies are doing and take into consideration that "Wives and Other Wives" is of the same type, you should be able to create an interest in this picture that will net you a real profit.

"THE HELL CAT"—GOLDWYN

A Melodrama That Shows Skillful Treatment in Every Scene

THE measure of constructive skill spent on Geraldine Farrar's second Goldwyn picture, "The Hell Cat," is never to be reckoned with in ordinary terms. Its author, Willard Mack, while he has in the past been responsible for some inferior products of the screen, shows us in this offering that he has absorbed some of the technique of the Belasco school of melodrama—the Belasco school which made his "Tiger Rose" an enormous stage success. This consists of polishing rough melodramatic surfaces until they shine with realism.

"The Hell Cat" is thrilling in its effect. It is absorbing in its simplicity and the skill with which it has been written and produced. The acting of Miss Farrar is deeply penetrative, while Tom Santschi's rendition of the heavy lead looms as a magnificent portrayal of a character swayed by elemental passions alone.

The sweep of the western backgrounds add not a little to the effect of the melodrama. They provide a rich setting indeed for the story. And this story, let it be still further emphasized, while in the brief telling, it dwindles to the single effort of a villain to procure a woman for his own, supplanted by her fierce resistance, is so finely made from whatever angle it is viewed that its sometimes sordid aspect is surely obscured by its artistic production. By Willard Mack.
Directed by Reginald Barker.

THE STORY

Pancha O'Brien, daughter of a Wyoming sheep raiser, is loved by Sheriff Jack Webb. There is another one, Jim Dike, a squaw man, who would possess her. She rebuffs him repeatedly.

At night he comes to the O'Brien ranch and shoots down Pancha's father. The girl puts up a terrific fight and proves that she is a veritable hell cat. Dike, however, carries her away to his ranch.

Dike's squaw steals into Pancha's room, intent on stabbing her; but when Pancha explains the Indian knows that it is Dike who must be punished. She dashes off to tell the sheriff. In order to win Pancha back to responsiveness, Dike offers to marry her and take her East. The girl consents.

On the way to Cheyenne Sheriff Jack Webb and his posse spring from behind rocks and cover Jim Dike with their guns. The cattleman sits in the buckboard, stiffly erect. The posse approaches. He topples over, dead, with the dagger Pancha had wrested from the Indian in his heart.

AD TALK

Geraldine Farrar comes to the ———— theatre beginning ———— in "The Hell Cat," second in her series of Goldwyn Pictures. The international celebrity promises to acquit herself magnificently in this production, every scene of which was made in the heart of the Wyoming Rockies.

In "The Hell Cat" she is Pancha O'Brien, the daughter of a sheep raiser, and is half Spanish and half Irish. She loves and hates with equal abandon. Jim Dike, a cattleman, covets Pancha. She will have none of him, however, because she loves Sheriff Jack Webb. Dike determines that this shall not stand in the way of his desires. Again and again Pancha rebuffs him.

After he has shot O'Brien during a raid on his ranch, Dike approaches Pancha. The girl offers furious resistance, fighting Dike off until she is finally exhausted. Then Dike binds her to his horse and takes her to his lonely ranch.

How Pancha escapes from Dike forms one of the most striking climaxes ever seen on the films. It has been handled admirably well by Willard Mack, the noted Broadway playwright who wrote "The Hell Cat" specially for Miss Farrar. Mr. Mack has utilized all the constructive skill that is ever at his command and the results certainly speak for themselves. Miss Farrar is said to receive support of an unusually high calibre from Tom Santschi, who essays the role of Dike, and from Milton Sills, who carries the part of the sheriff. The production was in charge of Reginald Barker, admittedly one of the most skilful directors of the day.

CATCH LINES

This is Geraldine Farrar's second Goldwyn picture and it offers her the role of a Carmen of the western plains, known by the men out there as the Hell Cat.

The story of a woman who fought with men as a man—who fought with one man to the death and won.

SUGGESTIONS

Any way in which you can bring out the intensity and dramatic force of this picture will be appropriate for newspaper or lobby advertising.

Play Miss Farrar's name up big and be sure to accentuate the fact that the picture is a story of the West not so long ago. Many people complained that Miss Farrar did too much costume stuff. So be sure to give a definite idea of the character of this story. The role she assumes is sort of a modern Carmen and you might avail yourself of the opportunity this fact offers you by advertising it as such.

The names of Willard Mack, author, and Reginald Barker, director, should be used as the two men are leaders in their respective branches of the production business.

"THE ZERO HOUR"—WORLD

Quite an Involved Offering Dealing with Fake Clairvoyants

ONE might expect a war play from the title, but "The Zero Hour" is far from that, being built, in fact, around the fake clairvoyants that infest any city of good size. Written by the late Paul West, it tells of the tricks of two such fakirs and the unhappiness they brought to one man.

The plot is filled with situations of the frankest sort of melodrama and is rather involved, dealing as it does with two different pairs of individuals who resemble each other. As a piece of pictorial skill as applied to the dramatic side of the story, the film has several shortcomings, being in more than one case quite inconsistent in fact and travelling beyond the prescribed limits of fancy.

June Elvidge, the star, takes a dual role and sharply defines the two sisters. Frank Mayo is a suitable hero and Armand Kalisz a smooth schemer. A smaller part taken by Clio Ayers is particularly well rendered. All in all the picture is interesting as an expose of fake mediums and clairvoyants, but its dramatic shortcomings are to the fore in a force rather greater than the average.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 23.—Peter Milne.

Photographed by Philip Hatkin.

SUGGESTIONS

Your strongest advertising point as regards this production is its attack against the fake mediums and clairvoyants that invest any city of size. You might get endorsements from city officials on this subject and so get in considerable free advertising. At any rate you might use a line like: "An expose of the bogus methods employed by fake mediums and clairvoyants to fool the public" in any newspaper copy you use. People are usually interested in the subject of mediums and will more than likely be interested enough to come to your theatre and discover the methods they use.

June Elvidge, one of the most popular of the World stars, essays a dual role in this picture and defines the two characters sharply. You might advertise this fact after this fashion: "At the ——— theatre you will see June Elvidge as Fanny and Evelyn Craig. Come and see the sharpest differentiation of a dual role ever rendered by actor or actress."

AD TALK

Bruce Taunton thought that he was looking at the ghost of his dead sweetheart. He thought it was one of the many hallucinations that had come to him since her death in an automobile accident. But when the supposed ghost threw his mother's bracelet at him, he knew that the ghost was a live, human being. And then came a startling surprise. He did not find that his sweetheart was alive, but he made another astonishing and wholly unexpected discovery.

You'll see what this discovery was and also see a decidedly unusual and tremendously interesting photoplay when you see "The Zero Hour" at the ——— theatre on ———. June Elvidge is the star of this production, and she is seen in a double role—that of twin sisters, Fanny and Evelyn Craig. Miss Elvidge's double exposure work in this production is the longest on record, and the most effective.

The story told in "The Zero Hour" is of a fake medium and his efforts to extract money from his victims. An intense, unusual love story and many surprising situations, with a startling surprise as the climax of the picture, make this one of the most remarkable productions ever screened.

"The Zero Hour" is the sort of a picture that pleases everyone. Make a point of seeing it.

THE STORY

Fanny and Evelyn Craig, sisters who closely resemble one another, are students at a fashionable school, due to the saving exercised by their step-father, Micah Parish, a fake clairvoyant. Fanny, the more serious minded of the two, is constantly at odds with her sister because of her extravagance. Business is poor with Parish and when he is unable to pay the tuition he owes, the girls are sent home. Parish doesn't want his charges to know of his profession but Evelyn finds it out and is eager to assist him. She shows no hesitation in aiding to fool the many rich people who believe in the power of the medium to foretell the future.

Fanny, disgusted at her step-father, and sister, leaves their home and acquires the position of stenographer to Bruce Taunton, a young lawyer who has started a war against the fake clairvoyants, because one of them, Esau Brand, caused the death of his mother, while pretending to summon before her the spirit of her dead husband. Brand is close to Parish and, in fact, has the old man in his power. One by one Taunton attacks the mediums with the aid of the police and finally comes to Parish's place. Fanny, not wanting to see her sister and step-father jailed, goes to warn them but finds them already flown. Taunton discovers her there but she explains it away with a lie.

Later, Taunton proposes to her and she accepts. While they are on their way to the church, Taunton loses control of the car and it crashes over an embankment, killing Fanny. Taunton becomes mentally unbalanced. Brand sees a chance to make the lawyer confess his belief in spiritualism by using Evelyn as a decoy. Dressed in black she visits him every evening, pretending to be the spirit of her dead sister. On the last night Taunton pulls a revolver and declares his intention of committing suicide in order to join Fanny's spirit. Evelyn rushes forward and stops him. At the same time Brand is caught by Taunton's chauffeur and the game is up. Evelyn is a changed girl since Fanny's death and she readily accepts Taunton's love.

CATCH LINES

June Elvidge seen in a dual role—a dual role different from any other that has gone before. Don't miss this startling expose of the fake clairvoyant.

Fake mediums and clairvoyants come in for a merciless expose in "The Zero Hour," June Elvidge's latest World drama in which the star appears in a dual role.

Dealing with a love that bridged the chasm between the living and the dead.

"THE SILENT RIDER"—TRIANGLE

Roy Stewart Returns and Scores Again

AFTER such a long absence from the screen, Mr. Stewart's reappearance ought to be welcomed by all those of you who have been running his contributions; especially so, since his re-entry into the screen world marks the addition of an always welcomed good picture.

"The Silent Rider" contains many of those elements that make a picture entertaining. Rapid action of plot, splendid horse riding, thrills and suspense are here. Besides, being given a human part, the hero awakens the spectator's sympathy.

The element of surprise plays no small part in helping to make this picture entertaining. For instance, although you sympathize with the hero, you don't know he is a sheriff, sent for the purpose of rounding up the murderous cattle rustlers until towards the end.

The fascinatingly beautiful locations in a rugged country, with mountains in the background; the large number of cattle used; the exciting and thrilling scenes of real broncho busting; all these, as usual, contribute towards making the picture enjoyable.

It is a clean offering which will appeal to all those who enjoy virile photoplays, especially of the Western type.—Released Dec. 1.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

By C. M. Clark.
Directed by Cliff Smith.
Photographed by Steve Rounds.

THE STORY

Driven desperate by cattle rustlers Jim Carson, owner of the Ten Mile Ranch, appeals to the Texas rangers for aid. A reply to him states that a man will arrive in a week to clean out the rustlers.

Shortly afterwards Carson employs Bob Gordon as a puncher. A strong dislike springs up between Gordon and Dave Merrill, Jim Carson's foreman. Jim's daughter, Jean, and Bob are mutually pleased with each other.

A week later Gordon discovers Merrill branding a calf and exchanges shots with him, although he does not get an opportunity to see Merrill's face. He finds the latter's hat with the initials "D. M." in it. Gordon returns Merrill's hat to him in the presence of Jean and Carson. Merrill pretends that the hat was stolen from him as a trick by some of the punchers. Shortly afterwards, Merrill, in conjunction with some of the other cowboys on the ranch, attempts to frame up Bob on a charge of cattle rustling. The tables are turned on him and a gun battle results. Merrill seizes Jean and dashes away with her and his outlaw pals to a lonely cabin. There Jean is forced to fight for her honor with Merrill until rescued by Gordon and his pals.

AD TALK

Roy Stewart, that genial portrayer of western characters, who has won such a large following in ————, appears at the ———— theatre once again on ———— of ———— week in his latest production, "The Silent Rider." In this picture Stewart assumes the role of Bob Gordon, a Texas Ranger. Shortly after the distracted owner of a ranch has appealed to this body of men for assistance against the cattle rustlers, Bob appears and applies for work. Immediately he is plunged headlong into a fight with the rustlers, whom he finds operating under the very nose of the owner and in the guise of his employees. And also the young man falls in love with the ranch owner's daughter. Things gather to a stirring climax when Bob pursues the rustlers to their lair, rescues the girl from the leader and turns them over to justice. Not until then does he disclose his identity as the Texas Ranger summoned to look into the case.

Seldom has Mr. Stewart had a more congenial role awarded him than that of Bob Gordon. From his broad sombrero to his high-healed boots he is the typical Texas Ranger, always standing for the right and the truth and willing to fight for his principles with his fists as well as with his guns. Ethel Fleming makes an attractive feminine lead while others who appear are L. D. McKee and Leo Willis. This film was produced under the direction of Cliff Smith, than whom there is no better director of Westerns. Only a few years ago Smith was a real cowboy and even today when success as a dramatic director has come to him, he never forgets how to instil realism into his product. "The Silent Rider" is a striking example of his power to combine dramatic effect and realism.

CATCH LINES

Roy Stewart once again! This time in another breezy, exciting western, produced under the direction of Cliff Smith, a real master of his craft. Don't miss it.

In which a band of cattle rustlers is frustrated by one lone Texas Ranger! If you know what a Texas Ranger is this isn't such a great surprise after all!

"THE PRODIGAL WIFE"—SCREENCRAFT

Sex Play Considered Remarkable by News Reviewer

DO not attempt to judge this picture by its title, as you surely will be misled. Although it is a sex play to a certain extent, the way it has been treated and the power with which it affects your better emotions may be considered nothing sort of remarkable.

The plot is based on the story, "Flaming Ramparts," by Edith Barnard Delano, a writer whom you well remember from the many successful stories she wrote for Mary Pickford. It is about a mother who errs, recognizes her mistake, and becomes regenerated.

To many of you, the first part of the picture, showing the heroine abandoning her husband and baby daughter, may be considered rather bold and not fit to show to your patronage. Were the picture to continue in the same tone to the end, you would be justified in thinking so. But the mother repents, and her regeneration is so touching, so dramatic, that you hardly can prevent a tear rolling down your cheek; you hardly can help forgiving her, seeing how she suffers. Besides, while serving as a nurse to her own daughter, who is ignorant of her identity, she saves her from a similar error. It is while in this capacity, it is while so close to her own baby and yet so far, that she will move you to tears. And it is to the marvellous way Mary Boland has handled her role that this effect is credited.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

"The Prodigal Wife," the initial offering of a new producing company, Screencraft Pictures, will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The story is taken from Edith Bernard Delano's book entitled "Flaming Ramparts" and has Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton as the featured leads. Frank Reicher, formerly with the Lasky Company, directed the production and his work throughout is marked with real artistry.

The result of this combination of talent on "The Prodigal Wife" is truly a "feature of distinction"—an attraction that is dramatically powerful and wholly beautiful—a true-to-life story that rivets the interest from title to tail piece—one that is filled with human interest, with tenderness, with pathos and with sentiment.

More than this, "The Prodigal Wife" has a reason for its production. It has not been ground out simply because something had to be made. Underlying its strong, dramatic action, is a message that will grip the heart of everyone who sees it—a message which graphically reveals the frightful price of folly.

"The Prodigal Wife" will live long after the allotted time of most films—for the fineness of its feeling; for the splendid artistry with which it has been done, and for the strong, dramatic lesson back of its forceful action.

Marion Farnham is the wife of a poor but ambitious young doctor who lives in a cheap lodging house in the city. Her greatest happiness is in her little four-year-old daughter, Marna. Her husband's constant neglect of her leads to discontent and she finally elopes with another resident of the house who has suddenly struck it rich, on the condition that he secure the child also. Deserted, the young doctor leaves the city and takes little Marna into the country, where, during the long years that follow, he creates in her an ideal conception of her mother. Marion's lover, not able to find Marna, reports her dead and so both mother and child grow older, each believing the other in another land.

Mrs. Farnham loses interest in life and sinks lower and lower. She hears of her husband's success in life and resolves to appeal to him. She arrives at his country estate when he is away and sees Marna. From her lips she learns what the girl thinks of her mother and, though yearning to clasp her to her breast, goes away without speaking her heart. Later, however, she secures employment with Marna, who has married Dallas Harvey, a young writer. She delights in caring for the baby that comes to bless the life of the young couple.

And it is soon that Mrs. Farnham is granted the opportunity to do her daughter a service. She finds that Marna contemplates eloping with a false friend of her husband's, even as she did years before, and by a recitation of her own life she prevents a duplication of the tragedy. Dr. Farnham hears all this and his heart goes out to the woman he now knows to be his wife but the woman will not go back to him. To atone for her sins she goes out in the world that she may seek out and protect other young folk from treading the wrong path.

CATCH LINES

Mary Boland starred in a drama by Edith Bernard Delano—the story of a woman who sinned and who atoned by saving her daughter from following her footsteps.

Written by Edith Bernard Delano, an author who has written for Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and other prominent stars of the screen.

Directed by Frank Reicher, formerly one of the star directors on the Lasky producing staff.

Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton share stellar honors in this production, the initial product of Screencraft Pictures.

SUGGESTIONS

Screencraft makes its debut in the producing field with a feature fairly loaded with rich advertising possibilities for the exhibitor. To begin with, the title, in itself alone, has strong pulling power. Think it over—"The Prodigal Wife"—and see if it doesn't make an impression. There will be many who will come into your house on this title alone. Don't pass up this chance for business and forget about it in your anxiety to make mention of a star.

Which leads to the fact that "The Prodigal Wife" has two stars, Mary Boland, who has appeared on the screen frequently of late and who was long John Drew's leading woman on the stage, and Lucy Cotton. Miss Boland is your big card, and as she is a real actress you can go the limit on her.

Then we come to the author, Edith Bernard Delano, one of the most popular writers of fiction of the present day. Many of her works have been adapted to the screen and many of the best known stars have appeared in them. Don't fail to mention her name and the name of the original work, "Flaming Ramparts," one of the best sellers of recent books. You might procure copies of the book and use them to complete your lobby display.

Finally, there is Frank Reicher, long one of the most prominent of the directors of the Lasky studio on the Pacific Coast. He was responsible for a number of that company's successful pictures, including a number of Blanche Sweet pictures.

"The Common Cause"

(J. Stuart Blackton's Superproduction. Distributed by Vitagraph)

SUCH a perfect blending of comedy and pathos; such an ability to reach the most deeply buried heartstrings, on one hand, and get all the joys of life out of you in one continuous roar of laughter, on the other, I have never witnessed. To be honest, I never thought such a feat possible. Tears and laughter commingle in one and the same situation. In some places, you will laugh from the funny things that happen and at the same time cry from compassion; in others, you will laugh till you cry. This latter thing will happen especially in the scenes showing the Tommy, Sammie and the Poilu playing cards. The Poilu, as he says, can speak a "leetle" English, but not when playing cards. He gets too "Eggzited."

As the title indicates, "The Common Cause" is a picture produced for the purpose of showing how the Allied soldiers fought shoulder to shoulder till they won the war. It depicts the perfect harmony and co-operation that existed among them. It shows the nature of the Allied soldier both under the strain and at play.

The few studio-made battle scenes used are no discredit to the real ones. In fact, I am sure the real ones could not be as perfectly co-ordinated and as pleasing to the eye as the ones shown in this picture.

The love story is logically developed. It ends in a way that satisfies you. The cast is excellent, but Lawrence Grossmith, as Tommy Atkins, deserves special mention. He handles his role very skilfully, getting the most comedy out of every situation. The Blackton children also deserve a share of the credit. Anthony Kelly—the sure-fire author—wrote the screen version.

The picture contains all the elements necessary, such as human element (that of patriotic appeal), excitement, thrills, and suspense. They are all intermingled with pleasing comedy, resulting in an exceptionally pleasing, clean entertainment.—Length, 7 reels. —P. S. Harrison.

Red Cross Official Films

(Distributed Through General Exchanges)

FOUR of the Red Cross Official Films were shown for review last week, including "The Greatest Gift," a one reel propaganda picture for the Christmas Drive. This shows in an Egyptian, an East Indian and a biblical episode, the joys and happiness that come with giving. These episodes are followed by modern scenes—an allegory on the gifts of God, scenes in a Belgian village and Christmas in a city tenement. There follow statements from Generals Foch and Pershing and President Wilson as to the wonderful work done by the Red Cross. The whole reel is a most effective appeal for this world-worthy cause. The film was photographed and directed by Lewis W. Physioc from a scenario by Hamish McLaurin and was produced through the courtesy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Many of this company's players donated their services.

"The Kiddies of No Man's Land" is an appealing reel showing the work done by the Red Cross for the fatherless children of France. A more heart-rending cry for donations to the organization could not be pictured.

"Serbia Victorious" shows the work done by the Serbs in the war. Trench life and trench fighting have been caught by the camera and it is all exceedingly interesting as these are the first of pictures of Serbia brought to this country.

"The Peace Celebration in Paris" is an hitherto exclusive picture, showing the manner in which Parisians went mad on November 11 much in the same manner as did Americans.

Clara Beranger Enters Free Lance Field

Clara Beranger, until recently a member of the World Film Corporation's scenario staff, has entered the free lance field and hereafter will devote her time to the preparation of both original stories and continuities. Her experience as a writer of motion pictures dates back eight years ago, when she contributed a one reel story each week to the old Edison Company.

A number of her pictures are yet to be seen on the World program. On January 20, an original story for which she also prepared the continuity entitled "The Bluffer" will appear with June Elvedge in the stellar role. This will be followed by "The Heart of Gold," with Louise Huff, "The Love Net" with Madge Evans, "The Unveiling Hand" with Kitty Gordon and "The Hand Invisible" with Montagu Love.

Miss Beranger is also author of "The Interloper," one of Kitty Gordon's most successful pictures, while "The Appearance of Evil" and "The Grouch" contained her name as scenarioist. She is no stranger in the free lance field, having followed this method of marketing her product after her Edison affiliations. Vitagraph, Famous Players and other big companies have produced her scripts.

Previous to her connection with World Film she was a member of the Fox scenario department, while recently she prepared a number of the Baby Marie Osborne-Pathe pictures, including "Milady of the Beanstalk," "Dolly Does Her Bit" and "The Voice of Destiny."

Reviewers Favor Edith Day in Film

It appears that Edith Day, who appears in the leading feminine role in "A Romance of the Air," has made quite a hit with the reviewers of the country. In a statement sent out this week by the publicity representative of the picture it is made known that several of the women reviewers on the New York dailies commented very highly upon Miss Day's personality and screen ability.

In conclusion, the announcement says: "Miss Day first made her debut on the screen with Lillian Walker in 'The Grain of Dust.' 'A Romance of the Air' is only her second picture, and if she continues to make the same progress in three years in the pictures as she has on the musical comedy stage, where in that brief time she has arisen from the chorus, she will doubtless have her own company one of these days."

"The Dawn of Reckoning" for Dorothy Phillips

After a census from executives and literary workers of the Universal, it was tentatively understood that "The Dawn of Reckoning" would be the title of the multiple reel film featuring Dorothy Phillips.

Miss Phillips, accompanied by Allen Holubar, her director, and Frank J. Lawrence, scenario and title editor, arrived last week from the coast.

Select Has Four for December

Norma Talmadge, Alice Brady, Constance Talmadge and Mitchell Lewis Appear in Select Releases This Month

Anna Q. Nilsson Is Scheduled to Appear in "Cheating Cheaters" with Clara Kimball Young in the Select Production

THE group offered by Select Pictures Corporation for the month of December, as announced by General Manager Arthur S. Kane, provides for what they believe to be four of the strongest productions ever issued by Select Pictures.

The stars, the subjects, and the order in which they will be distributed are Constance Talmadge in "A Lady's Name," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick; Mitchell Lewis, Select's newest star, in "Code of the Yukon," Norma Talmadge in "The Heart of Wetona," and Alice Brady in "In the Hollow of Her Hand."

Constance Talmadge's December picture, "A Lady's Name," is a screen version of the stage success of the same name by Cyril Harcourt. The scenario is by Julia Crawford Ivers, and the direction is by Walter Edwards. "A Lady's Name" is the story of a young lady writer who advertises for a husband—and gets him; but she didn't want one when she advertised. The reason she advertised was to get literary material, and the reason she married is what makes the story.

Another picture included in Select's output for the month brings to the screen for the first time under a Select banner, Mitchell Lewis, whose work in pictures of the storied northwest is well known. Mr. Lewis' vehicle will be "Code of the Yukon," a story of the northwestern gold fields. It was written by Anthony Paul Kelly, who picturized "The Cavell Case," Select's big special in which Julia Arthur is seen as Edith Cavell, the woman the Germans shot. The scenario and direction are by Bertram Bracken.

In her latest Select picture, "The Forbidden City," Norma Talmadge was seen as a Chinese, but in this star's December offering we find her a sloe-eyed Indian maid. "The Heart of Wetona" is the name of the story. Mary Murillo wrote the scenario and it was directed by Sidney A. Franklin.

Last in Select's announcement of its December attractions, is Alice Brady, whose forthcoming picture will be "In the Hollow of Her Hand," a story by George Barr McCutcheon, author of the Graustark series and a dozen popular novels.

Like all George Barr McCutcheon stories, "In the Hollow of Her Hand" has a "different" theme. A woman tries to protect the woman who kills her husband, and Alice Brady is the one who is held in the hollow of the other woman's hand. Charles Maigne wrote the scenario and also directed the production.

Tarkington Baker Completes Universal Tour

TARKINGTON BAKER, publicity director for the Universal, arrived in New York after an absence of about a month, in which time he visited every Universal exchange in the northern half of the country and Canada, reorganizing the publicity forces and facilities throughout.

His trip westward is declared to have been marked by a continuous expression of interest and indorsement from newspaper and motion picture editors, and he visited members of this fraternity in every important city and presented the possibilities of co-operation between the press and picturedom for the future.

Mr. Baker's reports to the Universal are declared to prove beyond a doubt that newspapers are willing and anxious to develop extensive treatment of motion picture news. In demonstration of this feeling, many of them since Mr. Baker's interviews, have published special articles and news statements of Universal subjects suggested by the visitor, it is said.

The Universal man appointed a number of special correspondents, whose duties will be to create sectional news for the Universal, and disseminate all the general news available for their territory, in a systematic fashion.

Novel Twist Claimed

A really novel twist is said to have been given to the comedy drama plot in "Fuss and Feathers," which serve as a Paramount starring vehicle for Enid Bennett, the Ince star, and will be released December 1. Julien Josephson, one of the Coast scenarists, did the story, which was directed by Fred Niblo.

abrupt, with the result that the machine almost turned a back flop. Duncan was at the wheel, and he alighted at the bottom with the machine without injury. One of the men who clung to the rear seat was thrown twenty feet, but not badly injured. These scenes were for the fifth episode of "The Man of Might."

DeMille Goes Eastward

Cecil B. De Mille having completed "Do Not Change Your Husband," the reversal of conditions for "Old Wives for New," will leave the latter part of this week for New York on his annual pilgrimage to the white way. He expects to be in the metropolis less than a week, when he will return to the coast to make additional subjects.

Chester Withey, maker of "The Hun Within," and who has been directing at the Lasky studio, upon the expiration of his contract with the Famous Players-Lasky, signed for a year with Joseph Schenck, and leaves about December 1 for New York, where he will alternate in the direction of Norma Talmadge with Chester Franklin.

George Melford, who has been at the eastern F. P.-L. studio directing Billie Burke, has returned to the coast, and will, within a day or two, start the making of a subject starring Ethel Clayton.

Bryant Washburn has finished "Venus in the East," and Robert Vignola is directing Shirley Mason in a comedy-drama in which she is supported by Niles Welch.

Additional producing activities will be commenced at the Fox studios during the coming week when two additional companies will begin work. One is headed by Peggy Hyland, who has just arrived from the East, and who will be directed by Harry Millarde. The other new unit is that of the Tom Mix company which is making "Fakin' for God." Edward J. LeSaint will be the director of this, and it will have a cast that includes Kathleen Conners as leading woman, George Berrell, B. M. Turner and others.

Frank Lloyd, after completing the filming of "For Freedom," starring William Farnum, has returned to Los Angeles, and will shortly take up the filming of a production based on the reconstruction following the signing of the peace terms.

The other two companies at work at this studio include those headed by the Fox children, and the other directed by Lynn Reynolds, and having Gladys Brockwell as star.

New Goldwyn Company

The coming week will see an additional Goldwyn company put to work. Reginald Barker will direct the filming of a Rex Beach story titled, "The Brand." Russell Simpson is on his way to the coast from the East to take the leading role in this subject. It has been decided to make the next Pauline Frederick picture in the East, and so the star will not arrive in Los Angeles until in January. Mae Marsh, who recently suffered a nervous collapse, has not regained her health sufficiently to resume work, and work will not be started on another Tom Moore picture for at least two weeks, by which time Harry Beaumont, the director, will be back from a short vacation in New York.

President Samuel Goldfish has been expected at the Los Angeles studio for several weeks, but this week it was stated he would not reach here until the second week in December.

Work at Griffith studio has not been resumed owing to the continued illness of principals of D. W. Griffith's company. Lillian Gish has been dismissed from the hospital following illness of influenza and her sister, Dorothy, who heads the Paramount Company productions, is still confined at the institution. Robert Harron is now greatly recovered from his recent illness but has not resumed work. Mr. Griffith has been devoting his time to editing three productions nearing completion and in the preparation of stories for future making. Elmer Clifton, director of the Dorothy Gish company, has been making scenes for the Griffith military picture being prepared for Provost Marshal Crowder.

The Clara Kimball Young producing company has finished the filming of "Cheating Cheaters" and when this is edited, General Manager Harry Garson and Miss Young will go to New York to make arrangements for future releasing. It is definitely stated by Mr. Garson that this is the last subject with this star for the Select Pictures program. By the time "Cheating Cheaters" is edited the Blanch Sweet subject made under the direction of Marshall Neilan, "The Unpardonable Sin," will be ready and Mr. Garson will have a print of this for showing in New York and then make arrangements for its release.

Reed Gets Selig Plant

J. Parker Reed, Jr., who has been associated with Thomas H. Ince, in a managerial capacity, has organized a company and leased the Selig Edendale studio for the making of one picture. Louise Glaum is to be the star of this which is from a story and scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan. Alan Dwan is supervising director and Arthur Rossen is making a large number of the scenes. The entire cast has not been selected and no title has been announced. It is understood the subject will be made for the independent market.

S.—Bert Lennon also.

WE'RE SCOOPED!

After these many weeks of weary toil to enlighten the film world on why the wheels turn backwards, we learn that the fertile brain of a press agent beat us to it these many months. He was employed by Tom Ince, and sent out a story offering a prize to anyone who would offer a remedy for effectively preventing the wheels from turning backwards, without even consulting his boss or any cameraman of the studio. Yes, the answers came by thousands, and telegrams too, and many of them said: "Tom, you're a boob. Most every cameraman has known a remedy for the phenomena for years." Then the P. A. asked the boss, and the boss, who had been stunned by the many replies and not knowing their cause, proceeded to enlighten the P. A., who has since been P. Aing for someone else. And so, inasmuch as we now learn that practically everyone of the industry knew why the wheels turn backwards, and knew how to stop them from turning backwards, HOOKUM decided to eliminate any further discussion in these here columns.

Bone Dry Bill Sets Milwaukee Exhibitors to Thinking

THE bone dry bill which has just passed and which will affect Milwaukee to a very marked degree is attracting much attention from Milwaukee theatre managers. Now that the peace celebrations and the "flu" bans are over the exhibitors are beginning to wonder just how much the closing of all saloons is going to affect their business. Will it help or improve business, is the question asked by practically every one of the big down town exhibitors. At present the majority of the managers are rather divided as to the exact effect.

"I am very doubtful whether or not the bone dry bill will help business as much as many of the exhibitors think it will, said Frank Cook, manager of the Princess theatre, and a veteran exhibitor. "If you will recall when the cabarets were closed many predicted that business would boom but their passing had little if any effect on our business. Any one who hasn't got the movie bug by this time is pretty hopeless and the closing of the saloons may serve to keep many people home. However, I am not rash enough to make any predictions as to what effect the new law is going to have."

Manager George Landau of the Butterfly theatre says that it is a little too early to make any prediction as to just what the effect of the new bill is going to have on business. Many of the managers look for a big increase in their business when the new law takes effect. They say that many of those who spend their time and money in the saloon and palm gardens will have no place else to go but the photoplay house should profit.

What Detroit Is Doing

HIGHLAND PARK'S chief of police has decided that Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" is not moral entertainment and the film has been banned in this suburban city of Detroit. The picture was screened for the chief with members of several women's clubs present. "Theda must wear clothes if she is to appear in Highland Park," says the chief.

M. J. CHAPLIN, of the Metropolitan company, Detroit, maker of the Detroit Free Press film edition, reports numerous new bookings for his combined Free Press weekly and the Gaumont News or Graphic. The Metropolitan company turns out from 200 to 500 feet of local scenes each week and these are advertised through the co-operation of the newspaper.

THE REX THEATRE, formerly the Annex, re-decorated and furnished, opened in Saginaw on Thanksgiving day. Fred J. Durkee is the manager.

HERBERT WEIL, of Port Huron, controlling three theatres in this city, has just purchased the Opera House at Capac, Mich., for pictures. It will be a continuation of the Weil circuit.

MICHIGAN THEATRES have bid adieu to lightless nights. W. K. Prudden, state fuel administrator, issued notice last Saturday that the ban was off.

WITH THE EXCEPTION of Bay City, Michigan is practically all open today. Only in this place are the theatres closed because of the "Flu."

HAL H. SMITH, manager of the Ferry Field, Detroit, visited New York last week to gather new ideas for his big residential theatre.

Chicago Nourishes Anti-Yellow Dog Club

THIS photograph was taken in front of the Milford theatre, one of Ascher Bros.' Chicago houses located on the North Side at Milwaukee and Crawford Aves., and shows the gathering of an Anti-Yellow Dog Club, organized by Mr. Will Weinshanker, manager of the theatre. The organization has a membership of over 1,200 boys, and is one of 94 clubs in the state of Illinois. They have been organized since the production of "The Yellow Dog" feature made by the Jewel Film Company, which was released October 15. This is a remarkable showing when the time is taken into consideration, and is undoubtedly due to the aggressive advance advertising campaign of the Jewel Film Company, supplemented by the endeavors of the local managers booking the picture.

New Plan to Organize Michigan Exhibitors

A PLAN to organize the theatre owners in Michigan, a brand new organization, has been launched but so far nothing definite or tangible has been proposed. The spirit of Detroit's leading managers and owners is that both city and state should have a strong organization, one that would have influence with state legislature when it meets in January and it has been proposed that a representative should be stationed in Lansing, the state capital, to help in killing unfavorable censorship and other laws. Considerable adverse legislation was introduced two years ago when the legislature met and undoubtedly the theatres will be compelled to defend their business again this year.

What Racine Is Doing

MOVIE picture business is again becoming normal in Racine, All the theatres are planning big features two weeks ahead of schedule time, and announcing it, in hopes of again getting the fans in the "habit." The influenza epidemic, however, is again becoming serious here, although the cases are not near so acute as they have been, and the closing of the theatres and other places of amusement, is not as yet predicted. However, everybody going up town may soon be required to wear masks as a precaution. Regardless of this, movie lovers are turning out in fair numbers again, and the moving picture business is at a moderate ebb.

THE RIALTO, without a doubt, is offering the people the biggest thing the week of all theatres here, as far as big features are concerned. "The Forbidden City" is what seems to attract the people most, and is being highly advertised. The management is certain of making this production a drawing card. A Japanese souvenir will be given to every woman attending the afternoon performances. The lobby and main entrance is handsomely decorated in Japanese lanterns of all sizes, Oriental banners, and parasols, of both the miniature and very largest sizes, which catch the eye the moment one enters. Norma Talmadge will star in this production. Other of the big features booked are Clara Kimball Young in "The Road Through the Dark," Harold Lockwood in "Pals First," Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat"; "Eye for Eye," starring Nazimova, the star of stars, and Tom Moore in the Goldwyn production, "Just for Tonight." The Rialto and the Palace, under the same management, show exclusively in this city the Goldwyn, Metro, Select, Paramount and Art Craft productions. The Rialto camera-man was on the job last Monday taking pictures of the peace celebration here, which were played at that theatre to packed houses Sunday and Monday. To complete the surroundings, when the picture, "The Forbidden City," is shown, incense will be burned.

PERHAPS THE BIGGEST surprise of the week, if not the year, as far as the movies are concerned, was when Mr. Lammareaux, who has managed both the Palace and the Rialto since the latter's opening, handed in his resignation to the Friedman Company, owners. Mr. Lammareaux gave as his reasons the fact that he had been offered a bigger thing with a New York firm in that city. He will leave soon to take up his new work there. Just what his new position is is not known, but it is certain that it is something promising if it induced him to sever his connection with the Friedman people, wth whom he had become well attached. Mr. Lammareaux has proven his ability as a movie manager in Racine as well as Chicago, and local people are certain that he will be successful, whatever his new position may require.

EVIDENTLY the Palace is drawing a big majority of the afternoon crowds. Wallace Reid in "His Many Millions," will be the special attraction there for the Turkey Day. Rex Beach's screen classic, "The Heart of the Sunset," and Bert Lytell in "Unexpected Places," will also be the features at this theatre this week. Ethel Clayton is booked for Sunday, in the Paramount production, "Woman's Weapons." Other big features are being billed for the Palace, which is considered almost on a par with its sister theatre, the Rialto.

Will Weinshanken, Manager of Ascher Brothers' Milford Theatre, Chicago, Organized an Anti-Yellow Dog Club, Which Is Making Itself Heard in Connection with Jewel's "The Yellow Dog"

LAST WEEK the Rex played William Farnum in "Les Miserables," two nights to packed houses. Business is booming at this theatre again, and the management is confident they can put their features over with a punch. Frank Keenan in "The Long Chance," "Lillian Gish in "Children Pay," and Alice Brady in "At the Mercy of Men," were the big productions that drew so well last week. Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," will be shown again Sunday at this theatre, through special request of the patrons. Last time this picture was shown the house was so packed that some of the fans had to be turned away. In the next week's program Bessie Love will star in "The Great Adventure." Mildred Harris will be seen in "Borrowed Clothes," while the rest of the week's program has not yet been booked. Managers Blumberg and Norman will make another trip to Chicago soon, where they will bill all big features now on the market.

THE BIJOU is perhaps planning a surprise, as they have nothing billed for next week as yet, and Manager McKivett is not having very much to say. "The Romance of Tarzan," which was played there all last week, proved to be a big crowd drawer, however.

They Say in Chicago That—

MR. CHAS. C. PYLE, general sales manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, Mallers Building, Chicago, is back at his desk after an extended Eastern trip. While he landed with somebody else's grip full of soiled linen and a bottle of booze, he desires to have it thoroughly understood that the bottle is intact and awaits the owner.

BIRCH WORMALD, manager of the Majestic theatre, La Salle, Ill., was a soldier of Uncle Sam for three weeks only. When he reached Camp Grant he could not pass the physical examination.

GEORGE DORMAN is the new owner of the Colonial theatre, La Salle, Ill.

AL SPITZER in town recently, the gentleman who handles Billy West, is going West with West.

MRS. H. W. TAYLOR, La Salle, Ill., is playing in hard luck. Just six months ago her husband died and last week her theatre, the Majestic, was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Taylor figures that the third time brings good luck, so she is going to rebuild the Majestic.

JOE RODERICK, manager of the Milwaukee Universal Exchange, and I. Gettleson, manager of the Jewel Exchange of the same city, spent Thanksgiving Day in Chicago.

MESSRS. COOK AND ALIAS, formerly of the Hawaiian Troupe of vaudeville performers, have opened the Palace theatre, Mendota, Ill., to good business, running straight pictures.

HARRY BERMAN, general manager of the Jewel Production Co., stopped off in Chicago again this week on his way back east.

ACTING CHIEF OF POLICE ALCOCK recently denied a permit to the film called "The Finger of Justice." In making his decision he said: "This picture depicts vice conditions in San Francisco, and there is no reason for it to be shown in Chicago. We have no red light district and no organized vice. This is a clean city and requires no lessons of the kind taught in the film." The censorship board also declared against the showing of the film. Suit for $50,000 was threatened by the Rev. Paul Smith of San Francisco, sponsor of the film, against Ald. Frank J. Link, as a result of supposed statements made against the film by Mr. Link.

ISADORE BERNSTEIN, manager of the Lyric and Star theatres at Lincoln, Ill., reports the loss of his two brothers, Mike and Ben. They died within twenty-four hours of each other during the recent influenza epidemic.

JAMES LOWRY has purchased from H. A. Guth the old Grand theatre at Granite City, Ill. He has rechristened his theatre the Princess.

F. L. BENNETT succeeds Nate Erber as manager of the Lincoln Square theatre in Decatur, Ill.

EUGENIA GETTNER has been appointed the manager of the New Miners theatre at Collinsville, Ill.

R. A. COTE, owner of the picture show at Madison, Ill., has just opened up the Liberty theatre at East St. Louis, Ill.

"THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS," the new Universal serial featuring Eddie Polo, has just run a solid week at the Casino theatre, Chicago, to big business. The first time a serial was ever played for that length of time at the Casino.

H. ALBERT MARTIN, Bee Hive Exchange, and F. W. Lucas of the Chicago Metro office, held a young convention in Springfield lately, where they met M. J. Goldbaum of the St. Louis Universal, representative of the United and a representative of the Jewel and several others. Harry Weiss, Central Film Company, Chicago, was a guest of honor, and the party broke up when other hotel guests complained to the hotel clerk.

RALPH W. ABBETT, manager of the Universal Indianapolis Exchange, has been spending a few days in Chicago.

IT IS RUMORED that Carl Mueller, owner of the Spencer Square theatre, Rock Island, is figuring on taking over the Bio theatre, Moline, Ill.

A MUCH TALKED OF production hailed as a great Spectacular Patriotic Romance, "The Birth of a Race," will open at the Playhouse December 1 for a run. An orchestra of thirty musicians will be used.

A. C. NELSON sold out his Colonial theatre at Galesburg, Ill., to H. Gramp, who owns the theatre at Rockland, Ill. Mr. Nelson sold out on account of poor health and is in a critical condition at Phoenix, Ariz.

THOMAS J. McSPADDEN, manager of the Colonial theatre, Galesburg, Ill., was formerly manager of the West theatre in the same city. He started on his new duties last week.

THE Select Picture, "The One Woman," story by Thomas Dixon, has played a seven-day run at the Rose Theatre in the Loop, four days at Balaban & Katz's Riviera, and three days at their Central Park theatre, to big business.

ALEX KINKIN, operator at the Majestic theatre, Spring Valley, Ill., after five weeks of illness died of influenza.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

GUS KERASOTES, of the Royal and Savoy theatres, who also owns, with Mr. Coutrakon, a confectionery located in one of the best and busiest spots in town, turned over the store to the Sangamon County Red Cross for one day, Wednesday, November 20, and every penny taken in was given to the organization. The sum realized was $198.20. The sum given represented the gross receipts of the day, and not the profits.

BEN ROVIN, who runs the Amuse-U, has installed a brand new Gold Fibre Minusa Screen, purchased of Elmer Ott, local supply agent. Ben says the way to hold your business is to give your patrons the best of everything, and the Amuse-U certainly does not lack for patronage. The man Rovin is a good showman.

"ALL FOR HUMANITY," a three-reel official Red Cross film, was shown at the High School as a feature of the annual meeting of the Sangamon County Chapter, Wednesday, November 20. It was the first time the picture was shown in the state of Illinois. Norma Talmadge loaned her studios for the making of the play, and it stars Jack Garland, Gloria Goodwin and Betty Clark. Several scenes showing the Red Cross working during the battling in Italy brought much applause.

LOUIS KERASOTES had bad luck with his show on Sunday, November 24. It did not arrive until 6 in the evening, and Louis sent it back to the exchange. He substituted with some reels he had and borrowed others, and the day's business was one of the biggest in the history of the Savoy. For the balance of the week of November 20, the Savoy booked: Monday, Gladys Leslie in "The Wooing of Princess Pat" and "Looking Them Over," with Syd Chaplin; Tuesday, William Russell in "Up Romance Road"; Wednesday, Number 10 of 'The Brass Bullet," a Nestor comedy and Universal Weekly; Thursday, Monroe Salisbury in 'Winner Takes All"; Friday, chapter I of "The Iron Test," with Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, and other features; Saturday, Louise Glaum in "Wedlock"; Sunday, William Duncan in the third chapter of "A Fight for Millions," Neal Hart in "The Husband Hunter" and Alice Howell in "Cupid vs. Art."

PETERSBURG, a city near here, has again been quarantined, and the report is that the theatres will not be allowed to open before January 1.

THE CAPITOL is doing nicely with Select, Triangle, Metro and "specials" occasionally. "Hands Up!" Pathe serial, is shown every Sunday, and Manager Maisel reports that on November 17 he played to 1,014 "kids." This is believed to be the record for children's tickets in local theatres.

THE ROYAL program for the week of November 24-30 ran as follows: Sunday and Monday, "The Sign Invisible," with Mitchell Lewis; Tuesday, June Elvidge in 'The Cabaret"; Wednesday, "Love Watches"; Thursday, Friday and Saturday, "Why America Will Win," Fox special production.

THE VAUDETTE had one of its best weeks November 17-23, with Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" and Bryant Washburn in "The Gypsy Trail." The last picture had some of the most beautiful scenes, interiors and exteriors, that has ever been seen in a Paramount picture.

MARK LUTHER, local man who is with one of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" shows playing Southern territory, has returned to Oklahoma to continue the tour which was stopped by the "flu" ban. Luther says business was great up to the time the disease made such a rapid gain, and looks for big patronage now that the South has cleared up again.

NEWMAN, traveler and lecturer, made his first local appearance at the Chatterton on Thanksgiving Day, giving his pictures of Paris in 1918. Two other shows will be given, on December 3 and December 10. The subjects for the last two days are France in Wartime and Italy in Wartime.

"PRIVATE PEAT" had four fair days at the Gaiety, November 17, 18, 19 and 20. Mae Marsh followed in "Hidden Fires," and did nicely for three days. With Peat was a James Montgomery Flagg comedy, and with Miss Marsh one of Bill Parsons' best efforts. Bill is quite a favorite here, many remembering him since the days he hustled policies for the Franklin Life Insurance Company.

"THE VIGILANTES" did well for the Princess three days. Manager Kunz boosted the price of admission, and garnered some extra change in this way. Milton Sills in "Married in Name Only," followed for two days and played to satisfactory patronage. The last two days of the week went to J. Warren Kerrigan in "Prisoners of the Pines," a new Hodkinson drama.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE had two good days at the Lyric November 24 and 25, with "Tell It to the Marines." The youngsters are big favorites here and draw well every time. Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney" was the attraction on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 26 and 27, and Evelyn Nesbit in "The Woman Who Gave," a Fox production, was booked for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 28, 29 and 30.

THE PRINCESS scored heavily with Catherine Calvert in "Marriage," a Sherry Picture, on November 24, 25 and 26. "Sins of Ambition," an Ivan production, came on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 27 and 28. Louise Glaum will be the Thanksgiving attraction, playing in "The Goddess of Lost Lake."

"PALS FIRST," a Screen Classic production with Harold Lockwood, came to the Princess on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, December 1, 2 and 3.

D. W. GRIFFITH'S latest offering, "The Greatest Thing in Life," was the attraction at the Gaiety on December 1, 2, 3 and 4. On the same program was "Fatty" Arbuckle's latest comedy, "The Sheriff." The following Sunday will see Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona" and Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

SPRINGFIELD theatre owners were alarmed by the rumors that Bloomington and Decatur, two nearby cities, were closed again by the "flu." Investigation proved that the report was erroneous.

THE VAUDETTE put on "All for Humanity" for one day along with its regular program and did some extra business. This was the Red Cross film in three reels, the official picture of the great organization.

DR. B. L. RENFRO, owner of the Empress theatre, southside neighborhood house, says business has not quite got back to normal since the reopening, folks being still a bit timid of the "flu." However, this must not be taken that business is not satisfactory, for it is. Some of the pictures shown at the Empress this week are: "A Fight for Millions," the Eagle's Eye," and a Big "V" comedy, on Monday; Tuesday, Ethel Barrymore in "The Greatest Power"; Wednesday, Alice Brady in "Woman and Wife"; Thursday, "The Trap"; Friday, Bushman and Bayne in "Under Suspicion"; Saturday, Lillian Walker in "A Grain of Dust"; Sunday, Tom Mix in "Western Blood."

THE GAIETY surely struck something good with De Mille's

Advertise in the Central States

"The Squaw Man." Nothing finer has ever been shown at the big theatre, and big crowds were lavish in their praise of the production. The cast was a delight, and the work of Ann Little stood out with its artistry. "Whose Little Wife Are You?" a Mack Sennett comedy, was also on the bill, and it was good. Few in the audience knew that Wayland Trask, one of the principals, had died a few days before. Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week" comes to the Gaiety on Thanksgiving Day to stay out the rest of the week. "Mongrels," a Fox Sunshine comedy, will be on the same program.

MANAGER LUCAS, of the Chicago Metro office, was in the city this week and booked some of his attractions. The Princess has contracted for "An Eye for an Eye," with Nazimova, and "Pals First," with Harold Lockwood. Both of these plays should make money for the theatre.

THE LYRIC had a fine four days with Peggy Hyland in "Marriages Are Made" and Edith Storey in "The Silent Woman." The last three days of the week were not so good. Fox's "The Prussian Cur" was the attraction, and the only explanation that can be given because of the dull trade is that the public has had its fill for awhile of the military drama.

GUS KERASOTES booked "Why America Will Win," the Fox play based on the life of General Pershing. It was shown for three days, starting Thanksgiving Day. "The Yellow Dog" is another to be secured for the Royal.

THE MAJESTIC is now showing the fifth chapter of "A Fight for Millions." Manager Riordan states that his patrons are taking to the serial better than any ever shown at the theatre. Gaumont Weekly and Official Allied War Review are also used at the Majestic.

ETHEL CLAYTON in "Women's Weapons" and Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Range" are the pictures booked at the Vaudette for the week of December 1-7. The first of the new Burton Holmes Travelogues also starts at the same time.

BUSINESS is a trifle off at all the theatres at present. Managers are at a loss to explain why. Some think folks are still afraid of the "flu," while others think that people are saving their money for the holidays.

What Milwaukee Is Doing

THANKSGIVING audiences in Milwaukee were supplied with five new shows in the downtown theatres. The Merrill theatre was the only theatre holding early features. Nazimova in "Eye for Eye" has broken all records for Milwaukee theatres; in the first three days' run it brought in more money than any ordinary week's business. The increasing interest in the play compels Manager Bostic to hold it over for four days of the coming week.

S. J. GRAUMAN, manager Metro Pictures Corp., received a letter from C. E. Bostic stating his appreciation of the series of pictures obtained through Metro, and that the public had proved that as a drawing card "Nazimova was unequalled."

AT THE CLOSE of the Nazimova production, upon request "Mickey" will have a return engagement.

BEGINNING Sunday, December 15, Ralph Paine with his story of the allied fleets in European waters and seven reels of pictures, will be seen at the Davidson theatre. Mr. Paine has been in European waters with the allied naval forces for five months and has received letters of indorsement from Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Admiral Sims and the French ministry of marines, expressing their admiration for the work done abroad by Mr. Paine.

BEECHER C. BURTON, Milwaukee operatic tenor, has been engaged by the Butterfly manager, Leo. A. Landau, to sing solos at the afternoon and evening performances, beginning Sunday, December 1, and continuing indefinitely.

ALFRED TANZER, Theatre Managers' Circuit, has been appointed Wisconsin manager of United Theatres. The United Theatres will exhibit Dustin Farnum, Kittie Gordon, and Florence Reed in downtown runs. The Merrill theatre will show the first of United pictures. The process of classifying the United pictures will be attended to by a committee of Milwaukee theatre owners, when bookings for up-town theatres will be arranged.

N. J. BLUMBERG, associate manager, Rex Theatre, Racine, for the past two years manager of the Palace and Rialto theatres, Racine, has resumed his former position with the Rex theatre as manager this time. Mr. Blumberg has the distinction of being the youngest manager in this section of country and is well liked by all theatre managers in the territory.

EDWARD TRINEZ, former salesman for Jewel productions, Milwaukee office, has opened up an independent exchange in Toy Building, Milwaukee.

SAM NORVILLE, formerly with the Jewel Production Co., Chicago, is now engaged in handling the Jewel productions for the state of Wisconsin. It seems like old times to have Sam back on home territory.

J. D. RODERICK, manager Universal Film Exchange, Milwaukee, is now a full fledged elk.

MILDRED HARRIS, in her latest feature, "Borrowed Clothes," was the attraction at the Alhambra during the last half of the week. An attractive lobby display under the direction of Miss Henrietta Luscher, press agent for the Alhambra, and Eddie Weisbach, decorative artist, featuring Charlie Chaplin and his bride in wedding attire, occupied a prominent place in the Alhambra lobby the week preceding the picture run.

THE TEASER ads adopted by the Alhambra theatre are causing no end of interest with the "movie fans." These original little teasers appear a week in advance of the pictures.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER," the second of the Government's official war features, will be retained at the Princess until the end of the week. The production is more interesting than any fiction and contains the story of America's part in the struggle now ended. (Copy of editorial on page 3.)

RALPH WETSTEIN, manager Paramount, has disposed of fifty-two new Artcraft pictures to the Alhambra, Butterfly, and Toy theatres. Three pictures are released weekly, and have their first run at the above-named theatres.

"THE GREAT VICTORY, the Fall of the Hohenzollerns," the production of all productions will be released the early part of December. This picture will include in its wondercast Henry Kolker, Creighton Hale, E. J. Connelly, Joseph Kilgour, Earl Schenck and Florence Short.

Additional News of Chicago

M. J. JACOBS of the H. Lieber Co., Indianapolis, Ind., was a recent visitor in Chicago. The gentleman had to stop in to the NEWS office and get the current issue to read on his way home, or feel lonesome. He reports that business is good.

G. W. REYNOLDS, owner of the Princess theatre, De Kalb, Ill., expects to spring a new surprise shortly. He does not say whether it is a new house or an amalgamation, but it is something big.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS," the new United States War Film, opens at the Playhouse, Chicago, Monday, December 2. Announcement was made recently by Robert E. Rickson, western representative of the division of films, committee on public information, of the Government's policy in taking under its own personal management the pictures which show for the first time Americans in the battle they won. This picture shows the United States Marines in action when they turned the tide at Chateau Thierry.

JOE ERBER, Erber's theatre, E. St. Louis, announces that work will be started as soon as steel is obtainable on the new moving picture palace that he is about to build in E. St. Louis.

AT THIS WRITING very few towns in Illinois south of Springfield are open. A great many houses are closing daily due to another outbreak of the influenza.

HARRY WEISS has just returned from a week's trip through Illinois and did a very good business.

FROM ALL REPORTS R. C. Seary, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Chicago office, handled the recent picture, Charles Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," in a masterly way.

Milwaukee May Get New Motion Picture Theatre

THE arrival of peace and the resulting resumption of building activities and the passage of the bone dry law will undoubtedly have the effect of hastening the erection of the new 3,000 seat photoplay house on the corner of Third street and Grand avenue. The site of this new theatre, the erection of which was exclusively announced in the Motion Picture News, issue of November 16, is now partly occupied by the largest palm garden in Milwaukee and the new law will have the tendency to hurry up the signing of the lease.

It was learned on good authority that the photoplay men interested in this new project were in New York City last week working on the financial details of the venture.

It is expected that full details of this new house will be announced within a few weeks if the present plans materialize.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

"THE RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE," an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Zane Grey, was shown at the Princess theatre, Dubuque, Ia., Wednesday and Thursday, November 20 and 21. This picture was truly wonderful; it had everything that makes a picture successful—star, theme, scenery and direction. The star, William Farnum, was an ideal Lassiter, strong, courageous and self sacrificing; Mr. Farnum has never had a more satisfactory role than this. The plot was interesting to a degree, the action quick, and throughout the entire story, the Zane Grey atmosphere was noticeable. It is no wonder that a play like this goes big during its entire engagement.

OLIVE TELL starred at the Liberty theatre Wednesday, November 20, in "Her Sister," an interesting, though rather melodramatic five-reel production.

"THE KINGLY KERRIGAN" was presented at the Grand two days, November 20 and 21, in "One Dollar Bid." The noted Paralta star was very pleasing in this picture; his acting was more like that of the Kerrigan of old, when he played in Bluebird productions. The Grand patrons liked the picture and every show was well attended.

GEORGE M. COHAN made his debut at the Family theatre Wednesday evening, November 20, in "Broadway Jones." This was not the first time the noted star has appeared in Dubuque, but it was the initial of any of his pictures at the Family. Manager Yount advertised the picture in a most catchy manner, resulting in a full house from the opening to the closing hour.

MADGE KENNEDY established her reputation as a comedienne at the Family theatre, where she appeared in "Baby Mine" over a month ago. When "Nearly Married" was presented Thursday and Friday, November 21 and 22, Family fans remembered her good work in the previous picture and turned out in fine shape to see her second picture. Miss Kennedy and Mae Marsh share the honors at the Family, as being the most popular stars on the Goldwyn program.

THE first of the Bab series, "Bab's Diary," with fascinating Marguerite Clark, was shown at the Family theatre Saturday, November 23. A special matinee was given Saturday afternoon for children, which was very well attended. In the evening, a splendid house witnessed the picture. Family patrons like the "Bab Series," and are anxiously awaiting the second story, "Bab's Burglar."

"THE MASK OF RICHES," with Claire Anderson, and shown at the Liberty theatre Thursday, November 21, was a swift moving, romantic photodrama, which pleased all who witnessed it.

MANAGER YOUNT of the Family theatre, has booked a new serial, "The Brass Bullet," featuring Juanita Hanson and Jack Mulhall. The first episode was shown Monday, November 25, and it met with great approval. If all the episodes are as well attended as this first one, this serial is bound to be a winner.

J. STUART BLACKTON'S masterpiece, "The World for Sale," adapted from the novel by Gilbert Parker, had a fairly successful two days run at the Princess theatre during the week of November 17.

ELAINE HAMMERSTEIN played at the Dreamland theatre Friday and Saturday, November 22 and 23 in "Her Man." This picture had a fairly good drawing power, but it would have attracted a much larger crowd, had the producers retained the original name of the book it was taken from, "The Battle Cry." As it was, a great many people did not know that this splendid story had been filmed.

"WOLVES OF THE RAIL," shown at the Liberty theatre, Friday, November 22, was a typical Roy Stewart production, and a good drawing card.

"OPPORTUNITY" with Viola Dana, was the Sunday, November 24, program at the Grand. Miss Dana's versatility in this picture was even more pronounced than in her previous starring vehicle, "Blue Jeans." Miss Dana is a star who is more than on the road to fame and fortune; she has good pictures and her popularity increases with her every appearance. The Grand had average crowds in the afternoon, and full houses in the evening.

JACK PICKFORD and Louise Huff were seen at the Family theatre on November 24 in "The Ghost House." Manager Yount truly advertised this feature as "the happiest mystery play ever written, played by the happiest boy and girl in the world."

"DOING THEIR BIT," with Jane and Katherine Lee, was undoubtedly the best photoplay shown at the Liberty theatre in weeks. These kiddies were simply killing—they are the best gloom cure one could find. They are business getters, too, for not only do they draw a theatre's own patrons, but people from all over the city turn out to see them, whenever they come to Dubuque.

"SANDY," with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, was the attraction at the Princess theatre Sunday, November 24. The story was very clever, and the cast of characters of the best. Jack Pickford, "The typical American boy," had a role that seemed to be especially written for him, while Louise Huff had a part equally good. This picture had a drawing power better than average, and more than pleased the people who saw it.

TOM MIX, the noted Victory player, was presented at the Dreamland theatre on Sunday, November 24, in "Fame and Fortune." Dubuque fans like his plays, for they are strong, clean stories of Western life, with a star who puts a punch into everything he does. When an exhibitor here shows a Mix production he is sure of good business.

"A DOG'S LIFE," that much advertised picture of Charlie Chaplin's, came to the Grand Monday and Tuesday, November 25 and 26. The picture was certainly all it was claimed to be—it was a laugh from the start to the finish. Chaplin is at his best in plays of this kind, absurdly funny, yet with enough of a plot to make them interesting. "A Dog's Life" is undoubtedly one of his best pictures.

"RICH MAN, POOR MAN," with Marguerite Clark, was, indeed, a splendid drawing power at the Princess during the two days of its engagement, November 25 and 26. Miss Clark, as Betty Wynne, met with instant approval. In this photoplay Miss Clark proved that not only was she a comedienne of the highest order, but also a finished emotional actress. If she were always given plays on this order, where she takes grown-up parts, her popularity here would be unlimited.

CLAIRE ANDERSON, in "The Gray Parasol," was the attraction at the Dreamland theatre on Tuesday, November 26. This picture was rated as being an interesting photoplay with an average drawing power.

ALICE BRADY was shown at the Family theatre Tuesday, November 26, in "Her Silent Sacrifice." Miss Brady WAS WELL SUITED to the role she portrayed, as were the other players in the cast. The picture was quite satisfactory.

THE last episode of "The House of Hate," with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, was shown at the Family theatre Monday, November 25.

MARGUERITE CLARK is a mighty popular person in Anamosa, Iowa, these days. Everybody in town seems to turn out to see her pictures, for the Grand is always overcrowded whenever she comes to town. On Saturday, November 23, she was shown at the Grand in "The Seven Swans," and the picture drew enormous crowds. The Grand patrons liked the picture very well, one of them commenting that it was the most diverting and appealing picture he had seen for many a day.

ON Sunday and Monday, November 24 and 25, Elsie Ferguson played at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Iowa, in "The Lie." A Fatty Arbuckle comedy, "Moonshine," was also shown.

"OLD WIVES FOR NEW," Cecil De Mille's latest Artcraft production, was presented at the Star theatre at Decorah, Iowa, Friday and Saturday, November 22 and 23. This adaptation of the famous David Graham Phillips novel pleased all who had the pleasure of seeing it.

E. H. BRECHLER is again in charge of the Amuse theatre at Fennimore, Wis., having re-purchased it from Joseph Harrington. The theatre opened Saturday night, November 23, after a long close due to the influenza quarantine.

Milwaukee Chicago Indianapolis

In Indianapolis and Indiana

ONE of the most pretentious improvements made in a picture theatre during the "Flu" shutdown was that in the Sanders, at Fountain Square, Indianapolis. Fred Sanders, the owner, engaged Charles Reed, who decorated the Circle, to transform his house into a miniature reproduction of the famous Rialto in New York. Not only are the decorations new, but a new scenic lighting effect has been put in. Mr. Sanders has one of the most successful suburban houses in Indianapolis, and is credited with being one of the shrewdest managers in the city.

O. P. FAUCHIER, special representative for the Indianapolis office of Pathe, is now able to be up and about after a three weeks' tussle with a "flu" germ. His attack was complicated when pneumonia set in and it was feared for a time that he would not pull through.

THE Circle theatre, of which S. Barret McCormick is directing manager, was presenting last week one of the most portentious displays ever seen in Indianapolis. "Under Four Flags" was booked for the entire week and the picture on the screen was preceded and embellished by a spectacle of music, song and tableaux, with a ballet. The program also included Gerald Gardner as soloist in the introduction of a symphonic paean of peace, "The Victorious Allies," rendered by the Circle orchestra under the direction of Signor Natiello.

W. A. RATZ, of Indianapolis, formerly connected with the World Film Corporation, has been placed in charge of the Hodkinson Service in Indiana, with offices in the Indianapolis Pathe headquarters in the Wimmer Building.

THE Princess theatre at Otterbein, Ind., has been sold by J. L. Schumaker to Miller & Harris, leading newspaper men of Otterbein.

FRITZ WEIFFENBACH, of Indianapolis, owner of the Tuxedo theatre, early last week transferred his interests in the house to G. A. Thomas. Friday, the theatre was visited by fire and the entire back end of the house was destroyed. Weiffenbach formerly owned both the Alcazar and Tuxedo. His plans for the future have not been announced. It will be two weeks before the Tuxedo can re-open.

ANNOUNCEMENT reached the Indianapolis office of Pathe Saturday that, beginning January 1, Fort Wayne and the nine counties adjacent to it, would be placed under the supervision of R. S. Shrader, manager of the Indianapolis office. Fort Wayne and these nine counties were formerly booked from the Chicago offices of Pathe.

PRISONERS at the Indiana reformatory at Jeffersonville are to be entertained at night during the coming winter with motion pictures, if plans of G. A. H. Shideler, superintendent, mature. Mr. Shideler is rushing to completion repairs to old Cellhouse B, in which either the first or second floor will be given over to a motion picture theatre. Mr. Shideler says he believes the men will do better work and will be managed much more easily during the day, if they have clean, enjoyable entertainment at night. He plans to give three shows a week.

THE NEWBURGH AMUSEMENT CO., of Newburgh, Ind., filed articles of incorporation recently at the State house in Indianapolis. The capital is placed at $10,000 and the object is declared to be the showing of motion pictures. The directors include Eugene G. Sargeant, Maurice H. Sargeant and Herman Schumacher.

Indianapolis Prepares to Make Up for Lost Time

WITH the discarding of the masks and the exceedingly light number of new cases and deaths reported to the health authorities, Indiana exhibitors are breathing much easier while preparing to make up for lost time. It was estimated by Indianapolis motion picture exchange men last week that one-fourth of the houses in the State were still closed as a result of the epidemic. The larger cities in the closed list include Logansport, Terre Haute, Richmond, Vincennes, Bicknel and Brazil. However, it is believed these towns will all open for business the last of this week or early next week.

Terre Haute is the only city in the State to report concerted action on the part of theatre managers to violate the rulings of either the State or local health boards. Theatre managers in every other city in the State, however, stood by the orders the health boards issued to combat the inroads being made by the epidemic. Fifteen theatre managers and motion picture machine operators were haled into the city court in Terre Haute Friday to answer charges of violating an order of their local health board closing their places Thanksgiving Day on account of the sudden recurrence of influenza. All refused to plead guilty on the ground that the ruling of the board was not valid. The cases were all dismissed the next day for the same reason. The defendants asked for and received a jury trial. Unusual public interest was manifested in the proceedings. Five of the more prominent theatre men were arrested at their theatres Thanksgiving Day by policemen and placed in jail, where bond was denied them for several hours, but finally accepted by the sheriff. The closing order was issued by the Terre Haute health board late Wednesday, following reports showing a large increase in the number of cases of the disease, and provided that all stores, except drug stores and restaurants, should be closed Thanksgiving in addition to the theatres. All were permitted to reopen Friday, but were ordered to close again at 6 p. m. Saturday, when they would be permitted to reopen Monday morning. Those arrested were: J. P. Peters, of the Fountain; J. B. Brentlinger, of the Liberty; William Keating, of the Orpheum; Samuel Dreyfeus, of the Princess, and B. Van Borssum, of the Savoy and Crescent.

Sam Baxter's Friends Play Santa Claus In Denver Town

ON the eve of his departure for San Diego a week ago, Samuel L. Baxter, pioneer exhibitor of Denver and until recently owner of the Isis theatre on Curtis street, was bagged. No, not sand-bagged, we mean traveling-bagged.

Sam Baxter's friends in Denver were numbered not by the hundreds but by thousands. They included, quite naturally, the local exchange men, who were anxious to impress him with the idea that friendships resulting from long association were not to be broken by his removal. Accordingly they got together and presented him with the best seal skin traveling bag which money could buy in Denver, containing all the inside trimmin's—a complete set of toilet articles. What pleased Sam most was a handsomely engraved art seal plate, carrying the names of the donors. He was visibly affected when he read the list of names, and stated that no amount of money could equal the token of love and esteem which had been given him.

Among the trade and with the public, Mr. Baxter leaves a record as an exhibitor to be proud of. The best was not too good for his patrons and he possessed that rare faculty of always seeing ahead. Everybody with whom he came in contact with in a business way was sure of fair treatment always, and he was charitable almost to a fault. No worthy case ever appealed to him in vain. Among a long string of charitable donations is his gift to a local struggling church of a $10,000 pipe organ. It is a pleasure to say these nice things about him, because they are all true, and more.

Mr. Baxter is now in San Diego, where with his family, he will enjoy a long rest.

San Francisco Comes Forward as Production Center

IT appears as if San Francisco may soon become a center of production of motion pictures. Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Balshofer Feature Production Co., and H. K. Somborn, vice president of the corporation, who have been in the city for several days, have announced their intention of moving their entire plant to this vicinity. According to Balshofer, either San Mateo, Palo Alto, Burlingame, San Jose, Piedmont, or San Francisco will be selected.

Somborn added: "We are tired of Los Angeles. We have shot every available scene. You have everything Los Angeles has and more. Up here we can secure new types. Market street can be shot for a thoroughfare of New York and your hotels are far more up to date than those of the South." Balshofer is not the first of the motion picture men to announce he would desert Los Angeles. A short time ago Clara Kimball Young company announced that they would leave Southern California and G. M. Anderson intends to build at San Mateo.

San Francisco's claims as a desirable location for the production of pictures will soon be laid before the leading producers of the country in a most vigorous campaign. Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., left on November 25 for New York to make definite offers for the producers of studios to be built by Lesser and his associates in one or more of the locations available about the Bay. Lesser, in announcing the plans just before his departure, said that the project had been conceived in the knowledge of dissatisfaction in the ranks of the film companies with the attitude of Southern California cities toward the industry. "Moreover," said Lesser, "every available scene, location and building in the south adapted to the uses of the movie director have been shot so often that the supply is exhausted. Weather conditions which in the past have been considered an obstacle to successful motion picture photography are no longer a handicap. The best photographic results are now obtained under the flare of powerful light, both in the studio and out of doors. I am prepared with my associates to erect studios here, which we will offer to sublease to various companies which we expect to agree to come here."

Spokane Theatres Draw on Saturday and Sunday

SPOKANE theatres played to capacity houses Saturday and Sunday, feature performances at every house drawing out the "movie" loving public held under leash the past six weeks by the influenza ban. The Clemmer featured Enrico Caruso, the eminent tenor, in his first film performance, "My Cousin." No small mention should be made of Harry Girard, actor, composer and singer, who has come to preside at the Clemmer organ for a limited period. The Liberty showed the Paramount production, "Heart of the Wild," featuring Elsie Ferguson. A Theda Bara picture, "When a Woman Sins," was the Casino offering and a strenuous George Walsh picture, "On the Jump," is the Class A feature. William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry" was the Class A feature late in the week. The Lyric featured Harry Morey in "The Golden Goal" and "The Iron Test" was the offering at the Majestic.

San Francisco Coliseum Opens with Benefit for the Red Cross

FOR its dedicatory opening November 22, the Coliseum theatre in San Francisco set aside 100 per cent of its box receipts for the Red Cross. Manager Sam Levin, owner and director of the picture playhouse at Ninth avenue and Clement streets, says that he could think of no better way to start off right. There are 2,200 seats in the big theatre, from every one of which an unimpeded view of the screen and stage is enjoyed. Architecturally, inside and out, the theatre, said to have cost close to a quarter of a million dollars, is elegant. The mezzanine, reception and lounge room is luxuriously comfortable and richly appointed; the lobby is roomy and elegant and the lighting permits of changeable tints to fit into the mood conjured by the picture. The splendid Robert-Morton organ installed by the American Photo Player Co., was played by Louis Diamond and made a very impressive effect on the large crowd gathered at the opening. A string orchestra also supplied the music.

Titan Prepares to Resume Business

ACCORDING to reports from Spokane, Wash., directors of the Titan Motion Picture company, Spokane, Wash., are preparing to resume their activities and a meeting will be held shortly to determine what course of action shall be taken.

Operations stopped while the United States was in a state of war, but with the termination of the war the company is beginning to look forward to a continuance of its work, according to J. Don Alexander, president. The buildings at Titan city, four miles west of Spokane, are about half completed.

Denver Public Gets Confused at Closing and Reopening Orders

UNITED action on the part of Denver distributors and exhibitors on Saturday, November 23, put an end to the alleged discrimination against the motion picture business in that city. It should also be stated that the local Amusement Council, composed of organized unions of machine operators, stage employes, musicians and billposters, started the ball rolling for fair play when they passed strong resolutions demanding that the second closing order issued by the local health officials be made general instead of singling out the show houses for the ban and allowing other lines of business, including the big stores, to remain open.

The methods of the local health department in handling the influenza epidemic are said to have been extremely weak and vacillating, as well as discriminating against the theatres and picture houses. Almost six weeks elapsed before general quarantine of influenza cases was put in effect. For five full weeks exhibitors and theatre managers were compelled to close their doors, while large stores, factories and other public gathering places were allowed to remain open. And during all the long eight weeks' seige the public has been completely mystified by the maze of orders, cancellations and modifications coming from the City Hall.

A few days prior to November 23 the influenza suddenly developed alarming proportions after it was believed to be under control. The number of new cases jumped from two hundred to five hundred and more per day. Then, although the health commissioner admitted the increase was due to the big Peace celebration, he ground out an order closing the amusement houses, which were reopened on the day the armistice was signed. Other lines of business were not closed.

Production Manager Bernstein of the National Film Corporation and "Smiling Bill" Parsons Are Discussing Plans for the Improvements to the Hollywood Studios of the Company

The closing of the amusement houses was effective at 7 o'clock Saturday morning. It was rescinded two and a half hours afterward, due to the effective protest. The Amusement Council resolutions follow:

"Whereas, All the theatres in this city have been closed for a period of five weeks for the purpose of putting a stop to the prevailing influenza, and

"Whereas, We find that the closing of same has not been successful as far as stamping out of the plague is concerned, causing a costly experimental failure to all the members connected with the amusement council of the city, and

"Whereas, The board of health has caused another order of the same effect to be issued again, discriminating against amusement houses and allowing other businesses to remain in operation, causing congregating of people, such as department stores, factories, crowded elevators and, in fact, all public gatherings,

"Therefore, Be it Resolved, That we appeal to the proper authorities of this city that if it be essential for the public welfare to stop all congregating, that the order be made general, thus adding to the efficiency of the measure in order that the ban may be more speedily raised.

"Be it further Resolved, That we believe if general business can be safely operated with the use of masks, that all places of amusement can be equally protected by the same measures."

These resolutions were printed in the morning papers, and the same morning four delegates from the Amusement Council and representatives of all film exchanges, and practically every exhibitor in Denver—a crowd of nearly 150, all wearing masks, visited the health officials and presented verbal and written protests against a discriminatory closing of amusement houses. It was so strong that the officials saw the light.

All houses are now open, but patrons are required to wear masks. Business is about 50 per cent of normal.

In and Out of Seattle

THE ATLAS recently opened its doors in Seattle. It is a 500-seat house with all modern improvements. The proprietor, I. Kaita, intends to cater for long runs and to a clientele that will stick by him.

WM. C. MEAGHER, auditor of the Greater Theatres Company, and one of the best known showmen in the West, recently returned to Seattle after a trip along the Pacific Coast. While in San Francisco Mr. Meagher visited with Tate, the Pathe manager, and with Burleson, well known former Seattle film man, who recently opened a new house in Los Angeles. Mr. Meagher was asked by Burleson and other producers in San Francisco and Portland to explain to them his method of auditing and bookkeeping which has become famous.

W. A. MEAD, Northwest manager, Universal Film Co., is taking a trip around the territory.

C. F. HILL, Northwest manager Goldwyn exchange, recently purchased The Globe, in Albany.

GEORGE ENDERT, popular in and out of the Northwest branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been chosen to referee the next fight between Harry Anderson and Bobby Moore. This has brought up some talk of forming a Film Row Athletic Club, since it has been discovered that Endert is able to referee a "pro" fight. Luken, of Pathe; Rosenbaum of the De Luxe, Clemmer of The Clemmer, and Hammerick of the Rex, the latter two owners of movies, have said they would join the league if they could play hand-ball and Bill Drummond would be the referee.

AMONG THE RECENT visitors along the Row was H. Le Roy, owner of the Liberty, Carlsborg, Wash.

CARL STEARN, Northwest Metro manager, and A. W. Eden, branch and Northwest division manager of the Fox productions, have left their Seattle offices for a swing around the states, which will include all large towns.

R. K. DUNHAM, proprietor of the Rex, Mt. Vernon, Wash., took a hurried trip to Film Row a few days ago, entered the office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and booked the Paramount and Artcraft pictures for a year solid.

MANAGER MOORE of Tacoma's famous Rialto, has also installed a big Wurlitzer-Jones organ.

H. W. WEST, booker for two years with Paramount in the Seattle office, has gone to Tacoma, where he has taken a position with his brother-in-law in the Sloane ship yards.

CHAS. M. THALL has sold out his interest in the Victory, Camp Lewis, to his partner, C. W. McKee, who is also half owner in the Hipp, Camp Lewis. Mr. Thall has accepted a responsible position with the De Luxe of Seattle and will also act as booking agent for the Liberty at Camp Lewis.

MARK GOLDMAN, well known Film Row salesman, and formerly Northwest manager of Billy West Comedies, is going on the road for De Luxe. He is sure of doing business with Mercy of Yakima since Mike Rosenberg, De Luxe manager, has renewed the rights for the Northwest on Rex Beach's "Spoilers" and "The Law," with Mitchell Lewis, for the next ten years.

J. W. HOUCK, who has been appointed manager of the Liberty, Spokane, Wash., by G. N. Crawford, who also represents the A. I. Hutton interests, is a man from whom the exchanges and his friends expect a lot. Houck knows the film business well. He is full of aggressiveness and new ideas. He has had his own theatre in Cheney, Wash., where he combined business ability with salesmanship.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

THE THEATRE SITUATION in Montana is nearing normal as far as the number of houses in operation goes, according to reports coming to the offices of local film men. However, business is far below normal in Butte due to continued agitation on the part of some interests, for closing down theatres. The influenza situation is far from good here, about 75 cases developing daily, according to reports of physicians. In other sections of Montana there is marked improvement and smaller towns report business practically up to average.

FRANCIS E. PAGET of Roundup, who left a few months ago for Los Angeles, is making good as a scenario writer. He has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince. He wrote "A Law Unto Herself."

ALBERT J. HYNEKE, accompanied by Mrs. Hyneke, has just returned to Lewistown to resume the management of the Judith theatre, ably directed the past eight months by his brother, William Hyneke. Al has been in Nevada in charge of the Treasure State Combine mine owned by Trepp & Hyneke of Lewistown, operators of the Judith theatre. Report has it that he was successful in the mining venture, shipping a number of carloads of high-grade silver-lead ore to the smelters, and now having leased the property until midsummer to a mining company. Mr. Hyneke is vice-president of the Montana Exhibitors' league.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER" did fair business at the American this week. As a pleaser it proved a ten strike. Everybody liked it.

MANAGER KEELER of the Peoples is giving the theatregoer liberal measure in serving a feature picture with his six Hippodrome acts.

THE ANSONIA has signed a contract for the entire output of Goldwyn. Manager Taylor expects to do big business as soon as the "flu" uncetainty passes away.

"FOR HUSBANDS ONLY" came back to the Butte the past week, attracting fair business to the Liberty.

THE RIALTO did some extensive advertising for "Whose Little Wife Are You?" Mack Sennett's athletic girls made a hit with Butte showgoers, sharing honors with Charlie Murray and Mary Thurman.

A POPULAR form of amusement these wintry days in Butte is ice skating. Two large rinks are in operation, the Holland and the Liberty, the latter being located at Lake Avoca. Over 2,000 people were at the first Friday night band concert at the Holland, last week.

MANAGER RALPH RUFFNER certainly spread himself in using newspaper ink to exploit De Mille's "The Whispering Chorus," shown to increased business week beginning November 24. He used an entire page in the Daily Post the Saturday previous. The advertisement was illustrated by four "studies in pictures," depicting striking scenes in the production.

In and Around Denver

CHARLES MUEHLMAN, local manager for William Fox, has been transferred to the managership of the San Francisco exchange. He is succeeded by L. A. Quill, former head salesman out of the Fox office in Pittsburgh.

T. Y. HENRY has returned from Salt Lake, where he arranged with William Moran of the Desert Film company to handle all shipments for General in Utah, Idaho and Montana. Joe Stout will cover that territory for General, making his headquarters with Moran. All collections will be made by the General office in Denver as heretofore.

TRINIDAD houses opened on Thanksgiving day after being closed six weeks. Cheyenne houses are closed for a second time on account of influenza. Red Cliffe, Colorado, is open again.

AMONG those connected with the industry on Film Row who have recovered from the "Flu" are Jack Pendleton and Manager Gilmore of United, Miss Haas of Select and Clyde Messenger of Mutual. Another employe of United and two more at General were recently stricken.

F. W. NORMAND has resigned his position as salesman for Goldwyn out of Denver.

M. C. GERHART, owner of the Lyric and Empress at Fort Collins, was in Denver arranging service a few days ago. He has just recovered from a "Flu" slugging match.

W. L. GULLETT, salesman for Goldwyn, is ill with the influenza.

HARRY LUSTIG, special representative for Metro, has returned to the Coast following a week's visit in Denver.

F. DUFFY, assistant to General Manager Paul Brunet of Pathe, stopped over a few days in Denver last week on his way to New York from a coast trip.

LOUIS MARCUS, district manager for Paramount-Artcraft, spent several days in Denver last week.

All the News of Portland

E. C. KIRKPATRICK recently allied himself with the Portland office of the Universal Film Exchange. "Kirk," as he is called by his friends, is a film peddler of no small amount of experience, having made his debut in the Lone Star state several years ago. He was formerly manager for Southern Paramount at New Orleans, and is well known throughout the South. Before coming to this city he was with the Fox Corporation at Denver, from which place he was called by the Salem, Oregon, draft board to report for duty, just previous to the "shut down."

TARKINGTON BAKER, in charge of the new publicity

service which has been organized in the New York office of the Universal, was in Portland recently, while on a tour of the Pacific Coast, studying conditions, and needs of the various territories. Prior to his coming to this city he visited in the inter-mountain district. Mr. Baker has installed a newspaper campaign which is more comprehensive than has as yet been devised in any other concern.

C. C. FERGUSON, manager of the Baker theatre, at Newberg, Oregon, was in the Portland Exchange the other day, to resume his booking, and be in readiness for the reopening.

GEORGE BLIGH, of the Bligh theatre, at Salem, was a visitor in this city last week. He has just recovered from the Spanish influenza, being quite ill for some time. However, he recovered in time to open his show house with a splash.

WALTER W. KOFELDT, former manager of the Majestic theatre, booked "Crashing Through to Berlin" and was to have opened with it at the Star theatre, of this city, on the very day that the "flu" ban put the kibosh on everything. Contrary to all fears, however, when things reopened, the big feature had suffered no diminution of public interest in the dark period owing to the declaration of the armistice and to the success of the American arms abroad, was more timely and alive than before.

FREDERICK PAGE, owner of the Page theatre, formerly managed by Oscar Bergner, of Ashland, has taken over the personal direction of his house, and was in Portland Saturday lining up bookings for the reopening following the "flu" epidemic. Among other things, he chose "Fighting for Freedom," the official British war pictures, as something particularly timely to present at this time, to show just how the fight for freedom of the world has been won.

San Francisco News Condensed

HARRY W. SCHMIDT, for the past seven years with the General Film Company, the last two of which he has been branch manager in San Francisco, has been appointed branch manager for the same company at Los Angeles, and left a few days ago for the scene of his new activities. Before he left the employes of the General Film Co. and the George Kleine System presented him with a beautiful leather brief case and later the Film Exchange managers met in the headquarters of the General Film Co., where M. J. Cohen presented him with a diamond and pearl stick pin as a remembrance from the boys who had been associated and had worked with him. M. J. Cohen, who needs no introduction to the trade or to the readers of The News, has been appointed manager of the General Film in this city and united his old position of manager of the Kleine System and the Sherry interests with these new honors.

J. L. MULHAUSEN, formerly with the George Kleine System, has accepted a position as salesman on the road with the Fox Corporation.

HARRY HOLLANDSWORTH, formerly booker for the George Kleine System, who heard the call of Uncle Sam and entered the merchant marine, has just been honorably discharged from that service and, in keeping with the policy of the Kleine System, is now back at his old desk with the added distinction of also serving the General.

JAMES CLARK, who was shipper for the Kleine System in this city, has been appointed assistant shipper for the General.

CHARLES MUELHMAN, who has been manager for the Fox Corporation in Denver for some time past, has been appointed branch manager of the same corporation in San Francisco. He is well and favorably known in this city and five or six years ago was manager of the Savoy theatre here. He will be succeeded in Denver by Leonard Quick, who has been roadman for Fox out of the Pittsburgh office.

PAUL C. MOONEY, District Manager of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been in charge of the local office since its last manager resigned, leaves immediately for Los Angeles and goes thence to Seattle where about the 6th of the month he expects to meet W. S. Sheehan, General Manager of the Corporation, with whom he will return here about December 10. Mr. Sheehan is making the rounds of the western offices of the corporation.

WALTER S. RAND, Division Manager of the General Film Co., Inc., who has been in San Francisco attending to the changes in the local organization, has gone to Los Angeles.

THE T. & D. CIRCUIT has announced a new musical director for the Tivoli theatre in this city, in the engagement of Dr. Carlos de Mandil, violin virtuoso, who enjoys international fame. He has assumed charge of an enlarged orchestra of carefully selected instrumentalists and a season of excellent music is promised at that theatre.

THE ROYAL THEATRE of this city announces the engagement of an orchestra under the direction of the competent direction of Vinton la Feairra.

R. O. PROCTOR, district manager of the Pathe, whose territory includes all the country west of Denver, is leaving for Seattle in a short time, after his first visit to this office, and will go thence to Denver by way of Spokane.

THE STRAND THEATRE is going to put on Charlie Chaplin for a two-weeks' run in "Shoulder Arms" on December 1. This is the first time that a Chaplin picture has been run in this city for more than one week.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

MUCH CONFUSION has been caused in the booking departments of the Los Angeles film exchanges by cities and towns in the territory re-opening and then closing again on account of an increase in the influenza epidemic. Some of the theatres in the territory reopened with new serials and after a few days the ban was again put in force and the film was shipped back to the Los Angeles office with requests for a change of dates. As the bookings had been fixed for a circuit the change caused a general rearrangement of the books. The confusion in the case of serials was more pronounced than with features although in all cases the listings required changing.

SEVERAL TOWNS in Southern California expected to open and had made bookings but the health departments of the respective places decided to postpone the lifting of the ban and this caused a changing of dates in film bookings. Reports from Douglas, Arizona, stated that the theatres may be closed again for a week or more. Stephen Brown, a prominent exhibitor of the latter city, said that the closing order had not been made effective, but might at any time. Phoenix, Arizona, which was to have opened, was still under quarantine order several days after the date set for re-opening.

NEVADA MOTION PICTURE HOUSES have re-opened and according to reports sent by exhibitors to Los Angeles film exchanges business has been very good. The indications, the reports say, are for a good business during the fall and early winter.

SEVERAL NEW FILMS have been received by T. E. Hancock, manager of the World Film Corp., Los Angeles Exchange. They are "Hitting the Trail," featuring Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greely and Muriel Ostriche; also "The Zero Hour," with June Elvidge and Frank Mayo. These pictures have been booked at the Los Angeles Hippodrome and will be presented the latter part of December.

FRED LORELLA and Guy Dothwaite of the firm of Dothwaite and Lorella, of Oxnard, Cal., were in Los Angeles to purchase extra equipment for the New Victory theatre at the latter town. The Oxnard Opera House, controlled by the same firm, will open the fall season with a motion picture. T. E. Hancock of the World Film has booked for the house "Inside the Lines," featuring Louis S. Stone for the opening feature.

A. B. LAMB, manager for the Los Angeles Metro exchange, has arranged for the booking of Nazimova's newest picture, "An Eye for an Eye," at Miller's new California theatre. The picture will be presented the third week after the opening of the new house. It will probably be shown early in January. This picture is said to be the best the star has ever made for the screen. It will be given a private exhibition for the trade before its first presentation.

WHILE the Los Angeles motion picture theatre owners lost thousands of dollars during the ban, they did not lose their sense of humor. A number made the best of a bad situation and did everything in their power to keep impatient patrons smiling. A variety of signs were posted on the fronts of the houses which were read with interest by the fans. Among the announcements thus displayed were "Playing Tonight, a Tragedy—"Influenza," "In-Flu-Enza, Out Flew Business"; "Open Monday—Maybe," "Open Sometime," "Open By-and-By," and a number of others.

THE CAPITOL COMEDIES have been booked for first showing at the new California theatre by Ben Fish, manager of the Los Angeles Goldwyn Exchange. This theatre has also booked the Geraldine Farrar series, but will not show the first one until several weeks after the opening week.

THE HODKINSON SERVICE is now installed in the Los Angeles Pathe Exchange. The booking and billing of the features are still handled by G. R. Sirwell, but the shipping and mechanical end of the work is done by Pathe.

GUY GUNDERSON, of the George Kleine Features, is still representing the service in Los Angeles, but the booking and shipping is under the direction of the General Company. Mr. Gunderson has charge of the Kleine office force.

ARTICLES of incorporation for the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade have been sent to the Secretary of State at Sacramento. David Bershon, president of the new organization, has received permission from the secretary of state to operate the Board until the charter is granted. It is expected the charter will be issued any day. A meeting of the members of the Board was held just prior to sending the papers to Sacramento. The articles of incorporation were read and unanimously adopted.

TARTINGTON BAKER, special publicity representative of the Universal productions, arrived in Los Angeles from New York. He brought with him plans of a new method of publicity to be used in co-operation with the editors of the various Los Angeles dailies. The plans provide for something new in the publicity line and the aim is to benefit the exhibitors of the territory.

D. B. LEDERMAN, assistant to Joe Brandt, general manager of Universal exchanges, is in Los Angeles for the purpose of installing a new office system. This system will eliminate quantities of unnecessary work and details and will increase the efficiency in service to exhibitors.

EARL SINKS, representative of the Los Angeles Universal exchange, is now visiting exhibitors of the Imperial Valley, Cal.

DAVID BERSHON, manager of Universal's Los Angeles exchange, is arranging for an excursion of the Los Angeles film men to Phoenix to attend the opening of the handsome new Strand theatre, shortly to be opened at the latter city by Rickard and Nace. J. E. Rickard of the Phoenix firm which controls a chain of theatres in Phoenix, recently visited Los Angeles and extended a personal invitation to the exchange men. The new theatre, which will seat about 1,000, will open the latter part of December.

CHARLES GROGGS, of Bakersfield, proprietor of the Hippodrome, Pastime and Grogg's theatres, died on Saturday, November 16 and the funeral was held on Thursday, November 21. Members of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade sent a letter of condolence to the family and a handsome floral design.

THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE, the new Miller, Los Angeles, amusement enterprise, which will open the latter part of December, will present the first of the Hearst International News film. David Bershon, manager for Universal, has just closed a contract with the house for the release of the series on Monday, December 23.

THE FIRST EPISODE of the new Eddie Polo serial, "The Lure of the Circus," has been received at Los Angeles by Manager David Bershon of Universal. A preliminary showing to the trade will be arranged prior to making bookings for the pictures.

H. E. WHARTON, owner and publisher of the News at Gold Hill, Oregon, is shortly to open a new theatre in that town, and requests Motion Picture News to notify publicity departments to place him on their mailing list.

Katterjohn to Picturize His Photoplay Masterpiece

IT is now definitely understood that one of the forthcoming Katterjohn films will be a picturization of the story which Monte M. Katterjohn has long thought of as his photoplay masterpiece. This is the story on which the author has spent more than three years of time and work, and which was originally created to be presented in nine to twelve reels.

Arrangements for its filming were practically completed earlier in the year, but it was at that time decided that conditions were not propitious for so ambitious an undertaking. The altered conditions which obtain at the present time, however, have again brought the matter forward, and it is understood that the arrangements for putting on the picture are now being made.

"While the story has been forming in my mind for somewhat more than three years," says Mr. Katterjohn, "it was not until a year ago that I began to place it on paper, and I had only completed it at the time of my leaving the Paralta organization. It is probable that when I take up the filming of this picure it will be produced either in six or seven reels instead of the greater length as at first decided upon. I am confident that the story will gain in force, rather than otherwise, through being condensed and pressed into more tightly knit drama without resorting to the spectacular.

"This story deals with a body of pioneer Americans whose story has never been presented on the screen, but whose development has provided some of the most dramatic episodes in American history.

"I am confident that in the perfection of its plot development and in dramatic intensity this production will exceed anything else with which I have ever been identified, mainly because of the time which has been spent in planning the story."

Short Notes of San Diego

THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE in San Diego has been closed permanently and the location taken over by a shoe concern. Former Manager W. H. Hilts has gone into the army Y. M. C. A. work.

AT THE PLAZA THEATRE Russell Rogers has succeeded C. J. Quinn as manager.

ALL THE LOCAL film houses opened with a good trade Monday afternoon, the health board ban on places of amusement having been raised at midnight Sunday. During the period of quarantine all the houses underwent complete renovation and a number of changes were effected which improved the facilities of each.

THE OPENING bills at the various houses included the following attractions: Pickwick—Tom Mix in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A."; Cabrillo—Wm. S. Hart in "The Border Wireless"; Plaza—Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney"; Superba—Carmel Myers in "A Society Sensation"; Broadway—Mary McLaren in "The Model's Confession."

AT THE SAVOY (Pantages), a vaudeville house, the first episode of the Pathe serial, "Hands Up," was shown, with Ruth Roland in the lead.

AN INTERESTING FEATURE of the new decorations of the Superba, installed during the time the "lid" was on, are rustic baskets which are hung between the arches of the interior. These baskets are made of fibers of palm trees planted by the Franciscan padres at the old San Diego mission, established in 1769. They were made by an old basketmaker, now dead, and have much of local interest. They are filled with greenery and California everlasting flowers.

KENT G. BUSH of the Broadway Amusement company, operating the Broadway and the Superba, was among the last contingent of local men to enter the service of Uncle Sam before the armistice was signed.

BARNEY BERNARD, salesman for the Select, was taken down with the influenza while in Stockton recently and was at once brought to this city where he is now said to be recovering in a local hospital.

P. J. HANLON of the Strand theatre, Vallejo, and C. H. Douglas, of the Elite, Merced, were in the city this week arranging for pictures.

New Improved Type Argus Equipment For Successful Mazda Lamp Projection

Manufactured Under Argus Patents by the General Electric Company

Argus Ezy Simplex Bracket in position for installing the Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter. Carbon-arc housing has been pushed back out of the way.

Argus Adapter mounted on bracket and in position for projection. If desired, carbon-arc housing may be removed and the Argus A.C. Regulator put in its place, as here shown.

Can be installed quickly on any projection machine without disturbing carbon-arc equipment by using the Argus Ezy Bracket

BY USING one of the new Argus Ezy Brackets, the improved Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter can be quickly and easily installed on any type projection machine, without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment. Anyone can make the change by following our simple, photographic instructions.

THIS IS another step in the progress of Mazda Lamp Projection, which has proved so efficient in hundreds of theatres by insuring better screen illumination and cutting bills for electric current 50 to 75%.

Jobbers and Dealers can market Argus Equipment by mail—the operator can make proper installation.

The Big 900 watt Mazda Projection Lamp is ready and Argus Equipment will insure its successful operation

WITH this higher-wattage lamp, Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in 90% of all picture theatres; for longer throws and larger screens than heretofore possible. THE 600 watt Mazda Lamp will continue in favor for smaller throws and smaller screens, and for use with individual lighting plants where the voltage is lower. Write for data on the application of Mazda Projection in your theatre.

The Argus Crystal Bead Screen (Patented)

THIS wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade-away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures when viewed from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving the size of your screen.

"The Squaw Man"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

By EDWIN MILTON ROYLE

A modern version of Edwin Milton Royle's famous play, "The Squaw Man." Adapted for the screen by Beulah Marie Dix.

You Believe in Names

SO do your patrons. The name of your theatre is a guarantee of quality—if you try conscientiously to give them the best.

The name of Cecil B. De Mille means a production of distinctive merit.

Edwin Milton Royle's "The Squaw Man" is a play the name of which is internationally famous.

And the cast! Look at these names:

Elliott Dexter	Jack Holt
Ann Little	Thurston Hall
Katherine MacDonald	Tully Marshall
Theodore Roberts	Herbert Standing
Edwin Stevens

There's a list of guarantors of exceptional entertainment as dependable as the list of directors of the National City Bank.

DON'T forget to tell your people that "The Squaw Man" is another production by the man who gave them "Till I Come Back To You," "We Can't Have Everything," "Old Wives For New" and "The Whispering Chorus."

The Villain Said the Hero was a Crook!

REMEMBER how it was in the play? Everybody does, for everybody has seen "Arizona" on the stage.

What suspense! What excitement when Lieutenant Denton started to square things with the heavy!

That was on a small stage in front of painted scenery. And even there it was a tremendous scene.

But imagine what happens when Douglas Fairbanks is the hero and he has all of the state of Arizona for the stage upon which to give the villain what's coming to him!

As surely as Douglas Fairbanks beats the villain, so will "Arizona" beat all your box-office records.

HARRY T. MOREY IN "Hoarded Assets"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE HARRY T. MOREY STAR SERIES

From the Story of the Same Title By Raymond S. Spears Directed by Paul Scardon

HE was only a river pirate—and he was in love with a showgirl who was "playing for big money." And when he heard of the big gold shipment headed up the river at dusk, he believed that here was his chance to make his big haul and quit the old life forever.

By a cleverly devised plan, Jerry substituted twenty kegs of sand for the twenty kegs of gold in the shipment and buried the kegs in a cove up the river. Then he started to go honest—just as an alibi, at first.

And then his big man's heart told him that it was only circumstances of environment that had ever made him dishonest. Once he tasted of the comfort and security of honesty, he knew he could never go back to the old life. But there was the buried gold shipment—what of that? And what of the money needed to buy the things that he believed his wife craved?

Here is a real screen story holding every element of human appeal. And as the rugged river pirate, Harry Morey finds a role for which he is eminently fitted by physique and screen personality.

Trade Press Critics Enthusiastic Over

"THE COMMON CAUSE"

Exhibitor's Trade Review

"THE name of J. Stuart Blackton has come to mean a guarantee of an out-of-the-ordinary feature, and in this case he has really outdone himself, for he has produced a screen offering of undoubted merit and one that should create quite a bit of sensation throughout the country. It is the sort of stuff that will "get to" any sort of an audience and hold them deeply interested from beginning to end. In short, it is the kind of a picture that we need.  For a downright dramatic feature with excellent comedy relief, nothing better than 'The Common Cause' has been offered exhibitors in many months. It should do a turn-away business at the majority of theatres where it is shown."

Wid's "Blackton Puts Over Big Production in 'The Common Cause'"

"J. STUART BLACKTON'S latest is a sure 'nuff special.  —and folks are going to like it whether they want to forget that we ever had a hand in whipping the Germans or not.  Altogether it is a big production mighty well handled in all departments, and should be doing business when a lot of other war pictures have been forgotten."

"ONE look at the names on the program of the persons engaged in making this feature should be sufficient to interest even the most blase first-nighter.  A more striking group of talent could hardly be assembled.  Commodore Blackton's production ranks among the finest of the war pictures and is by all odds the best of his screen achievements."

"J. STUART BLACKTON has never done anything finer than 'The Common Cause' and it will go down in history as one of the big war plays of the year. * * * A superb cast headed by Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer enacts the various roles."

P. S. Harrison in Motion Picture News

"SUCH a perfect blending of comedy and pathos; such an ability to reach the most deeply buried heart-strings, on one hand, and get all the joys of life out of you in one continuous roar of laughter on the other, I have never witnessed. To be honest, I never thought such a feat possible. Tears and laughter commingle in the same situation. * * * The picture contains all the elements necessary, such as human element (that of patriotic appeal) excitment, thrill and suspense. They are all intermingled with pleasing comedy; resulting in an exceptionally pleasing, clean entertainment."

World's Record——"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"

FOR one solid week ending November 23d, the two foremost motion picture houses in the world—the Rivoli and Rialto, in New York, played to the biggest audience in their history—packed to the doors every performance.

MR. S. L. ROTHAPFEL says:
"Even with these two great houses it proved impossible to accommodate the crowds and now—after our colossal record of attendance, I have contracted for this great film for another solid week, at the Rivoli, beginning December 1st."

These great pictures can never be taken again, for they are the last great battles of the last great war—close up living records of the stirring scenes that really happened—thrills in the air—in the sea battling the submarines—in the front line trenches.

"Under Four Flags" is the actual, authentic official United States Government War film made at the front.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Goldwyn to Distribute the Ford Educational Weekly

THE FORD MOTOR COMPANY, the greatest manufacturing enterprise in America, has for four years placed its tremendous resources behind the creation of a great educational film weekly.

At this moment from 3,000 to 4,000 theatres are presenting this unique and powerful screen achievement to their audiences, and have been doing so since its inauguration.

It is Henry Ford's intention to have this costly and popular weekly given the greatest volume of distribution ever attained by any feature in the motion picture industry.

In keeping with his demand that a great and stable Educational be available for the entire American public and at a minimum of cost to the exhibitors who will present it; with the intention of having such a weekly publicly exhibited in from 5,000 to 7,000 theatres each week

Henry Ford and His Representatives have chosen GOLDWYN as the exclusive distributors of The FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

A Single Reel Weekly 52 Issues a Year

Goldwyn invites the exhibitors of the nation to write, wire or visit its branch offices to make immediate arrangements for the booking of this approved and established feature and announces herewith the first five issues to be released under the Goldwyn imprint:

Jan. 12: "What Uncle Sam Will Do For 2 Cents."
Jan. 19: "The Truth About The Liberty Motor."
Jan. 26: "Hang It All!" The story of wall paper.
Feb. 2: "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas." The story of the Hog Island shipyards.
Feb. 9: Canada's "Mountain of Tears." Mt. Edith Cavell.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

A Great Imagination Has Built the Ford Educational Weekly

THERE is not in the entire industry a feature filled with such humanness, of such great range and scope as the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is both current and permanent in its appeal. It is a scenic, a travelogue, a historical record, a portrayer of industry in many of its fascinating phases; a stimulator of patriotism and good citizenship.

In Detroit Mr. Ford has equipped a plant and laboratory that take rank with the best plants in the industry. His Educational Weekly always has the distinction of beautiful production.

The men who produce the Ford Educational Weekly have entree to plants and institutions that are still barred to the inquisitive lens of other cameras. Their power lies in the tremendous power and resources of the man whose far-reaching dreams are translated into action.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in announcing the distribution under the Goldwyn imprint of this splendid product, correctly says that "Henry Ford has created the Ford Educational Weekly with no thought of profit, but because he feels that through this weekly will be conveyed a message of inspiration to the American public."

The conditions under which the Ford Educational Weekly is to be placed in increasing thousands of motion picture theatres are vitally interesting to exhibitors. The cost is to be so remarkably low that no exhibitor can afford to keep it off his screen.

Advance prints of the first five releases now announced will be in all Goldwyn offices by December 15. Every Goldwyn manager and salesman and 10,500 Ford Motor Company sales agencies in the United States in a few days will be ready to sign contracts or forward applications for service to the Goldwyn Home Office.

Another Madge Kennedy Success

The Most Favorable Notices She Ever Received Are On "A PERFECT LADY"

EXHIBITORS accept and believe a unanimous verdict on the success of a star and production. They know that it is not the function or intention of the critics to be over-enthusiastic or over-friendly.

It is therefore Goldwyn's pleasure to stand aside while those who have seen MADGE KENNEDY in "A PERFECT LADY" by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf definitely pronounce this production to be her most successful Goldwyn Picture.

"A PERFECT LADY" is a big stage hit by two nationally-known authors, with a universally loved star of constantly increasing popularity and appeal and directed with great skill by Clarence G. Badger.

Not forgetting the nation-wide acclaim that has greeted each new picture of this favorite star, Goldwyn is proud of the spontaneous approval shown in the following reviews:

NEW YORK AMERICAN: An unusually strong and laughable dramatic comedy with even bigger appeal than the original play.

NEW YORK SUN: Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn, "A Perfect Lady," is a winner. An inimitable and bewitching star.

NEW YORK POST: "In a Perfect Lady" Madge Kennedy is an even better comedienne than ever before...Delightful...Bright.

NEW YORK HERALD: Madge Kennedy has played many screen roles delightfully, but she has never before had a finer success than in "A Perfect Lady."

NEW YORK WORLD: "A Perfect Lady," was a stage hit and now Goldwyn has turned it into a truly enjoyable picture.

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: It would be hard to picturize a stage play more successfully than "A Perfect Lady" has been by Goldwyn..... One has to be glowingly enthusiastic in writing about Madge Kennedy."

Here are the whole-hearted, approving reviews of this production's pre-release at the Rialto, Theatre, New York:

N. Y. TELEGRAPH: "Too Fat To Fight" is a big, human drama of comedy and pathos filled with those fine "touches" that always gain popularity for the picture containing them.

N. Y. GLOBE: There are fat men and fat men, but Frank McIntyre is in a class by himself. "Too Fat To Fight" is a lovable, human story that big audiences are applauding.

N. Y. MAIL: "Too Fat To Fight" is a picture of which its author, star and director can well be proud. We predict for it great national popularity.

N. Y. POST: A most amusing and enjoyable comedy drama is Rex Beach's "Too Fat To Fight" at the Rialto. Mr. Beach was lucky in getting Frank McIntyre for the role.

N. Y. SUN: A powerful Beach scenario, a story of laughter and tears, a most appealing star all make "Too Fat To Fight" a pronounced success.

N. Y. TELEGRAM: All those who enjoy hearty laughter will both laugh and thrill when they see "Too Fat To Fight." It contains also just enough tears to make it intensely human.

The William Fox Idea—

The theatre had consumption of income. From a pretentious house catering to week stands of high grade theatrical companies, it wasted away in a year to a shadow. All that remained were its physical proportions. Inwardly it was all wrong—from gizzard to garret. The management tried vaudeville, tried pictures, tried vaudeville and pictures, tried everything—then quit.

A new management repeated its predecessor's failure, adding burlesque to the list of defeats. Other managements came and went and the house, by persistence and common consent, acquired the nickname "Graveyard." No one seemed to know why it did not "go." The owner of the building blamed the lessees and the lessees blamed "the town," the location and everything else that couldn't talk back.

Then came a man who had faith in the community and a conviction that a theatre located within two blocks of the business center of a population of 500,000 could be "put over." He started "putting," and his first swing almost unbalanced him. He had hit too strong. He wanted to electrify the town, but succeeded only in starting a report that he was crazy. However, he had a few dollars left when he came to his senses, and before spending them he held a commercial clinic.

He met a man at the clinic who talked reasonably—convincingly. The man told him that the theatre could be made a perfectly sound commercial enterprise; that it wasn't a question of "pictures or vaudeville" or "pictures and vaudeville," but of what pictures. The product offered should tempt public taste; there was no use trying to sell pate de foies gras to a foreign laboring population.

Why You Will Adopt It

That was a new idea to this exhibitor—his introduction to the Fox Idea. He assented to the Fox branch manager's suggestion that Fox pictures—the pictures the most of the people want—should be tried. The house then was taking in $75 a day; now it is averaging about $700. Formerly the theatre was opened at noon; now its morning receipts for six days pay the picture rentals. It is a monument to the Fox Idea.

The Fox Idea will help you. Fox branch offices encircle the world, and in every one of them are trained men—personal representatives of William Fox—who are prepared to demonstrate just how you can increase your profits. What you are making now, be it much or little, matters not to them. They know they are backed by the sort of pictures the great majority of people want. They see this proved every day, and are prepared to prove it to you.

Invite one of these experts in. Let him tell you what business CLEOPATRA has done in your territory—let him show you the number of days that LES MISERABLES has run—let him explain how THE BIG SIX has cleaned up for exhibitors at times when they most needed the money—let him give you figures on business done by THE PRUSSIAN CUR—let him show you how THE LAND OF THE FREE justifies the Fox Idea of timeliness — let him prove that QUEEN OF THE SEA is the best tonic ever administered to a failing bank account.

There's no obligation involved. Call the nearest Fox branch office today and get the proof. Fox salesmen talk facts, not theories. That's part of the Fox Idea.

"U. S. A. Series" 2-Reel Official Films

FACTS and figures that had to be kept more or less "under cover" until the war was won are now available to the public.

The United States Government has prepared and is now ready to show, through the Division of Films, a series of two-reel patriotic films, each featuring one phase of the war, one release to be made every two weeks.

The first film of the series

1—"If Your Soldier's Hit," released December 23rd, shows in complete detail the progress of the wounded soldier from battlefield through Field Hospital to Base Hospital and recuperation.

The other films in the U. S. A. Series are as follows:

2—"Wings of Victory"

A story of American achievement in the air—from the planning of the famous Liberty Motor to the day's work of an American Ace on the Western Front.

3—"Making the Nation Fit"

The story of how America took raw civilian material and converted it into A-1 marine and military stuff. The film shows also how this war-time physical fitness program can be employed with benefit in peace-time.

4—"Horses of War"

Despite the rapid development of the motor car for military purposes, the horse proved an indispensable factor in the Allied scheme of victory. A glorious chapter of war history.

5—"The Bath of Bullets"

This picture shows the part machine guns, hand-grenades, trench-mortars, and the artillery in general play in modern war—thrilling close-ups of how these destructive forces do their deadly work.

6—"The Storm of Steel"

$12,000,000,000! This film shows how the guns and munitions, for which this money was spent, were made. The Ordnance Department has a rattling good story to tell.

THE CLOSING DATE for the exhibitor advertising competition on "The Romance of Tarzan" has been advanced from December 29, 1918, to February 1, 1919.

If you have a small theatre and have had to postpone your season on the Tarzan sequel because of the influenza epidemic this is your chance to take part in the contest.

It gives you five weeks more in which to book it, advertise it and play it, and enter the contest.

Every exhibitor — large or small — who has entered the contest to date has played to tremendous business on this super attraction.

Now you have the opportunity of becoming a competitor for one of the prizes in the $1200 in Liberty Bonds offered by First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the best local campaign.

Your chances are just as good with a small theatre as they would be with a larger house. Get busy!

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT

"Played to 10,008 people in one day."—DAYTON THEATRE, DAYTON, O.

To Those Who Criticise First National's 'Extravagance'

"Virtuous Wives" is finished. We saw the completed production last night. It is a picture that will justify our preference for better pictures at higher prices more eloquently than any words of ours.

It is more than a month since we saw the first print. It was a good picture then. But it required additional cutting, titles had to be altered, some retakes made—in a word it had to be given the finish that marks the difference between a special and a program release.

All this takes time—the time of high salaried men—and costs money. But when "Virtuous Wives" goes to trial on the screens, with the public sitting in judgment—we have no fear of the verdict. We know that satisfaction to the public means profit to our own theatres and those of our customers.

Some exhibitors who have already contracted for it and perhaps felt that the price was too high, are going to admit that such productions are worth all they cost them—and more.

There is one angle to the matter which many exhibitors overlook: that is, that where they individually spend a few extra dollars for a real quality production, the producer must spend thousands. He takes the chance, not they. If such productions as "Virtuous Wives" fail to justify the money spent on them, it means bankruptcy to their producers. But here again "First National" is safeguarded. Our exhibitor Board of Directors, who contract for its attractions, have built their fortunes and the prestige of their theatres by experience and judgment. Their knowledge of trade conditions and composite judgment preclude the probability of unprofitable deals with stars and producers. We believe that our live and let live policy has at last won the confidence of the leading stars and responsible producers. We hope to merit their confidence.

Our hats off to Mr. Louis B. Mayer, successful exhibitor, successful exchange man, successful producer of "Virtuous Wives," which we trust will prove one of the big successes of the year and a vindication of our theories and policies.

And last, but not least—our congratulations to Anita Stewart. We count her sweet personality one of our great assets.

This Is Your Golden Opportunity!

You ought to know that "The Spreading Evil" is not a war picture—and yet has been given timely interest because of the war and the assembling of millions of men under conditions that threaten disaster for the future of all races.

You ought to know that the subject matter of the picture is being discussed in neswpapers and magazines and from the lecture platform everywhere.

You ought to know that "The Spreading Evil" has the hearty endorsement of the HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS and scores of others prominent in the official life of the nation. These men have come out flat-footed with statements that the general public ought to flock to see this picture.

You ought to know that, aside from this unusual draft, "The Spreading Evil" is possessed of an intensely dramatic, fast-moving story that will thrill any audience.

—And you STATE RIGHT BUYERS ought to know, moreover, that we have devised many unusual aids to help you get the money.

1919—BOOKER'S CALENDAR—1919

A REAL ASSET TO THE BOOKER

Here are extracts from a few of the recent letters from prominent Exchanges—from those who had last year's Calendar and had not yet received that for 1919. Scores of such letters have been received. Pretty sure evidence that the Booker's Calendar is a "hit."

WHAT EXCHANGE MEN SAY:

"It is a real asset to our booking department."

"It was a great help to us in our booking."

"It certainly proved to be one of the most convenient aids we have ever had; are going to be terribly disappointed if we do not receive one this year."

And there are lots more, all telling the same story of "service"

Volume 18. No. 25 December 21, 1918

Why All the Fuss?

THE news columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the past few weeks have reflected our attitude on the controversy raging over the admission of the Exhibitors League to equal control with the manufacturing interests in the National Association.

We have said little or nothing about it.

And now the climax has come.

The manufacturers failed to show enough interest to have a quorum at the meeting called to decide the point; the Exhibitors' League has withdrawn its application.

All is as it was before Peter Schaefer and William A. Brady had a presidential hand-shake in Chicago.

Except that—Peter Schaefer announces that he will now proceed with the job of organizing the Exhibitors' League in real strong fashion.

And the National Association members who have been spending their time in fruitless caucus over this controversy will be able to go ahead to problems more important to the industry.

* * * * * *

The Facts and the Dreams

ONLY the most roseate of optimists could have looked forward to a vision of the National Association's manufacturing interests and the Exhibitors' League working harmoniously in double harness.

The first tax question that came along, the first problem of proportions sufficient to bring about a difference of opinion, was certain to precipitate discord.

It's great to be a pacifist, to foresee naught but peace and unity—but it is foolish to blind one's self to the fact that manufacturer and retailer interests in this business are continually on the ragged edge of opposition.

True—they shouldn't be.

But why borrow trouble when the evolution of a few years may bring the industry to the point where union can be secured without any necessity for danger signals?

The National Association alone is not big enough now to lead us to this Promised Land; the Exhibitors' League alone has not the proportions.

If each will go its own way, building slowly, surely and strongly—then we'll have a chance.

Until then, why get fussed up to the extent of pages of white space over the proposed union?

* * * * * *

It's the Same Old Story

NINE out of ten of MOTION PICTURE NEWS exhibitor readers don't care two rows of pins whether the Exhibitors' League becomes a part of the National Association or not.

And this includes League members.

Seven out of ten MOTION PICTURE NEWS exhibitor readers haven't an iota of interest in the doings of national exhibitor organizations.

Why?

Because with each change in control of the League it is always some side-issue that steals the majority of the calendar months from the new president. And always organization work that suffers.

One time it may be a new trade paper; another, a new booking proposition; often nothing more important than Expositions; and this time a hair-splitting dicker with the National Association.

But each and every time it is the organization work that is neglected.

This time there is hope.

We know Peter Schaefer is mad—mad at the time spent away from Chicago over this Association wrangle.

We hope he is mad enough to go out and organize a one hundred per cent. Exhibitors' League.

We know he is big enough to do it.

Go to it—Pete.

Wasting Some Space

AN Ontario official—by name M. McGarry—is considerably wrought up over the fact that motion pictures shown there "invariably portray the actions of the American army both in the United States and overseas, and that on very few occasions are there any views of the Canadian army, nor is it often that one sees anything depicted on the screen here with regard to the British army."

In fact, so "het up" has Brother McGarry become that "he will be obliged to instruct the Censors to cut out much of the material such as that which has recently been shown throughout the Province," unless more films showing the part played by Great Britain and Canada in the war are shown.

Some of our friends believe that we should say something about Brother McGarry. He really doesn't deserve it. We can think of no more appropriate comment than silence.

But since we have wasted this much space on him we might ask a question or two.

First—Mr. McGarry bases his action on solicitude for the tender feelings of Canadian patrons. Since Ontario exhibitors are in business to make money by pleasing their patrons, does he believe that any further solicitude is needed than that of the managers who book the pictures?

Second—It is true that the United States was in the war

but a short time while Great Britain and Canada bore the brunt for four years. But picture audiences—American as well as Canadian—have watched British and Canadian fighters for four years, and Americans but a few months.

And third—Does Mr. McGarry want picture producers to stage special productions for the Province of Ontario, with a population less than that of New York City?

Our Bothersome Friend "Anonymous"

DO you remember that anonymous letter, signed "Exhibitor," which we ran last week as part of the collection on the controversy started by J. A. Quinn?

We published it over editorial scruples because it poked gentle fun at the other writers. And we thought that would help "start something."

It did—but not the right kind. For a valiant champion of First National tells us that the letter was a malicious attack on that organization. We didn't see it then; we don't now—but we agree with our friend who speaks up for First National—

There are no moral cowards among exhibitors.

An exhibitor would not be afraid to sign his name to an expression of opinion.

So the letter must have been written by someone other than an exhibitor.

Take your pick.

TO THE EXHIBITORS AND THEATRE OWNERS OF THE UNITED STATES

As we go to press the following statement was received from Peter J. Schaefer, President of the Exhibitors Branch, N.A.M.P.I.:

At the National Association meeting it seemed to be conclusive to all the exhibitors present that the manufacturers and distributors would prefer to continue the admitted present chaotic conditions rather than to endorse a movement that would organize the exhibitors' branch of the industry in a proper maner. The manufacturers and distributors evidently fear that the exhibitors' branch might not act fairly when so organized and might fail to exert the power that they would possess for the benefit of the whole industry.

Certainly the admission of this weakness on the part of the manufacturers and distributors is conclusive that it is necessary for the exhibitor of the United States to perfect an organization independent of all the others in the industry, in order to protect and encourage their business in every way possible.

The By-laws Committee of the Amalgamated Leagues will be asked to frame the new by-laws for the new Exhibitors' League upon such a basis. It would become evident to every exhibitor and picture theatre owner in the United States that it is imperative for the future success of his own business to become identified with this movement at once.

We should control our own destinies and not be controlled. The result of these recent events must finally bring the realization to the exhibitors that they must act. I appeal to every exhibitor and theatre owner in the United States to join this new exhibitor movement—a movement that will make the exhibitors one of the most powerful organizations in the United States. It is well within their power so to be,

(Signed) PETER J. SCHAEFER.

New York, December 11, 1918.

P. S.—HOW WE ARE HANDLING THE TAX SITUATION:

A committee consisting of Alfred S. Black and myself have an appointment with Chairman Kitchin of the Ways and Means Committee, at Washington on Friday, December 13, where we shall appear especially in behalf of the exhibitors to obtain reductions and eliminations on admission, reel and seating taxes as proposed in the new Revenue Bill.

Don't forget that the House of Representativees has already passed a taxation bill that is ruinous to our business. While the Senate Finance Committee has since recommended some reduction from the tax bill as passed by the House, all pressure possible must be brought upon the members of Congress to relieve us from the burdens as proposed.

A letter from your Congressman and Senator will help. Don't wait. ACT NOW.

Dealing in Personalities

"He First Used the Colored Insert"

WE could think of a lot of reasons for running this picture of Arthur James. But the actual one is that, viewing those striking inserts of "Eye for Eye" and "The Great Victory," we thought it about time that somebody introduced the man who—

—First used the colored insert in motion picture advertising week after week.

He's guilty.

Arthur James likes inserts—and judging from the results, inserts like Arthur James. The only time Arthur doesn't like inserts is when everybody else is using them. Then he generally turns to something else, just to be original—and he usually is.

By the way, we have committed lese majesty or something or other all through this paragraph. We've been saying "Arthur James" when it should be "Captain Arthur James," of the Seventh Regiment, New York State Guard.

Beg your pardon, Captain.

The De Milles are in town. Jesse Lasky is in town. Material for a rumor story there. Write it yourself.

Bob Priest will soon be found on the eighth floor of the Times Building, adjoining the National Association. "Moving to larger quarters because of expansion of business."

Doc Willat leaves for Florida's balmy air on December 21. 'Sgreat to be a magnate.

Following the exclusive NEWS story that Educational and Griffith had joined hands on a deal comes the rumor that E. W. Hammons and J. J. McCarthy are on the way East closely guarding a ten-reel masterpiece.

LLOYD WHITESIDE, who has been pounding a typewriter for Universal, left that company and New York flat last week to go searching for a pot of gold somewhere out in the Ozarks.

THE RECONSTRUCTION discussions of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Atlantic City last weekend were graced by the presence of Walter Irwin, John Flinn and Frederick H. Elliott.

"This Is 'Him' That Squares It"

AFTER stating—as usual—that we have a full and complete alibi for the unfortunate occurrence that resulted in a photo of Augustus Thomas being used a few weeks ago to illustrate a paragraph about Harry Raver, we will let you read the scorching call-down we received for the "bull":

Dear Bob Welsh:—

Why illuminate my paragraph with the portrait of another?

Isn't my old-fashioned face good enough for the occasion or were you afraid it wouldn't lend the proper atmosphere to your highly eulogistic assault.

Thank God the crime you committed involved the man I admire and respect most in this life and I must feel complimented.

I tremble at the thought that you might have, by the same mistake, picked one of those "Harpoon" characters (disreputable things!).

Fervently,
RAVER.

W. W. Irwin Resigns from Vitagraph

Retains His Stockholdings in the Organization, But Considers Starting Company of His Own—Plans a Rest Before Resuming Activities—Successor Not Named

THE ever-changing tide of the motion picture industry last week witnessed the withdrawal of Walter W. Irwin from the Vitagraph organization, and later listened to Dame Gossip spread all sorts of rumors up and down Broadway as to who would succeed him. Up to the time of going to press a successor had not been named.

The resignation of Mr. Irwin, who was general manager and treasurer of Vitagraph, was handed in at a meeting of the Board of Directors held December 9, to take effect January 1, 1919. It is understood that he plans a rest before resuming film activities, which may mean the organization of his own company or association with a unit already on a sound footing.

The impression conveyed is that Mr. Irwin is as yet undecided which course he will take.

Business Differences

In a statement December 11 to the trade press Mr. Irwin declared continued and unalterable differences of judgment as to business policy caused him to request the acceptance of his resignation. It is understood, however, that Mr. Irwin retains his stock holdings in the Vitagraph Company.

It will be recalled that Mr. Irwin became the general manager and treasurer of the V. L. S. E. upon its incorporation in April of 1915, opened its first branch office and continued to build the organization to its present status, with twenty-seven offices in the United States and Canada.

The statement said: "Mr. Irwin's career in the motion picture industry has been a most progressive and interesting one. In May of 1915, with the feature product of four manufacturers to handle, he introduced and developed its highest degree of efficiency, what was known as the 'open booking policy,' under which were sold the pictures of each producer, absolutely according to their drawing power or box office value, so that an exhibitor could have what he wanted, when he wanted it, for as long as he wanted it, and at a price commensurate with its merit. This open booking policy appealed so strongly to the exhibitor that many companies thereafter adopted it; but in September of 1916, when the Vitagraph Company bought the interests of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies in the sales organization, Mr. Irwin, with the product of but one manufacturer to handle, inaugurated what he termed the 'rotary star system,' but which is precisely the same as the 'star series' system followed by several companies in 1917 and in operation today.

"Mr. Irwin was likewise the first to create a profit sharing system, by which all of the employes of the sales organization shared in a definite percentage of the profits, and thereafter in 1917, in addition to the profit sharing, he introduced into his organization the bonus plan, by which each branch organization received a percentage of the gross proceeds over and above a given quota assigned to it.

Built Strong Organization

"Upon the forming of the V. L. S. E. he began at once to build for a permanent organization by making the employes realize fully that advancement from the ranks was a fundamental principle of the company; that nothing counted but merit and that Mr. Irwin had no proteges. Prior to this time loyalty in distributing organizations had not been fostered, and almost every employe in that branch of the industry had worked at some time for every company in the business and continually jumped from one to another. The policy of advancement from the ranks, based solely on recognition of merit, together with the freedom of the organization from politics, quickly began to make for permanency, with the result that there are many branch managers today in the V. L. S. E. who have been with the company since the first month of its existence and who rose from the ranks.

"Mr. Irwin was the founder of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and of the present National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is and has been chairman of the Executive Committee since its formation.

"It was in May of 1915 that he called a meeting of producers and distributors in the projection room of his offices because of the censorship conditions then existing, and pointed out to those present that effective work for the protection and promotion of the industry could only be accomplished through co-operation brought about by a properly formed organization, and laid out a plan for a Board of Trade in which all branches of the industry would be properly represented and cared for. Unfortunately, however, the industry was not then ready for the degree of co-operation which Mr. Irwin desired. At the time the Board of Trade was formed the producers did not know each other, and did not want to know the exhibitors, and the exhibitors considered the producers to be their natural enemies.

Points Out Mistakes

"About a year later, recognizing that it was absolutely essential for the various branches of the industry to come into real co-ordination upon censorship and other vital questions, Mr. Irwin called together at a luncheon at Sherry's eighty-five of the leading producers, distributors and exhibitors. This was the first meeting of the producers and distributors with exhibitors for the purpose of considering the protection and promotion of the industry as a whole. He pointed out the mistakes of the Board of Trade, and defined the principles upon which the National Association now exists. A committee to formulate the constitution and by-laws of the National Association was appointed at that luncheon, of which Mr. Irwin was made chairman, and the working plan and constitution and by-laws of the present Association were formulated by Mr. Irwin and his committee."

In regard to his plan for the future, Mr. Irwin stated that he was considering an invitation to become interested in another organization. He also admitted that he possibly would create his own distributing organization, as he has many times been urged to do so, for the handling of definite lines of product, a great deal of which has been offered to him.

He further said that the whole foreign market offered a tremendous field for development. That it is perfectly apparent that every producing company has practically treated its foreign business as a by-product, notwithstanding the fact that the population of Europe is so many times greater than the population of the United States and Canada, and that as a result the motion picture has not yet been adopted by all classes of Europe and other parts of the world as their chief means of entertainment and education; for in some countries only the classes enjoyed the picture, whereas the masses are almost totally ignorant of its value, while in England, for instance, it is only lately that the classes have begun to recognize the importance of the picture in motion. He then pointed out that in this age of world democracy, with America possessing the good-will of all

WUXTRY! WUXTRY!!

All About the Fans Who Had to Go Chewingumless

ANARCHY seems running riot within the ranks of those fans who sit attentively in their orchestra seats at the motion picture palace and chew gum in time with the orchestra as the hero rescues the "goil."

Some annoyed person or persons, tiring of the chin music caused by the band of chewers, evidently conspired to put an end to such a wanton display of etiquette, for a dispatch from Indianapolis reads:

"Burglars recently broke into a motion picture theatre and confectionery store operated by M. J. Cain at 1224 South West street and destroyed $15 worth of chewing gum."

There is said to be no truth in the rumor that residents of Indianapolis contemplate forming clubs to practice close harmony or syncopation while attending the picture theatres.

"Plain Common Sense"

And How It Changed A $10,000 A Year Flivver Into A $9,000 Winner For A Michigan Manager.

By HARRY SCOTT

Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Detroit, Mich.

¶ The "Daily Change" Went Overboard First.

¶ The "Standing Order" for Advertising Material Was Next to Go.

¶ He Booked the Big Specials and the Patrons Were Glad to Pay Bigger Prices.

THE methods by which a Michigan exhibitor has converted a theatre losing $10,000 a year into a proposition which paid him $9,000 in profits for the twelve months just ended are worth the attention of any theatre owner for their lessons in common sense application of recognized business principles to the retail end of the film industry.

In this territory alone there are a score of exhibitors whom I know to be anchored to fixed policies and beliefs which are giving them profits of from $3,000 to $5,000 a year, when with a little initiative and mental effort, they could double their returns. There are other exhibitors who come into my office with the invariable complaint that they cannot make their theatres pay. They are always hard pressed to meet their film bills. Any suggestion that they book a big special attraction and put 25 per cent of the rental price into advertising and promotion work is rebuffed by their pessimistic theory that "the people in our town won't pay more than ten cents, and they'll come anyhow, whether I advertise or not."

The man who has just completed a year's work as an exhibitor with a gross profit of $9,000 from a theatre which previously had lost $10,000 a year did only those things that any exhibitor can do to change the tide of fortune in his favor. There is nothing impossible in his accomplishment, nothing that is particularly unusual, unless it is the unfailing display of common sense he has. His house is in a typical small city, with a patronage that is equally typical of any other community. The chief difference in his situation of a year ago and that of the average exhibitor of today is in the public opinion he had to combat which classed his theatre as a failure and a sort of last resort when amusement was sought. This was the fault of his predecessor, who was one of the exhibitors that is always hard pressed to meet his film bills, and who could not understand the possibilities which exist in the doing of the unusual, unexpected things.

Several Managers in Three Years

CONSEQUENTLY, when W. S. Butterfield, head of the theatre circuit of that name, decided to buy the Garden theatre at Flint, Michigan, he did so partly through the opinions he had formed after a personal investigation, and partly on the recommendation of his general manager, Clarence W. Beatty. At Mr. Butterfield's request Mr. Beatty had thoroughly investigated local conditions, and he was prepared to back the opinion he had formed of the opportunity for progressive work. The Garden theatre had been managed by several different men during the three years prior to its purchase by Mr. Butterfield. This had not helped its popularity with local theatre-goers. And on the Saturday that the deal was consummated the house showed a loss of about $200 for the week.

The theatre was in good condition, with a choice location and a seating equipment of nine hundred and two chairs. The first thing Mr. Beatty did was to examine the books—not the usual cursory examination to discover profits and losses, but with the analytical method by which he had convinced himself and Mr. Butterfield that The Garden theatre could be made to pay. He found that certain programs had been used, month after month, always at a loss. A policy of daily change had been maintained without regard for the merits and drawing power of the features used. The standing order with the exchanges for advertising matter he found to consist of two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet and one set of photographs and a slide. This order prevailed without respect to the quality and previously proven box-office value of the productions. He found, upon checking the files of every local newspaper, that very little advertising space had been used by The Garden. His earlier general survey of the situation had shown him that his predecessor had done no billboard advertising, although Flint is a city of eighty thousand population, and therefore more than big enough to justify this form of publicity. Nor had the house ever boasted of a mailing list.

Briefly, he found just a theatre, with the standard physical equipment without which it could not operate, plus a good location and a reasonable capacity. But there was no motive power in it. He had purchased a rural Rolls Royce that needed gasoline of the mental kind to generate it into action. Mr. Butterfield had provided the vehicle and put it up to Mr. Beatty to contribute the power to develop momentum.

The admission price had been ten cents straight, excepting on Saturdays and Sundays when the management had, for some unknown reason, shown sufficient nerve and courage to increase it to ten and fifteen cents, but without giving the public any better pictures at the increased price than he did for the smaller admissions during the week. Saturday and Sunday, in his mind at least, evidently cast some mysterious influence over his screen which resulted in the psychic betterment of the pictures. Of course, the public knew, understood, and agreed with this. This might be the case in New York, Boston, Chicago, or a really metropolitan city, but not in a town the size of Flint.

"Longer Runs" the First Step

MR. BEATTY is a pretty good hunter. He never pulls the trigger on his bird until he is sure that the gun is loaded, cocked and accurately sighted. And he understands the differences necessary in powder for various kinds of game. That is why he is Mr. Butterfield's general manager. He decided that this particular local quarry could best be driven from cover by tri-weekly program changes, instead of the daily change, providing that the proper attractions were booked, using the best available program productions on the two-day runs, and a special each week for the three-day runs. He figured that the extra day's run justified something more than the ordinary attraction. He knew this would be the psychological impression in the public mind. Prospective patrons would feel that a film shown for three days had greater quality than those used for but two days. And he did not propose to let them find out that they were anything but right in this interpretation of the reason for the three days' run each week. You see, he was digging just a little bit below the surface in his reasoning to get the relation between cause and effect.

He contracted for billboard locations by the year, made arrangements with hotels, cigar stands, ice cream parlors and drug stores for the display of neat bulletin boards announcing the current and coming programs at the theatre; new contracts were made with the newspapers which called for much greater space than this house ever had used before, and then, as the crowning extravagance to his mad financial dissipation, he actually employed the spare time of one of the local newspaper reporters to do something which would cost him even more money—he wanted him to get out a weekly house organ. Somehow, he felt a sense of anticipatory pride in that house organ, and decided that it would be mailed under first-class postage. It was important to him, and he didn't propose to sacrifice its dignity and importance to the intended readers by sending it out as ordinary circular literature, under second-class rates. With the aid of the city directory and the telephone book he and his reporter assistant compiled a mailing list which included the name of every family and individual within a square mile of the theatre.

¶ "Seven Openings in Three Years," the Previous Record.

¶ But the Other Fellows Had "Grand Openings" and Then Stopped.

¶ This Boy Started His Hard Work After the Opening and He "Kept 'Em Coming."

He wanted to reach beyond this point, but decided to start at that, and experiment with possibilities for new patronage beyond the square-mile limit by having the largest of the local laundry companies include one of his house organs in every bundle of laundry returned to customers in any part of the town.

Then the fireworks started. People began to hint that David Belasco was preparing to corner the towns' amusements. They talked about the big trust methods that Mr. Beatty was using, the lavish methods he was employing to get people to attend The Garden, and the pessimists predicted another quick failure with a new owner and manager on the horizon. The optimists, who had traveled far and seen some of the big city motion picture theatres, held their breath and prayed.

They Thought Him "Dotty"

MR. BEATTY had given sufficient attention for the moment to the general field of patronage outside the theatre. Now he began to figure out what to do inside the house to make it conform in every respect to the impression it was certain to get through the advertising he was doing. The first step was to have it thoroughly renovated from the front of the lobby to the screen. He went in, had all of the lights turned on, and sat down and looked around. There was something about the color scheme and decorations which struck him as being a trifle harsh and disquieting. So they were changed, and changed again, until he could sit down in any part of the theatre and feel that it was "comfy" and home-like. He walked up and down the street for a block each side of the theatre until passersby whispered to one another that he was out walking off the nervousness he felt over the lemon he had induced Mr. Butterfield to buy. So Mr. Beatty had fooled them again. Instead, he was sizing up the lobby from every angle. He wanted it to pull equally well from every point of view.

He did not feel that he could afford a big orchestra in addition to the very splendid pipe organ with which the theatre was equipped. So he wrote to Chicago, and offered to pay six musicians as much as a ten-piece orchestra would cost, thus saving himself the salaries of a much larger orchestra. He figured that six musicians earning more than they would ordinarily be paid, would, when supplemented by a good organist, give him the same results that he could get from a fifteen-piece orchestra. Later developments proved that his reasoning was practical.

Then came the first real action. The initial issue of the house organ made its appearance. I have seen a copy of it, and I have no hesitancy in saying that it was jammed with pep and honest talk. In it was a letter to the public of Flint, calling attention to the new policy of the theatre. Mr. Beatty explained that this policy cost money, and that the only way he could get it back was to charge a higher admission price. But he made this point: he was giving them more for more money. He told them to come once or twice, and if the show wasn't worth the price, to get their money back at the box office and refuse to patronize The Garden again.

Big Pictures at Big Prices

CONSIDERABLE newspaper space was given to the announcement of the three days' run each week. He had booked such productions as "My Four Years in Germany," "Tarzan of the Apes," "War Brides," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "The Crisis." The admission price for "My Four Years in Germany" was twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents. "Tarzan of the Apes" sold out to standing room at every performance at twenty and thirty cents.

Mr. Beatty's predecessor at The Garden had a contract for the First National Chaplin comedies at $50 a day. He continued this contract on the first one, "A Dog's Life," and then changed it so that he played "Shoulder Arms" during the first week of its release. They cost him more, of course, but he claims that it is well worth the price.

He opened the Garden theatre to the biggest crowd that had ever patronized any local house, and I know from his receipts that only about ten per cent of that first night's audiences failed to get in for at least one show during the week.

Now I want to present another point on which Mr. Beatty differs from some exhibitors. He had worked hard in preparation for the opening of the theatre, but he did not feel that this was the most difficult part of his task. He knew that people will try anything once or twice. The big job was to hold them after they had started to patronize his shows. So he settled down to a period of hard work. Remember, the Garden had had several different managers and as many grand openings of one kind or another in three years, and each time the public had come, looked, listened, went away and didn't come back.

Momand to "Carry On"

THE next step in Mr. Beatty's plan was C. Edgar Momand, who became the active manager of the Garden. And to Mr. Momand is given the credit for keeping the Garden at top pitch as an amusement place. Mr. Beatty modestly refuses to be blamed for the success of the house after Mr. Momand had been installed. He sums up his part in the recent history of the place in this wise:

"I got things started chiefly because there was no one else available at the moment to do it. It is just as big a job to keep a thing going as it is to get it under way. And Mr. Momand deserves all of the credit for the week-in and week-out success of the house. He has comparatively no co-operation from me in handling his bookings."

Whether Mr. Momand is following Mr. Beatty's ideas I do not know, but I do know that, whoever is responsible, the result is worth the study of any exhibitor. Following, briefly, are several things that are institutional at the Garden. The greatest care is given to the booking of short subjects to make up a program. The value of a well-balanced show is obvious, and the one and two-reel subjects are just as severely scrutinized as the feature attractions. The hiring of a new employe for work of any character in the theatre is similar to determining a candidate for the presidency. There are a score of factors considered, and the applicant has to be satisfactory in every particular before he or she is engaged. Ushers are constantly drilled in courtesy, they are taught what to anticipate in the nature of patrons' wants, they are veritable catalogues of information on screen data, and they are consulted scores of times a day by patrons who want to know about stars, forthcoming productions or current attractions. If one of them is asked a question he cannot answer, he makes a note of it, gets the information, and then the question and the answer are supplied to all of the ushers.

Personal neatness is insisted upon. A soiled collar, an unshaven chin, hair overly long, shoes unshined or trousers unpressed are certain to be censured. The physical equipment of the house receives the same careful inspection every day.

"The Little Things Count"

ALL of this infinite attention to seemingly minor details has contributed a great deal to the recent success of the Garden. Mr. Momand tries not to overlook a single item, no matter how unimportant it may seem. He demands perfection in the pictures he shows, and he wants the same perfection in the atmosphere and surroundings in which he presents them.

The Butterfield policy of the consistent use of large newspaper

Influenza Flareback Renews Agitation

Managers Fear Closing Orders in Many Sections—Cincinnati Bars Children—Northwest Situation Clouded

DETROIT, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Cincinnati were this week added to the list of cities reporting alarming signs of an influenza flareback and renewed agitation to close the theatres. It is also reported that 70 per cent. of the theatres in the Omaha territory are closed.

Cincinnati has already closed the schools and barred the children from theatres. San Diego amusement places have been allowed to open, but patrons must wear masks. Springfield, Illinois, Ogden, Utah, and Butte, Montana, are other cities still flying danger signals.

Green Bay, Wisconsin, gives a lesson to health authorities throughout the country in the remarkable results of the application of the quarantine to influenza cases. So quickly did the new cases drop to negligible figures, that bans on public gatherings were found unnecessary.

Fear Statewide Closing Order

DETROIT, (Special).—It looks very much as though a statewide closing order will again be issued by the State Board of Health. It had, in fact, been planned to order every theatre closed Saturday, December 7th, but the health authorities were prevailed on to hold it off another week.

The situation in Michigan, according to the reports from Lansing, is that in some communities the "flp" is worse than ever before. It appears that a few cities, such as Pontiac and Bay City, have never been widely opened up.

The film exchanges have sent out one-sheet posters to tvery theatre in the state and managers are displaying slides and reading announcements asking their patrons to use every precaution to not only keep from spreading the disease, but to protect themselves

If the state authorities order theatres closed but do not order everything else closed, injunction proceedings will undoubtedly be brought by the theatre owners, the exchanges and the dance hall proprietors on the ground of discrimination.

It is only in the last few days that cases of influenza have been quarantined, and it has been found that the last closing order was illegal because cases were not quarantined as the law demands.

It is a certainty that if the theatres are closed every church, school house, department store and industry where people meet, must be closed, if the lawyers for the picture men have their say.

Ohio Outlook Is Blue

CINCINNATI (Special).—A second ban on picture shows as the result of the influenza epidemic has hit Cincinnati motion picture shows. The Board of Health has ordered all schools closed and restricted attendance to persons sixteen years and over. No school children are allowed to attend the shows.

The health authorities in Newport, a Kentucky suburb immediately opposite Cincinnati, have enforced the same ruling, and word comes from Columbus, Ohio, that the same action has been taken there.

Hamilton, Ohio, eighteen miles north of Cincinnati, has a grievance, and the motion picture devotees have joined hands with the managers in a movement to have the influenza ban in that city lifted. They claim that an injustice is being done the theatres, as the danger point has been passed.

Milwaukee Managers Cooperate

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Special).—Milwaukee is again in the grip of the "flu." Conditions this time are worse than during the previous epidemic, and unless they improve everthying from churches to saloons will be closed tight. This was the warning issued Saturday, December 7th, by Health Commissioner George Ruhland at a meeting of the downtown photoplay and theatre managers, called to consider the situation.

Commissioner Ruhland received assurance from the managers that thy would do everything in their power to co-operate with him and prevent a general shut-down of industries. The result was that Sunday saw all theatres playing, but to 75 per cent. of their capacity; ticket takers, at the outside lobby doors, allowing no chowds around the box offices, and signs and slides warning the public against the disease.

During the meeting the theatre men went the health commissioner one better by requesting a general shut-down of everything immediately instead of waiting until Tuesday. Incidentally they made it plain that they wehe tired of being the goats during the application of half way measures, and could see no good reasons why they should be closed while saloons and department stores were allowed to remain open.

The managers stated that they thought that the only way to fight the epidemic was a complete closing of everything immediately, though agreeing to be guided by the health department's opinion and cooperate with it thoroughly.

Twin City Exchanges Worried

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Special).—Following the closing of twenty-two public schools by Health Commissioner Guilford, Wednesday, December 4th, rumors were current that the ban on motion picture theatres, recently lifted after being on tight for five weeks, might again be clamped on. Despite the fact that extreme cold has reigned during the past week many new cases of influenza have been reported in Minneapolis, and Mr. Guilford and the health council were scheduled to meet December 5th to decide whether to close theatres again or not. In St. Paul, where theatres were only closed eight days, it has also been rumored that the ban might be put on picture theatres again, but Mayor Hodgson, interviewed by the NEWS representative, stated that such reports were entirely without foundation.

In several cities of the Northwest theatres have been allowed to open after being closed five weeks only to be shut up again by a new spread of influenza within the past ten days. On the Iron Range in Minnesota, considered one of the most prosperous theatrical districts in the entire country, the outlook is that the present winter will be the worst showmen have ever experienced.

Springfield Business Hit

SPRINGFIELD, ILL. (Special).—A second epidemic of influenza is now sweeping Springfield and as a result the theatre business is demoralized.

ON A VACATION!

This Health Officer Closed the Theatre and Then Blew—Away for His Health?

WE give you here an exhibitor's letter that contains a laugh and a tragedy—it depends on how you look at it. The laugh is at the expense of the "Health Officer" of an Ohio town—the tragedy is with the exhibitor who must do business there. Here it is:

Leesburg, Ohio,
December 3, 1918.

Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

This is simply a statement of facts to let you know that in some instances, at least, the epidemic has hit the little fellow harder than the big houses.

The trouble in the small towns is that one man, generally a physician, as in our case, is the Health Officer, and he, of course, is a czar in his realm.

All schools, churches and my theatre (the only one) were closed here at the beginning of the epidemic, on October 5. After remaining closed for five weeks, we opened up on November 11, and were open exactly one week, being closed again on the 17th.

We have now been closed almost three weeks on this second hitch.

To cap the climax, our Health Officer left this morning for New Mexico to be gone a matter of ten days. He is supposed to be our leading physician, but seemingly felt that his practice could get along without him for a while. BUT, he left the quarantine on in full force during his absence. We have very few cases, and the neighborhood and vicinity is clean. We have no redress and must simply wait. Before the train left I asked him as to the future but he would give me no satisfaction. As I cannot see how the situation can be improved more than it is now, it begins to look like everything here was closed permanently for the period of this gentleman's term of office.

So you see, we have troubles all our own.

Sincerely yours,
CARROLL E. KING.

A meeting of the Influenza-Pneumonia Commission was called to talk over the matter of closing the playhouses again. When the theatre men were called upon for a statement, Arthur Fitzgerald, attorney for the amusement people, replied. Mr. Fitzgerald stated that the theatres would be glad to co-operate in any way possible to check the epidemic, even to closing. But he added that if the theatres must close, so must the stores, the factories, mines and all places where crowds congregate.

After a long session, it was decided to allow the theatres to stay open, but signs would be posted in a conspicuous manner in the box office and lobbies calling attention to those who have coughs and colds and refusing them admittance.

These signs were posted in every theatre and business house, and a policeman was stationed at the theatre entrances and entrances to big stores to see that the ruling was carried out. As a result of all the agitation and sign posting, business has dropped until every playhouse in the city is running along at about fifty per cent decrease.

Business Booms in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, Cal. (Special). — Los Angeles theatres opened December 2 and the first three days of the week played to far greater business than had been anticipated by the managers. Judging from the report from other cities, Los Angeles theatremen did not expect a normal business, even though the theatres had been closed for almost eight weeks. All had the impression that in other cities where houses were closed, people were afraid to attend the theatres the opening week for fear of contracting influenza. The second week in other cities business was reported to be about normal, while the third week went ahead of the receipts previous to the close down.

The bills of the several downtown houses are as follows: Grauman's, Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky"; Sennett's "Beware of Strangers," etc.; Clune's Broadway, Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane"; Tally's Broadway, Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots"; Rialto, Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl"; Kinema, Dorothy Dalton in "Vive La France"; Ray's Garden, Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins"; Alhambra, Robert Warwick in "Accidental Honeymoon"; Superba, Monroe Salisbury in "Hugon the Mighty"; Symphony, Dorothy Phillips in "Talk of the Town."

No special features were added to any of the local theatre programs for the first week, the general plan being that special programs would be given at a later date when it was thought they would draw bigger business.

Reports from Many Sections

Ogden, Utah (Special).—Local theatres are still closed as a result of the influenza epidemic but the expectation is strong among the managers that the ban will be lifted on Dec. 18.

If this is done it is certain that the city will still remain under a strict quarantine.

The situation has improved greatly here in the past few days and the state-wide ban was lifted on December 9.

San Diego, Cal. (Special).—The ban on theatres in this city was lifted on Dec. 9 and the houses opened the following day.

But it hasn't meant much to business yet for the theatres are operating under the handicap of a rule which makes the wearing of a mask obligatory on all except when at home. This ordinance will continue in effect ten days.

The raising of the ban came as a surprise following the closing down of the theatres on Dec. 7, for the second time, because of the influenza epidemic. This order, which also affected schools, churches and all places of business except those handling necessities, was declared effective for five days. But improvement in conditions and the spirit of co-operation shown by the theatre and business men brought about the early relief.

Green Bay, Wis. (Special).—This city had two experiments at the closing of public places without showing any appreciable result in the fight against the influenza peril.

Then the City Council ordered a strict quarantine over all homes inhabited by persons with influenza. The ordinance went into effect Tuesday, December 3, and by December 7 the effect in reducing the number of new cases of the dangerous contagious disease had become apparent to the health authorities. The number of new cases of influenza dropped from 24 and 30 on December 2 and 3 to 5 on December 6.

With the adoption of the quarantine ordinance, the City Council lifted the ban which closed picture houses and other public places for a period of one week. The closing order was the second since the influenza epidemic broke out here in September. The new method of handling the situation precludes any possibility of future orders shutting up picture houses and other amusement places, and that fact is gratifying to the owners of houses who suffered financial loss when their houses were dark. The constant worry of the theatre owners and managers that they might be cut out of a revenue at any time under the old method of closing public places in an attempt to curb the epidemic is no longer with the owners and managers.

Brady Resigns Presidency; League Quits Association

FAILURE to secure a quorum December 10 to vote on the question of the admission of the Exhibitors' League Branch to the National Association on a fifty-fifty basis resulted in a whirlwind of action.

William A. Brady, recently re-elected president of the National Association, read to the stenographer his resignation from that post.

Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, resigned from the Association and stated that the League would go on its own way in the future.

The action of the two executives came as the climax of a slimly attended meeting at which the air was constantly throbbing with possibilities for trouble.

For weeks past the manufacturers and producers in the Association are known to have been in frequent caucus on the question of the admission of the League to equal representation on the Executive Committee and Board of Directors.

Many of the manufacturers are said to have been flatly opposed to this from the beginning, while others based their opposition on the allegation that the exhibitors would not consent to pay a pro rata share of the Association's expenses if admitted to fifty-fifty interest.

In the course of his remarks at Tuesday's meeting President Schaefer is said to have intimated that the producers got cold feet and instead of appearing and going on record agreed to stay away and prevent a quorum. After the meeting he declared: "We will go ahead full steam on the job of organizing the Exhibitors' League. I believe we will be better off without any entangling alliances."

The rumor spreaders have not even started on the task of electing a successor to William A. Brady as National Association head. Many inclined to the belief that sufficient pressure would be brought to bear to induce him to withdraw the resignation.

Following the meeting Peter Schaefer left for Washington, where he intends to do some work on behalf of the exhibitors in connection with the new revenue legislation.

War Films Are Through—Brunet

Paul Brunet of Pathe Says Reconstruction Period Opens Up Larger Field, But War Films Are Through

WHILE MOTION PICTURE NEWS published the views of several producers last issue, and they all predicted a long vogue for war films, Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., believes that, to the contrary, the war films are through.

In response to the request of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS as to the probable effect of the reconstruction period upon motion pictures, Mr. Brunet made the following statement:

"First of all I believe it will mean the discontinuance of the war drama. The war theme has been worked into a majority of the pictures produced during the last two years. The people are tired of that; they have had enough war. This is evidenced by the mad rush of motion picture advertisers to disclaim that theirs is a war picture.

"The result of this lessened demand for the picture drama with the war theme will certainly mean much smaller returns to the producers and distributors of war pictures, many of whom have spent vast sums of money in producing and advertising the same.

"But, on the other hand, the reconstruction period upon which we are now entering opens up a greater, larger field than the world has known in four long years.

"During that period the industry has made great strides. While few people expected hostilities to cease for at least another year, many of the big producers and distributors have had their plans made for many months past to take up their new work upon the cessation of hostilities, and the task before them will not find them unprepared.

"While the industry may expect to bear the burden of taxation already imposed upon it, and which is reputed to have driven out of business many producers and about one-quarter of the exhibitors, it will now know where it stands, and can make its plans accordingly; it will no longer have to work under the uncertainty of not knowing just what additional burden will be placed upon it.

"New producing companies will undoubtedly spring up and the old ones will extend the scope of their operations. Everything points to a large increase in the volume of pictures produced, but as to the quality standard no one can now even guess.

"The foreign market will absorb a large part of the stuff on our shelves, which will enable the picture men to realize on the profit that has been tied up in the while the war lasted.

"Altogether I look upon the situation, both from the producing and distributing standpoint, as most favorable.

"The war has taught us many lessons and has given us many new ideas, and I believe we can expect to find these, to a very large extent, replace the hackneyed, threadbare themes that have been worked into motion pictures in various disguises for many years past."

War Pictures in Strong Demand?

E. Ratisborne, Delegate of the Cinematographic Division of French Army Says General Public Wants War Films

"WAS it in the trade papers? Was it in the elevators of film buildings or in the office of the film executives that I heard that now the war is over, reports from all over the country were coming in to the effect that: "The public did not want to see any more war pictures.' 'The public wanted to forget all about the war.' 'The public was walking out on war pictures.' 'The public wanted a rest from the war,' etc., etc.," said F. Ratisborne, delegate of the Cinematographic Division of the French Army.

"As an ally, I have naturally taken a great interest in the war activities of this country as well as in its leaders. I am familiar with the achievements of President Wilson, Secretaries Baker, Daniels, Lansing, Messrs. Schwab, Hoover, Garfield., etc., etc., and I must confess that what I have seen and read has inspired me with great admiration for the men who, in such a short space of time, have been able to create the most formidable war organization in the world.

"Now, hearing so much lately in film centers about the 'public being tired of war pictures,' the 'public this and the public that,' I said to myself: 'This public they speak so much about must be quite an important personage and I had better look him up.'

"Well, I set out to look up 'Public' and ask him what he thought of war pictures. I stopped my friends, I stopped my friends' friends, I went to the Strand, the Rialto, the Rivoli, the Palace theatre, always on the look out for this 'Public' who does not want to see war pictures any more.

"I am really getting desperate for so far I have not caught even a passing glimpse of this individual, who, according to report, is getting tired of seeing the glorification of America and her Allies—tired of being reminded of the sacrifice of life in the cause of liberty and democracy—tired of watching on the screen the immortal deeds of American youths—in short, the man who does not wish to see re-enacted for the benefit of future generations, the events which, through the boundless greed of ambition of one man, have plunged the world into the most fearful war ever experienced in history.

"Well, I must say that my mind is relieved at the thought that I have not been able to meet this personification of selfishness and avarice," Mr. Ratisborne continued.

"In the name of all that is clean, healthy and inspiring, don't be deceived by those who take upon themselves to speak for the public and who fail to see that they must separate from their private interests the great public service that the moving picture better than the printed press can render to civilization.

"Let us thank God that we have the moral courage to look war pictures in the face."

Pettijohn May Open Offices in Los Angeles

It is said to be very probable that the new Affiliated Exhibitors' Mutual will maintain offices in Los Angeles presided over by Charles C. Pettijohn. No definite statement was issued by Mr. Pettijohn during his two days' stay in Los Angeles, but indicated plans point to this conclusion.

Mr. Pettijohn went to the coast apparently to confer with William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, whose producing companies are making the Billie Rhodes and Henry B. Walthall subjects, as well as with officers of the Bessie Barriscale Features, Inc.; the Haworth Film Corporation, making the Hayakawa subjects, and Jesse D. Hampton, producer of photoplays starring William Desmond. Mr. Pettijohn returned to the East by way of San Francisco.

Europe, in fact of the entire world, and with the President of the United States now in the position of the chief exponent of a world's democracy, it seemed to him that the proper conduct of the foreign business, so as to develop its revenue consistent with the foreign population, and therefore consistent with the possibilities, should receive the closest consideration.

In conclusion he said that he would not come to any definite decision until he had enjoyed a real vacation, the first in many years.

Plain Common Sense Wins Out in Long Run

space is pursued religiously for the Garden, and as a consequence the house receives a great deal of publicity. The advertising is used one day and the publicity the next, so that there is rarely an issue of the local newspapers without the Garden being represented somewhere in its columns. Perhaps that local reporter, who gets good pay for writing the house organ, may be unconsciously influenced to help out in the matter of watching to see that the editors do not slight the Garden on stories.

And, to me, the most unusual part of Mr. Beatty's success in turning this theatre into a money-maker after it had averaged a loss of $10,000 a year is that there is just as much personal attention given today to every department of the house as was given the day it first opened as one of the units in the W. S. Butterfield Circuit.

Producers Speak Up on Quinn Letter

December 9, 1918.

To the Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dear Sir:

Permit me to extend an invitation to Mr. J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, and any exhibitor, singly, or any committee of exhibitors, to present any fact or argument to me personally which may bear upon the bettering of production methods and results.

Ever since the first Paramount organization the companies now merged in Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have used unremitting diligence in testing the box-office value of their pictures. Within the past year we have gone one step further and carried on an organized work of reaching the exhibitor personally in an effort to find out from him what would better our pictures in detail.

This work, under my personal supervision, is in the hands of Mr. George N. Shorey, who did similar work very successfully for MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Your readers know his picture judgment through reviews by him in the NEWS. For eight years Mr. Shorey has been actively an exhibitor.

We purposely placed this work in the hands of a man whose personal sympathy is entirely with the exhibitor. He sees things as the exhibitor sees them. He is as frank with us as he expects his brother exhibitors to be with him. He asks his brother exhibitors how they really feel about our productions, and then he asks them to tell him how they would improve them. His favorite request to exhibitors is that they give him, so far as they can, "exhibitor experience plus audience viewpoint."

Making pictures is not an exact science. It is not always possible to transfer story thought to the screen with all the values of the original. Many individuals have to do with the making or marring of the intangible "idea." But by the law of averages the success of a production, financially, depends on facts which can be applied to production more generally than they have been in the past. We have employed Mr. Shorey to supplement our knowledge of these facts or principles from the limitless fund of experience known only to the exhibitor.

The only doubt we have ever had upon the wisdom of consulting the exhibitor at every point is the often asserted "prejudice"—which exhibitors themselves have asserted dims the power of vision of the exhibitor.

We now know from the startling unanimity of reply of exhibitors in all sections of the country upon certain points that the intelligent exhibitor of today—the successful exhibitor, be he in larger or smaller city—is not to be feared as an individual who would advise against his own best interests. We want more facts and suggestions from exhibitors. We can use them ALL.

Cordially yours,
JESSE L. LASKY.

¶ The Last Anonymous Letter That MOTION PICTURE NEWS Will Print.

[The producer who wrote this letter got cold feet at the last moment and phoned, "I'd rather you wouldn't use my name with that letter." And having published an anonymous letter signed "Exhibitor" last week we thought it fair to run this one, even if the signature is only "Producer." With it we serve notice that we will print no more anonymous communications.]

Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dear Sir:

I have been watching with interest the manner in which the showmen, big and little, who have gotten into the discussion provoked by the Quinn letter have been camouflaging their lack of showmanship by joining in a free-for-all attack upon the producer.

With just one exception—and I shall name him presently—your correspondents place the onus of the difficulties under which the industry is now laboring upon the manufacturers. The latter are charged with being guilty of the most heinous waste and extravagance. They are charged with being the poorest specimen of the genus business man that this world has ever known, and all agree that if these producers could be done away with forthwith the millennium will have dawned and that henceforth the path of the exhibitors would be indeed strewn with roses.

But DOES the exhibitor pay for the manufacturers' mistakes? As a man whose film experience goes back to 1905, I emphatically say NO!

Here is an angle of the argument that does not seem to have occurred to the average exhibitor. The cost of a feature does NOT enter into the determination of the final selling price. Sales executives who have handled both expensive and inexpensive productions will readily agree with me on this.

Who does not recall tremendously expensive features which, nevertheless, sold at junk film rentals? And who does not know of comparatively inexpensive features which nevertheless commanded top-notch rentals?

Except in the case of the unusual and out-of-the-ordinary production, there isn't a picture on the market that will AVERAGE—get that word firmly fixed in your mind—more than $10 per booking. At that I am two dollars and a half too high, according to the almost tearful assurance given me by the sales manager of a certain other big film organization.

Ten dollars per booking—and in order to obtain this average we've got to consider the price paid by the big first-run exhibitor. And, everything considered, even his rental price is nothing startling! Think of the thousands of bookings UNDER ten dollars—and then show me wherein the producer is guilty of profiteering or how he can be said to be making the exhibitor pay for the waste and extravagance which undoubtedly does exist in the producing end of the business.

Yes, somebody DOES pay for this waste, but it isn't the exhibitor. Make no mistake about that. It's the stockholder in the film company guilty of this waste, who, as the "mellerdrama" has it, pays and pays and pays!

Let us leave this phase of the argument for a moment and take up Mr. Quinn's contention that there is a scarcity of good pictures on the market. I wonder how many pictures Mr. Quinn views in the course of a day, because his statement is manifestly absurd.

Good pictures aplenty are regularly produced. What IS lacking is good advertising and, let me add, SHOWMANSHIP. I have repeatedly seen exhibitors book meritorious productions which they obtained at exceedingly moderate rentals and, despite the fact that these films lacked world-famous stars, proceeded to break all box-office records. The secret lay in the fact that they ADVERTISED AS GOOD SHOWMEN SHOULD.

My knowledge of the exhibitor has taught me this. He—and now I refer to the average exhibitor—totally lacks initiative. Instead of using his brains, he is inclined to rely entirely for business on the popularity of the star featured in the production, or else on its title. He bases his opinion upon the result, even though proper exploitation would have made the picture a clean-up.

Mr. Quinn mentions "HEARTS OF THE WORLD" as an example of the kind of pictures for which the public hungers. This exhibitor, however, does not seem to realize that but for the marvelous advertising and publicity campaign which preceded the release of this feature—a campaign which had its inception months before Griffith shot a single foot of film—"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" might have faded from view unknown and unsung. Pictures galore, possessing the same heart interest and presenting the same powerful appeal to the emotions, have passed by like ships in the night because they were not properly exploited.

Reverting back to the question of whether the exhibitor pays for the producer's extravagance, here is a fact I want to bring to the attention of the Quinns of the business:

Touring With Goldfish and Rothapfel

The joint trip of Samuel Goldfish and S. L. Rothapfel, news of which was carried exclusively in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, is well under way, and the producer and showman have been receiving the welcome hand at all their stops.

Through a special arrangement, the NEWS is able to carry the complete report of their trip thus far, which includes Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis.

All aboard:

THE joint cross-continent tour of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of New York's Rivoli and Rialto theatres, has become a triumphal procession, reports to Goldwyn's home office indicate. Everywhere they are being greeted by enthusiastic gatherings of exhibitors, newspaper critics and business men.

The trip got a whirlwind start at Cleveland, where more than 250 persons attended a luncheon at the Hotel Winton. Guests of honor were Mr. Goldfish, Mr. Rothapfel and Will Rogers, star of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who recently made his motion picture début under Goldwyn auspices in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," and who happened to be in Cleveland with the "Follies." Also present was Ann Pennington, bright particular feminine feature of the Ziegfeld show.

The luncheon was under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, of which H. H. Lustig is president. Messrs. Goldfish, Rothapfel and Rogers and Miss Pennington were filmed for The Plain-Dealer news weekly after Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel had spoken on the subject of producer-exhibitor co-operation. H. C. Horater, the Toledo exhibitor, made a speech, and Will Rogers also talked, and got a lot of laughs. Mr. Lustig was toastmaster. H. A. Bandy, Goldwyn's Cleveland manager, and Joseph Grossman, first-run exhibitor, were called on.

As a surprise for the luncheon guests, The Cleveland News published and circulated at the luncheon a two-page newspaper called "The Goldfish Globe." It contained a half-page group cartoon of the celebrities present and several columns of humorous "news" matter.

It was an unmistakable "Goldwyn week" in Cleveland when the visitors from the East arrived. Mabel Normand, in "A Perfect 36," was playing first-run to big business at Joseph Grossman's Standard theatre. Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," with Will Rogers, was playing its important second-run at the Knickerbocker theatre, and there were also playing Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth" at the Cedar theatre; Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel" at the Crown; Mae Marsh in "Money Mad" at the Homestead. In Cleveland there are 151 theatres, and Goldwyn pictures are served to 76 of this number regularly under contract.

The next stop was at Chicago, where Mr. Goldfish met 100 exhibitors of Chicago and the surrounding territory. There was a luncheon at the Hotel Blackstone at which speeches were made. Aaron J. Jones, president of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer Company, and Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Bros., were among those present, as was I. Van Ronkel, Chicago manager for Goldwyn.

The next day there was another banquet at the Wisconsin Hotel in Milwaukee, and two days later still another at the Radisson Hotel in Minneapolis. In the latter city arrangements were in the hands of Ruben & Finklestein, Goldwyn first-run exhibitors, and John W. Hicks, Jr., branch manager there. At the conclusion of festivities Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel left for the long jump to Seattle.

The Cleveland Report

CLEVELAND, December 4: If coming events cast their shadows before, and it is said that they do, then the occurrences in Cleveland during the past twelve hours are going to have a revotutionary effect upon the motion picture business.

There was a preponderance of movie magnates in the city last Wednesday when Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York; Will Rogers, a Goldwyn star, playing at the Opera House this week with the "Ziegfeld Follies" and Anne Pennington, also a footlight and screen satellite, all foregathered together at a luncheon given at the Winton Hotel under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland.

"This is not the first time that a producer, a distributor and an actor have appeared together publicly," were Mr. Goldfish's introductory remarks after being called upon by Henry H. Lustig, president of the Exhibitors' League, for a speech. "The only remarkable part about the circumstance is that three members of the three different branches of the industry are meeting together in harmony."

These few words immediately broke the ice, and informality held sway from that time on. Mr. Goldfish then went on to say:

"I am glad to see so many exhibitors gathered together for some purpose other than to cut the price of a picture. (Laughter.) In fact, I confess that I expected to see a large representation of exhibitors during my brief stay in Cleveland, but I did not think that my coming was of sufficient importance to stop the cars running in my honor." (This has reference to the street car strike that was called last Monday.)

"I am glad to see that the exhibitors of Cleveland are so well organized as to have such a representation as is present today. Organization is the corner-stone of any growing industry. The industry must be so organized as to make for a better understanding between the exhibitor and the producer. The producer is not so in need of organization as is the exhibitor, because it is the exhibitor who is the mainstay of the industry. If the exhibitor refuses to run a producer's pictures, the producer has no other market for his product. He must listen to the demand of the exhibitor for that reason. But, in making his demands, the exhibitor must offer sufficient inducement to the producer for him to produce pictures. If the exhibitor refuses to pay enough so as to assure the producer a legitimate profit, what incentive has he to go on making pictures?

"Organization is what is needed, but constructive organization. The exhibitors should not get together to fight the producer—that is a tearing down process. The kind of organization that is needed is one of harmony between the branches of the industry; one that works together; one that builds up a permanent structure because each is working for the good of every branch, not for the supremacy of one branch.

"The producer is just as anxious to co-operate with the exhibitor as the exhibitor is to co-operate with the producer. It's a fifty-fifty proposition, because unless you exhibitors succeed and continue to show pictures on your screen we cannot make pictures."

"Never has the producer been more in need of co-operation with the various branches of the industry than he is today," continued Mr. Goldfish in a more serious strain. "There isn't a producer in the country that has paid a cent in dividends in the past two years. You exhibitors probably did not know that, but it is a fact. We are facing a crisis—a serious crisis, and we must have your support to pull through it successfully. If you exhibitors get together and decide that you won't pay over, say, $25 or $50 for a picture, what will be the result? We will make $25 and 5 pictures for you; but you don't want to do that, because that would not be a constructive policy. It would not make for progress. No industry stands still. It either progresses or retrogresses. We want the motion picture business to go forward, and in order to do that we must stand together; we must have constructive co-operation."

In conclusion, Mr. Goldfish admitted that his corporation was not perfect—that there were flaws and errors and mistakes, but he asked the exhibitors not to expect the impossible; that is, not to expect any producing company to make fifty-two per cent pictures every year. He also requested that if any exhibitor, at any time, has any complaint to make against the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, or against any one representing the Goldwyn Pic-

Industry Looms Big at Atlantic City

Convention Lauds Pictures for Their Help in War—Irwin, Flinn, Smith and Elliott Committee Representing Films—Resolutions Adopted

THE results ascertained in the accomplishments of the motion picture industry as an arm of the Government in the time of war and as an art requiring freedom from all restrictions in times of peace, were summed up in a resolution submitted and adopted in Atlantic City at the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress under the auspices of the United States Chamber of Commerce. In the four days of the convention in which more than 5,500 of the leading business men of the United States participated, and in which 232 different industries were represented, the motion picture industry was classified by this as related group No. 37.

The committee representing the industry was composed of Walter W. Irwin, Chairman, General Manager of the Vitagraph Company of America; John C. Flinn, Secretary, Director of Publicity and Advertising Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William C. Smith, Speaker, General Manager Nicholas Power Machine Company, and Fred H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The resolutions as drawn were submitted and accepted by the major group No. 10 in session at the Hotel Chalmont on Thursday night. The resolutions follow:

Irwin Hits Competition

On Thursday, December 5, Walter W. Irwin, as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Representative of the Industry to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress of the United States Chamber of Commerce, introduced to the Convention resolutions vigorously protesting against United States Government competition, through the Committee on Public Information, with the Motion Picture Industry, urging the Government to cease such competition and likewise urging the abolition of the entire censorship system now in existence in the United States.

The substance of these resolutions was considered at a meeting of a Committee of the Motion Picture Industry representatives, at the Hotel Traymore in Atlantic City, on Wednesday evening, December 4. Those present were Walter W. Irwin, chairman; John C. Flinn, secretary: William C. Smith, speaker, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. After a discussion of the substance of the resolutions, Mr. Irwin drafted the resolutions and presented them to the Convention on Thursday morning.

The presentation of these resolutions to the greatest assemblage of business men that the country has ever seen brings to the direct attention of the leaders of national industry two of the most vital problems confronting the Motion Picture Industry.

Helped in the Loan

The clear-cut ringing terms of the resolutions need no enlargement. From the recital of the industry's share in constructive war work of every sort, to the thoroughly just and sharply drawn demands of the resolutions for the full recognition of the industry's rights, the resolutions are of such force and clarity that the most far-reaching results may be expected from their introduction to the Industrial Congress assembled in Atlantic City.

Resolutions respectfully submitted for adoption to the War Emergency and Reconstruction Congress, at Atlantic City, New Jersey, December 5, 1918, by the Motion Picture Industry, Related Group Number 37, Walter W. Irwin, chairman; John C. Flinn, secretary; William C. Smith, speaker.

WHEREAS, The Motion Picture Industry along with other industries of the country mobilized itself upon our entrance into the war, for the purpose of rendering the greatest cooperation with, and service to the National Government; and

WHEREAS, The substantial result now accomplished has been acknowledged by public statements and in writing by the President of the United States, and by various of the cabinet officers and heads of departments and bureaus, and other semi-official and coordinated agencies; and

WHEREAS, Such work undertaken and accomplished consisted substantially of the following:

1. Treasury Department.

First Liberty Loan; Distribution without charge to, and exhibition in 13,000 motion picture theatres of 30,000 colored slides and of 8,000 copies of a 70-foot motion picture of President Wilson, carrying a patriotic appeal.

Second Liberty Loan: Distribution without charge in all motion picture theatres of 70,000 colored slides and of 500 copies of five specially-prepared subjects, each 500 feet in length, in which leading stars of the industry appeared in dramatic episodes. These were produced by the industry and contributed to the Government.

Third Liberty Loan: Distributed without charge to all motion picture theatres, 17,000 copies of a short motion picture of Secretary McAdoo delivering an appeal, specially prepared by him for the purpose. Distributed without charge 17,200 sets of posters (five to a set). These were posted in the lobbies or on the exteriors of all motion picture theatres throughout the United States.

Raised Big Sum

Fourth Liberty Loan: At the express request of the National Liberty Loan Committee of the twelve Federal Reserve Districts, the Motion Picture Industry produced at its own expense, amounting approximately to $250,000, 38 dramatic subjects, each with a leading actor or actress, conveying a dramatic scene in support of the Loan. Of these 38 subjects the Treasury Department, at its own expense, caused 4,000 copies to be printed. All the national distributing companies, without charge, voted their entire organizations to the distribution of these motion pictures by a method which assured the exhibition of each print each day of the drive. Between twelve and thirteen million people per day viewed these pictures. Throughout the drives of the Liberty Loans, theatre managers and owners placed their auditoriums at the disposal of the Liberty Loan workers and speakers.

2. Food Administration.

Distributed to all motion picture theatres, without charge, several thousand copies of short motion pictures and many thousands of slides, conveying to the public the necessity for the conservation of food.

3. Department of Agriculture.

Extensive distribution of slides and film trailers. This work is still in progress.

4. Fuel Administration.

Extensive distribution of slides and film trailers. New work of this character recently undertaken nationally.

5. War and Navy Departments.

Wide distribution of specially prepared pictures, slides and posters pertaining to recruiting and physical and moral welfare.

6. Four-Minute Organization.

Fifteen thousand men and women daily used the motion picture theatres for various national purposes.

7. Red Cross.

In the first drive 200 copies of a motion picture entitled "The Spirit of the Red Cross" were distributed throughout the country without charge by distributors.

In the second drive, a similar distribution occurred of 400 prints of one subject and of 1,000 prints of a second subject.

8. The same cooperation occurred with the Departments of the Interior and of Labor, the Aircraft Production Board, the Commerce Economy Board, the Committee on Training Camp Activities, and other departments and bureaus.

9. The picture in motion was shown to our boys in the trenches and in cantonments, on the transports and in the hospitals. In the latter case a projection machine was wheeled into the ward and the picture projected upon the ceiling in order that the boys lying on their backs could gain both relief and recreation; and tures Corporation, that such complaint should be filed with him, and he would see that full justice would always be accorded. "The home office of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is on the level with the exhibitor. Write the association if you feel you are not getting just treatment."

"The ace exhibitor," is the way Mr. Rothapfel was introduced to the exhibitors who attended the famous movie luncheon. "An ace," said Mr. Lustig in his introduction, "is an aviator of the first class. Mr. Rothapfel has attained the highest place among exhibitors, and the same title should be bestowed upon him."

Whereupon Mr. Rothapfel took the floor, and after a few shots at Mr. Goldfish, because he had just signed a contract for the Tom Moore pictures, and the transcontinental tour of this enterprising couple has only commenced, he started right in to roast the exhibitors. Not any particular exhibitor, but all exhibitors.

"The trouble with you fellows is," Rothapfel said, "that you are in a rut. For that matter, so are producers in a rut. The exchanges are in a rut. The whole industry is in a rut. But there's a remedy. And that is, you have got to get away rfom the way you are now doing.

You've got to get away from the fact that you are putting on a show, and simply collecting the money at the door. You've got to make your theatre an institution. And until you do that, you are not a success. Your house must be so much of an institution that you can figure on so-and-so much average profit every day in the week, not only on those days when you are running the big stars. In order to be a success, you have got to do a thing differently. It isn't the star, it isn't all the picture. It isn't the first-run release. So many exhibitors are afraid of second runs. Why, second runs are just as good as first runs, So Long as You Present Them Differently than they were presented the first time. I know what I'm talking about. I've tried out my theory, and it's proved successful.

"I have often been asked the secret of my success. Shall I tell you what it is? Success is psychology applied to business. Success is nothing other than common sense used in connection with your business. The psychology applied to business is simply doing the right thing at the right time, and doing the right thing at the right time spells success.

"There's a big fallacy in the way the average exhibitor attacks his work. He starts out with the premise that he must give the public what it wants. That's all wrong. You don't know what the public wants. The public doesn't know what it wants. But you, as an exhibitor, must create a taste, and then supply it. The only way you can succeed in doing this is to do something differently than it has ever been done before.

"Another thing that is necessary to success is constant application to your business. Pay attention to your business, and to your business alone. Let the other fellow alone with his business.

"In our own theatres, the first thing we do, when we put on a show, is to create an atmposphere. Don't rely on a producer to supply you with atmosphere. He can't give you the kind of atmosphere you want and give the fellows all over the country the atmosphere they want, all with the same picture. You must put on a show the way you think it's best. And above all things, you must put it on differently.

"We run a lot of Goldwyn pictures at our theatres. They are not always good. Neither is the Goldwyn organization always right, but it is always sincere, and so should have the support of all sincere members of the industry."

By the time Mr. Rothapfel had finished it was getting late and Will Rogers had a matinee on, but he stopped long enough to give the guests about half an hour of his matchless humor. He started out by saying that when he was inveigled into the movies, he understood it was the fourth largest industry in the country. "First is the Ford," he said. "Second is Uneeda Biscuits. Third is the Gillette Razor, and the movies come fourth." Then he went on to say how he entered the movies. Surely nobody ever traveled such an entertaining road to a happy conclusion as Rogers did, getting his face "on the muslin," as he expressed it. He had to rush away in a hurry, as did dainty little Anne Pennington, who didn't even get an opportunity to tell how it feels to be a movie star.

After the departure of the actor folks, the remaining exhibitors expressed their views openly. H. C. Horater, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Detroit, and an ardent supporter of Goldwyn Pictures, said he was an ardent admirer and faithful disciple of Mr. Rothapfel. He said that he had employed Mr. Rothapfel's methods, on a greatly reduced scale, of course, and that he had found them successful. Mr. Horater was lavish in his praise of the Tom Moore pictures. He says that there are great possibilities with the star, especially if you "do it differently." Mr. Horater is a big newspaper advertiser. He spends a lot of money in advertising. He also spends a lot of money in stage settings and lobby decorations, but it more than pays.

Several local exhibitors were then called upon for a few words, among them being Emory Downs, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre, Cleveland; D. L. Schumann, manager of the Dennison Square theatre, and Fred Desberg, who has large holdings in the Mall and Alhambra theatres.

It was about 3:30 when the luncheon party broke up. Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel returned to the Goldwyn exchange and the exhibitors dispersed. The party of film men arrived in Cleveland early this morning from New York. They left again at midnight for Chicago, which will be their only stop until they reach the coast.

The success of the Goldwyn luncheon was an unprecedented affair in the history of motion picture circles of Cleveland. Undoubtedly, much of the success of the affair must be accredited to H. A. Bandy, local exchange manager. Aside from being a most cordial host to the visitors, the members of the press and the league members, he is the epitome of what the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation stands for—co-operation. The large gathering, composed both of exchange men and exhibitors, was evidence of the feeling of co-operation which exists between the Goldwyn organization and its competitor producing organizations, and between the Goldwyn organization and the exhibitors of Cleveland.

Honors Were Fifty-Fifty

The luncheon given at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, Thursday, Dec. 5th, for an army of Chicago and adjacent city exhibitors to meet and hear two of the best known men in the film game—Sam Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Company, and Samuel Rothapfel, director of the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres, New York—gave the gathering of showmen the time of their lives, and plenty of food for reflection aside from the viands consumed. The verbal food was well seasoned with wit and truth.

Mr. Rothapfel decried his difficulty in securing pictures suited for his pair of "Rs"—the Rialto and Rivoli. He wants the producers to break away from all conventional explanatory material used at the beginning of the picture introducing the company, director and photographer, and so on.

One cannot help but think that Mr. Goldfish's constant association with Mr. Rothapfel on their California trip is apt to be productive of a reform along these lines as far as the Goldwyn Productions are concerned.

Mr. Goldfish's contention was that the producers had done more to educate the exhibitors than the exhibitors had done to educate producers—that the exhibitors were in a rut and making little attempt to extricate themselves. Mr. Goldfish declared that the trouble with the business at this time was that the theatres are pursuing the same policy of the daily change that they were doing six years ago, and which now, in this day of productions, is a physical impossibility. No producer, he affirmed, can make equally meritorious pictures every time, and none can keep up the pressure of production insisted upon by the daily change.

Mr. Goldfish begged the exhibitors to help the producer, who had a chain around his neck, by not insisting upon special stars in every picture, but by supporting good pictures that had no stars. The gentleman dwelt on the fact with a great deal of feeling that the producers' returns were largely "negative," of infinitesimal value, as said negatives were supposed to be mainly using up shelf space.

Mr. Goldfish avers that he has not made any money in two years, but hopes to take some out this next year. He calls at-

Hammons Returns from Trip to Coast

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, returned December 9 from his Los Angeles trip and will announce directly after the holidays the release plans of "The Key to Power." Miss Caroline Gentry, co-author of the feature with E. Lloyd Sheldon, took the picture to Washington December 11 and showed it to the members of the Fuel Administration. Officials of the National Coal Association are also to have a private view of it, both the fuel officials and the coal operators having afforded the company every facility while the scenes were being photographed in Washington, D. C., West Virginia and Greater New York. Arrangements are now being made for a Broadway pre-release.

Mr. Hammons said of his California trip: "The short reel releases of the Educational will be materially increased and strengthened as the result of my visit. I found Los Angeles studio conditions excellent. Most of the local picture theatres were reopening or making ready to reopen in consequence of the dwindling of the epidemic. Among the high points of the trip were visits to the Chaplins and to Grauman's million-dollar theatre. Through study of the conditions in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, I am firmly convinced that the film industry is entering upon a new era of unprecedented prosperity. In that new era Educationals will play an ever more prominent role, not only as worth-while entertainment in picture houses, but also as a means of popular instruction."

A. M. P. Advertisers Issue Film Year Book

At the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's, copies of the Association's twenty-four page year book, long delayed, according to Chairman Paul Gulick of the Committee on Publication, on account of the scarcity of Copenhagen blue in the color market, were distributed to the members.

The book, besides being an attractive example of the printer's art, is said to contain an abundance of interesting information regarding the Association, including a brief history of the organization since its inception in August, 1916; a chronology of the year's activities, the constitution and by-laws, a tribute to the members in the military and naval service, a list of officers and standing committees, individual portraits of all the members, etc.

The cover, designed by Burton Rice, presents a background of newspaper headings. On the front cover is the monogram of the Association and on the back is the service flag and the names of the members whom the stars represent. Chinese vermilion and Copenhagen blue are the colors used, it is stated on Mr. Gulick's authority.

Harry Reichenbach, who has just returned from Europe, where for the past three months he has been engaged in propaganda work for the Committee on Public Information, gave an interesting sketch of the labors of himself and associates.

cial competition with the Motion Picture Industry, by renting to motion picture theatres, at high prices, a news reel, containing pictures of war scenes on the various battle fronts, and designated as "Official Government Pictures," as well as long films known as feature pictures, thus depriving the news reels and the feature pictures of the industry of revenue, to the extent of the revenue diverted to the Committee on Public Information, which revenue to such Committee was and is promoted by advertisements in the various trade papers, advising the exhibitors, in effect, that it was their duty as patriotic citizens to exhibit these "Official Films," and likewise advising the exhibitors that those who did so, would receive a certificate signed by the Chairman of the Committee on Public Information, acknowledging the exhibitor's patriotism and aid to the Government, and that such certificate was appropriate for framing and displaying in the lobby of his theatre to his neighbors and patrons; and

WHEREAS, The motion picture is now recognized not only by all civilized people, but by their respective governments as well, as one of the most potent means of education and enlightenment, and, in fact, during the war constituted one of the chief schools of patriotism of the American people, and of the war education of the public so necessary; and

Screen Strong Medium

WHEREAS, The picture in motion, speaking as it does a universal language, and going as it does into all countries, is destined to teach the peoples of the world of each other, and thus to bring out a realization that fundamentally, there is but slight, if any, difference in the ambitions, desires and hopes of the human heart, wherever it be, with the exception of the Hun, and that even with him, it is to become a strong medium through which his character and disposition shall be brought in accord with the rest of humanity and

WHEREAS, Such a universal understanding will largely be the means of enabling a League of Nations, if it be formed, to continue to exist, and to be the means of avoiding future wars; and

WHEREAS, The Motion Picture Industry is fully cognizant and has proven itself to be so, of its responsibility to the public at large; and

WHEREAS, It is constantly attacked in various state legislatures, and at times in the National Congress by the introduction of censorship bills, promoted by small but well organized groups, actuated by prejudice, malice, narrow mindedness, or jealousy, whereby the motion picture is to be submitted to a small committee with arbitrary powers, who shall say what the citizens of this country shall see; and

WHEREAS, The censorship of the motion picture cannot equitably and properly be differentiated from the censorship of the press, particularly, as the motion picture is now furnishing a news service to the public in many instances within 24 hours after its publication in a newspaper; and

WHEREAS, One of the fundamental principles upon which our country was founded, and for which the Revolutionary Fathers fought, was the freedom of the press, so essential to the maintenance of our political institutions; and

WHEREAS, the censorship of the motion picture must inevitably lead to its restriction by political powers, just as would the censorship of the press, and would likewise curtail its development for the great international work above described, as well as take from the people their cherished right to free expression of thought and deprive the entire world of a full means of education; and

WHEREAS, The producers of motion pictures are fully responsible for their acts just as are the newspapers under the police powers of the state, and under various national statutes; therefore

BE IT RESOLVED AS FOLLOWS:

First: That it is the sense of this body that the National Government should forthwith discontinue its commercial competition with the Motion Picture Industry, by the rental of films for profit, particularly as the industry has fully demonstrated its readiness, willingness and eagerness, without compensation, to distribute for the Government, much more effectively than the Government can do, any information which the Government deems advisable to disseminate and likewise for the reason that the distribution of such material by the Government can only be for the purpose of getting the largest number of people to think upon the same subject at the same time, and the distribution of such information on a rental basis greatly restricts the extent to which such propaganda is conveyed.

Second: That the doctrine of censorship is un-American, and is contrary and dangerous to the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded, and to the conduct of our political institutions for the benefit of the people, and therefore should be stamped out wherever it makes its appearance; the motion picture being left to a full and complete responsibility for its acts under the police powers of each community.

The average exhibitor will pay a certain set price for his features, nor will he ever deviate from this price—unless it be to pay LESS—save when a subject as timely as "THE KAISER," or possessing the popularity of a "TARZAN," comes along. Then, and I have personally known him to do so, he will willingly pay from five to ten times as much for such a picture as he pays for the ordinary feature.

Don't those men who have replied to Mr. Quinn realize that the public doesn't go to see a picture merely because it happens to have cost a lot to produce? And don't they know that it is not upon the basis of production cost, but upon the POTENTIAL BOX OFFICE VALUE that the producers base the rentals of those features which the exhibitor feels WILL clean up for him?

Right here, I want to say that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is profitable for the exhibitor to run a production which costs him so much, because he then backs it up with a display of showmanship which, as I have already stated, is mainly conspicuous by its absence at other times. In this connection I have before me, records of prices paid by exhibitors in towns of two hundred population to one thousand population for a certain feature. Prices of $50 per day are common while there are any number of bookings at prices of $100 per day. An inquiry instituted by the company which produced the film in question revealed the fact that every one of these small-town showmen made a profit which ran from fifty to two hundred per cent!

There is one thing which I frankly and freely confess is beyond my comprehension. It's this: Why is it that exhibitors who know the business from every angle; who themselves have wept long and loudly—using up a considerable amount of trade paper space in the operation—will show just how sincere their protestations are, by going the producers one better in bidding for the services of stars?

When all is said and done, the solution to the whole problem lies right in the exhibitor's hands. Does he protest against the enormous cost of features containing stars who are paid fabulous prices? Let him show the hundreds of other really good pictures with which the market is flooded, and which he can get at more reasonable prices. Does he energetically kick against the price of the unusual production which, lacking a star, has nevertheless set the public aquiver in its eagerness to see it? There still remain the pictures just mentioned. Most important of all, however, is the fact that better advertising and better showmanship is the one sure specific for all those evils against which he now inveighs.

In conclusion, I want to congratulate most heartily C. J. Appel, manager of the New Empire theatre, Timmons, Ont., and the exception mentioned previously, whose letter appeared in the December 14 issue of your publication. Appel comes nearer being the perfect showman than any of the exhibitors who have taken part in the Quinn controversy. He has solved his problem for himself. He has recognized exhibiting as the science it really is. He has catalogued the photoplay patrons in his community so that he knows their likes and dislikes and can therefore supply them with the kind of entertainment which makes his venture a PROFITABLE one.

The day that Appel's methods are adopted by exhibitors this country over, will see the dawn of a new and more prosperous era for this industry.

Denver Couldn't Do Less

Leading Theatres Are Liberal Advertisers, But They Get No Cooperation from Newspapers

DENVER is badly in need of photoplay news. It is one of the livest cities in the whole country, with a number of splendid theatres and a motion picture going public that ranks with the highest class in the country. Yet the newspapers fail almost completely to show that they are interested in giving the photoplay fan any attention.

Denver has a census population of 245,523, but it is considerably larger than that now. There are only four newspapers, two of them, the Post and the Times, being under the same ownership. Certainly a combination of those two papers, one morning and the other afternoon, ought to be in a position to employ a real advertising and editorial expert on motion picture matters and to give the theatres the attention they deserve.

The leading theatres show an inclination to do mighty good advertising, but they do not get a great deal in return. A survey of the newspapers seems to show that nothing has been done to develop the advertising of the smaller houses. Another disappointing thing about the situation is the evident inclination on the part of the papers to rank the legitimate as the main thing and let the photoplay take its chances, although the picture houses contribute the great majority of the advertising.

Here are the Denver newspapers, with the circulation as given by the Lord and Thomas directory:

Express, Afternoon (18,592).
Post, Morning (95,798) and Sunday (122,679).
Rocky Mountain News, Morning (30,438) and Sunday (52,937).
Times, Afternoon (36,828).

Six motion picture houses do the bulk of the business of Denver. They are the America, Rialto, Rivoli, Strand, Isis and Princess. They are practically the only advertisers.

Now a city like this presents something of a problem to a newspaper. Here is a case where nothing has apparently been done to get the advertising of the smaller houses. We can imagine the advertising manager of the newspapers saying:

"Here we have the big houses advertising regularly. We don't have to worry about preparing their copy and we don't have to worry about getting our money. To go out and get the business of the little fellows we would first have to put up a strong 'selling argument,' then we would have to show them how to advertise until they got in the habit and we would have to watch our collections carefully."

Then he probably might add: "And the big houses wouldn't like it if we put the smaller ones into keener competition with them."

So let us take this argument first. Development of the advertising of ALL the theatres in a city—provided the newspaper accords the proper sort of co-operation—has been proven time after time to help the others, the bigger houses, instead of hurting them. We had the same experience in a city somewhat larger than Denver where a plan was started to develop the neighborhood houses into advertisers. There was some complaint from the downtown houses, who feared that this would hurt their business. Not only was this not the case. To this advertising alone of the neighborhood houses was due the increase of business of the downtown houses to such an extent that within a year two handsome new theatres, larger than any of the older ones, were opened. And the neighborhood theatres profited from their advertising.

But the co-operation is essential. The papers that did this were printing real photoplay sections, giving the fans the sort of matter that they wanted to read and increasing the interest in photoplays generally so that ALL of the theatres profited from that matter.

In theory, at least, a newspaper strives to be a complete newspaper, to interest every subscriber. It is not necessary to repeat here the interest in the photoplay and the argument for printing other matter than the straight press notices from the theatres. But there is another angle, the advertising.

How much greater interest do you think there would be in a newspaper if it carried the advertising of every motion picture house in its territory. It would have the immediate support of every person who attended any of the theatres with any degree of regularity. It would be looked upon as a daily reference guide—it would be as indispensable as the telephone directory. The newspaper that would carry this complete advertising would be worth a great deal more to the general advertiser than the paper that is not thoroughly read by the thousands of photoplay fans.

There is another point that is too seldom taken into account by papers in cities like Denver. Especially the Sunday issues of these papers have considerable circulations outside the city of publication. It is bound to be the case that there is a share of the purely local news that is of no interest to the outside reader, and to offset this it used to be the habit of papers of this class to print on Sundays a large mass of the social correspondence in order to hold the interest of the outlying territory. It was then the theory that the more of that purely local matter that the paper could print, the greater circulation it would have in each community. That was a very good proposition, but the trouble with it was the mass of type setting and the bulk of white paper that was required to cover the field.

Since those days the newspapers have gone to the other practice—that of trying to print the most material that will interest the most readers.

Certainly there can be no argument about the interest in the motion picture. We are not afraid to make the statements that there are hundreds of readers of the Sunday issues of the Denver papers who seldom get the chance to go to a motion picture, because there is no theatre at hand, who would show the most eager interest in a photoplay section that really covers the field.

And equally sure is it that the increased advertising that they would get by developing the field to its fullest would certainly more than pay the Post and its afternoon sister for all the expense.

Issues of the papers that we have reproduced announced the re-opening of the theatres after the "flu" ban, and therefore the advertising is somewhat different from usual.

A glance at the amusement page of the Post shows that practically all of the page is devoted to the legitimate theatre. There is a column of "Close-up's," short items about motion picture people and productions, but it appears to be carelessly edited. One item has evidently been clipped from a New York paper and uses the word "here," meaning New York. Other items about scenario editors and the like seem of little interest to the average fan.

But the glaring thing that strikes us about this page is that the cuts are all pure advertising and are so marked.

Can you imagine a worse reflection on a newspaper of the standing of the Post not to have even a lay-out on the first-run attractions? It is a reflection on the intelligence of the community. The public has a right to have the news of the theatres and the motion picture houses, but it is very evident that the paper says to the theatre:

"You get nothing here unless you pay for it. We are not interested in what our readers want, but you are looking only for free stuff. If you want any picture matter printed you will have to pay for it."

And a newspaper that takes such an attitude is hopeless so far as really serving the interests and desires of the public.

Motion picture and theatre advertising is mixed together, along with sole general advertising and is placed on two different pages.

These Papers Get the Advertising But They Give Nothing Away

With the exception of the Strand the Denver theatres do not use name-plates in their advertising, but they use plenty of cuts of the stars, and the advertising is generally attractive.

For instance, the America uses seven inches across four columns for a combination bill including Chaplin and Alice Joyce. There is no unnecessary type matter used and the pictures of the two players are attractively displayed.

The Isis has a habit that also prevails in a few other cities, that of putting dashes between the letters: I—S—I—S. We have never yet been able to discover the reason for this unless there is some suspicion that the readers may not know how to spell the name. Certainly the practice results in a messy appearance of every advertisement in which it is used. That is one of the reasons who we do not care for five-inch, double-column display that it used.

On this same page are 1½-inch displays for the Weber, Thompson and Ogden, announcing the current attractions. The rest of the displays are from vaudeville and legitimate houses, though the Broadway is now playing motion pictures.

Rialto dominates the second advertising page with its two displays on "America's Answer." Rivoli uses seven inches double, Princess six and the Strand five, all double.

Three pages are likewise reproduced from the Sunday Rocky Mountain News. This paper gives the photoplay even less than the Post. There are only reading notices grouped under a single heading. There is a layout on legitimate and vaudeville attractions, but the photoplay is unrepresented. It carries practically the same advertising as the Post. In the issue from which we have taken the page it was merely announcing the reopening of the houses, and six of them are grouped in the same advertisement. There is no motion picture news matter.

The same is true of the Saturday edition of the Times. There is a layout on the legitimate and vaudeville, but the photoplay is ignored.

Now to show you that the Denver leading theatres do good and liberal advertising during the week, we are reproducing a page from the Wednesday News, just about the same advertising being used in the three leading papers. It will be noted that there is more than a half page of motion picture advertising here, yet the two-column layout appearing on this page is devoted entirely to vaudeville and legitimate, with a total advertising representation of 4½ inches.

In all of the papers at hand we find never less than two columns of display matter in any of them, but we find regularly an entire absence of anything that resembles motion picture news matter except a few Monday reviews.

In brief, there could not be less evidence of cooperation than there is in Denver.

About all that we can see in the situation there is—AN OPPORTUNITY.

President's Ship Does Share in Exploiting "Mickey"

When the liner "George Washington," carrying President Wilson, America's representative to the peace council, and a number of distinguished men, sailed from New York harbor it carried another portion of the widespread exploitation for "Mickey." The campaign carried out on shipboard was similar to that arranged for theatres that book the production.

Arrangements were made through Chief Radio Operator S. Rose and Kenneth MacLarney, who is in charge of entertainment on the liner to carry out the complete plan. Even 24-sheets on the picture were prominently displayed in various portions of the boat. Two thousand copies of the song were supplied so that every one on board would be familiar with the words.

Kaiser Hung in Effigy Gets Much Publicity in Washington

HANGING the Kaiser in effigy was a novel stunt used by the Leader theatre, of Washington, D. C., as part of a local advertising and publicity campaign that brought capacity business during its entire run on "The Kaiser's Finish," the special eight-part State rights production controlled by A. Warner.

The lobby of the Leader theatre was decorated with cut-out figures from the three-sheet posters, showing the ex-Kaiser and crown prince at the height of a quarrel, supplemented by one-sheets and two sizes of lobby display cards. Across the front of the lobby, and outside, were hung two six-sheets, flanked on either side by three-sheets.

From a beam placed outside and above the lobby the effigy of the former Hun ruler was hung by the neck. The figure attracted great crowds to the theatre, and proved such an object of interest that the Washington newspapers sent staff photographers to make "shots" of it. These were published during the week the picture was run, with the result that this free publicity, added to the regular advertising by the house, packed the theatre at every performance.

The production is playing to phenomenal business in every house in which it has been booked in the Washington territory, according to Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, which controls the rights for that district.

Regular Trenches Before Theatres for "Shoulder Arms"

Manager Herschel Stuart transformed the front of the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Texas, into a scene on the European battle front during the recent showing of the new Charlie Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms." Trenches were built of sand bags and the "dug outs," which were really the theatre doors, were labelled with the fanciful names that have been given by the soldiers to their homes along the battle line. Ushers were garbed in khaki for the occasion.

The Old Mill has been responsible for some striking lobby displays, but this is one of the very best that Mr. Stuart has put over.

Detroit Theatre Gives Patrons Chance to Be "Stars"

Something new in the line of a movie contest, at least so far as Detroit is concerned, was inaugurated there last week. The contest was put on by the Colonial theatre management. In the program a week earlier a scenario was printed and this week the men and women who desire to "act" were placed on the stage at the different shows and told to perform. A few showed cleverness but most of the contestants did nothing but provide laughter for the audiences. The contestants have to stage their little play in two minutes. A cameraman lends realism to the scene.

Soldiers Demand More Than Pictures

By Edward L. Hyman

Director Picture Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

IT is just as easy for you as for me to figure out what the boys are going to expect when they come home from "over there." In a way they're not particular—and then again they are. They have had their think tanks put to new uses and they know what they want. You bet they do!

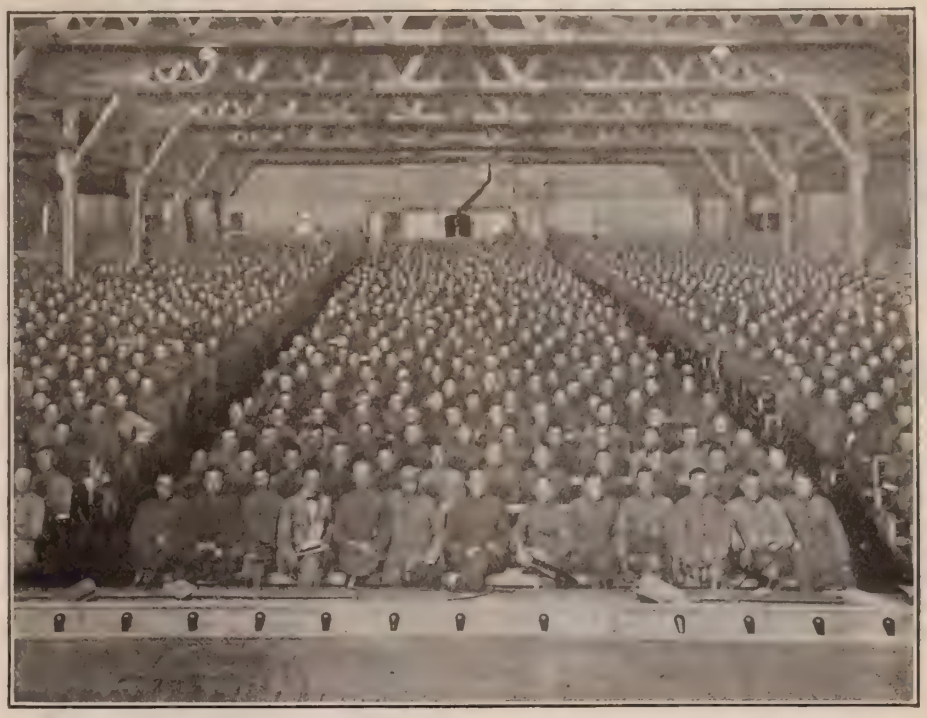
The first thing they are going to do when they strike the old home town is to hunt up the best girl and renew acquaintance with their favorite theatre. So far the proposition seems easy. The girlie, of course, knows where to take them. She knows they won't want to go to a "dump." It won't be a question of cost. They are used to spending all they have got left—they're no pikers, these boys who have been half around the globe and who take off their hats to no one when it comes to experience.

I have already told you what we know, from our experience in the camps, about the boys' taste in pictures. So in this article I am going to give a few opinions—guesses, you may call them if you wish—but I'll bet anyone who wants to take me on, some of these guesses won't be far wrong.

Want Nothing "Cheap"

Our boys are not going to stand for anything "cheap" when they get back. They don't mind a little roughing it, when it goes with the business of war; but now they are in the business of enjoying the fruits of a hard-earned peace. You know it. They are no sissy bunch. They never stopped to pick violets—they left that to Kaiser Bill and his lady's maid, Karl Rosner. But after the first line trenches and Flanders mud, or the none too spick-and-span streets of some of the ports of entry into France, a little extra cleanliness and sweetness will appeal to these big boys who are now home for a holiday before settling down to the old grind of life.

Let us start in at the front of the house and go right on back. We feel sure you already have a smiling cashier, and you won't have to give her "orders" to smile on the boys. Or if she doesn't smile and let them know they have a welcome in your house we know we won't have to suggest that you get the right kind of a girl.



You will have to cater to these boys—a typical audience at Camp Meade, Md.

If you attempt any of the "form" stuff, like ushers in ultra classy uniforms and the like, watch your step, for the boys won't much care whether you do this at all, but they will be ready to notice very quickly whether your force of employees is "on the job" at "attention." These boys are every one trained to notice every little detail. Things have to be right, not half right in this man's army.

Chance for Enterprise

Up to now you have had to be satisfied if you could have the help you used to have, and that doing pretty much as they please, for jobs are easy to get and standards consequently low. But now it's your inning. Don't strike out when all the bases are full, but come over the plate for a home run.

Clean up all the dead wood. Start in at the front of the house and sweep the last bit of old accumulated clutter out of the back-ally exit. Clean and polish and brighten up the old place 'till it shines like new, and until every nook and corner presents a cheerful welcome. This is all old stuff, you say? Righto. It is. But who ever took this old line of guff seriously enough to get out and do all that must be done now? When, before, have boys been taken off the farm, out of the poolrooms, from the district school and the college and all mixed up together into a world brotherhood that will stick—yes, the old guff is going to be plainer to understand now. That is, if you don't want to give up your job to one of the boys who has come back full of new life and new ideas and impressions.

tractive frame and then keeping the remainder of the matter down so that the picture will be the dominant thing.

There is not a person who opens the newspaper on this page that will not be attracted to the picture of the girl and we don't believe that there are any that will fail to read the entire advertisement. The only little point where criticism might enter is that the selling talk is a little misleading, because it was simply one borrowed dress and not an array of magnificent clothes that caused all the trouble for the heroine. But that is a point that can be overlooked in the general excellence of the display.

They only "drop in" to a carelessly exploited house.

HERE is a case where space doesn't count for everything. First of these displays of the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky., occupies seven inches across four columns and the other one six inches double. But as advertisements the smaller one is much the better, though the larger display doubtless pulled the most business for the reason that it got a clear position in the upper left hand corner of the paper.

There is entirely too much black type in the larger display. There should have been more contrast. Use of the Gothic family all through a display is generally bad. If lighter type had been used for the matter at the top and at the bottom the center of the display would have stood out much stronger. As it is now the first impression that it leaves is to "hurt the eye."

We would certainly have used the First National or the signature idea in making the announcement that this is Chaplin's first picture since "A Dog's Life." The simple statement is not as convincing as it could be made.

Now the smaller advertisement is too crowded and shows something of the desire to use every bit of the space possible, but it is the better of the two. The spirit of the picture is better brought out, the genuineness of it is made clear and a more convincing appeal is made. If this same matter had been used in a larger space and the right amount of white had been left the effect would have been very much better all around.

Let smiles be your theatre's army of occupation.

HERE is a "different" advertisement, and one that appeals to us very much as a business builder. It is the work of Arthur G. Stolte, whom you remember as the unusually good advertiser that he was when he was in charge of the Strand in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He is now in charge of the Strand, Omaha, having taken the burdens of that house off the shoulders of H. M. Thomas who is now devoting all of his time to the Rialto.

Note the peculiar way that this sales argument starts with the use of the word "Florence" in caps and then some descriptive matter telling us what sort of a girl Florence really was. There is just enough of the story told to excite the interest. It is a bit unusual to use this amount of type across the top of a display and then to sink the cut of the star, but it was just the right thing to do in this particular case.

FLORENCE (Alice Joyce), was "everybody's girl."
She was the squarest girl in Brick Dust Row.
Never made a mistake in judging her men friends, and when "Blinker" told her "he loved her," she laughed and said "THEY ALL SAY THAT." She found "Blinker," millionaire that he was, different, and soon she became "his girl" and Brick Dust Row was improved.
A story most delightfully presented, the kind you'll like.

Space used is ten inches, three columns. Mr. Stolte has kept the advertisement well opened up, which has no small part in making it easily read.

The man who plays "safe" all the time rarely comes across the plate with a run.

STRAND THEATRE, Minneapolis, shows how a man who knows type, by the use of a simple half tone can make one of the best of advertisements. Recently we told you how Charles G. Branham, manager of the Strand, made use of the cuts that he had originally used in the newspaper layouts. The Minneapolis papers compel the theatres to pay for this matter and so Mr. Branham gets them back and files them for use when he is playing a picture in which the same star appears. Now this picture had been used in the layout on a former attraction and when Branham got Miss Clayton again he simply dug it out and used it.

What Live Wires are Doing

You will note that the same style of type is used through the advertisement almost without exception in the heavier display and that is a mighty good point. The only suggestion that we would make to the Strand would be to use a name plate. We are mighty strong for that idea.

Let's don't run our theatres in Hel-I-Go-land.

COLONIAL THEATRE, Toledo, Ohio, did a big advertising campaign on Theda Bara in Salome, using large space in the dailies as well as in the Sunday issues. This was one of the displays that was used in the advance campaign and therefore it does not come under the same requirements as would a display during the engagement. It was intended to be in a measure teaser advertising, for there is nothing about the picture except the line "Seven Veils Fell From Her and Still She Danced." The cut of Miss Bara, her name and the title are attractively displayed, the black and white effects being used so as to get immediate attention.

Nearly a half page was used on the Sunday of the opening and all during the week there was large space going into detail about the offering and telling of the crowds that were packing the Colonial. The success of the engagement proves that it pays to conduct advance campaigns on unusual pictures. And when you do this, follow the example of the Colonial and do not try to tell everything about the picture in these earlier displays, but rely some on the curiosity element.

The advertising barrage must precede the victory smile.

TEMPLE THEATRE, San Bernardino, Cal., has adopted the institutional form in some of its advertising. This display, nine and one-half inches across three columns is modelled something on the order of the displays of the Grauman theatre, Los Angeles. An attractive border has been used here, but it is strictly a Christmas affair and is entirely out of place. It makes the whole display look attractive, we admit, but it is a bad plan to use anything meaningless in any display. For the proper sort of institutional advertising the theatre should use some sort of border that will be distinctive and, if possible, should reflect something of the individuality of the house itself. For example, in much of its advertising of this sort Grauman's has set its display around a border showing the entrance to the theatre.

There is a considerable amount of type in this advertisement, but it will be read because it makes the individual appeal to the patron who will at once conclude that the house has something to say that is worth while. We like the idea of giving the full program and all of the information, including the hours of the performance, but there is a distinctly jarring note in the little boxed sentence, "Some Show; Let's Go." It is not in keeping with the dignity of the remainder of the display.

It's not "what I thought," but what you THINK.

WHERE it is desirable to use more than one illustration in a single display it is a mighty good idea to combine the line work and the half-tone as has been done in the case of the Victory theatre Tacoma, Wash. Practically four full columns has been used in this one and every portion of it tells, and at the same time full appreciation of values is shown.

You will note that in the main layout the entire matter is devoted to the Raffles idea and that it remains for the type matter below to bring out the name of the star and a few additional selling points on the picture.

This is the sort of advertising that makes a theatre stand out as THE house of the city. It is with the greatest pleasure that we see so many of the theatres turning to the sort of advertising that carries class with it. It is a sure sign that the exhibiting industry is getting on a surer basis and

THIS is not a new stunt, for it has been used in various newspaper contests, and the manager of the Strand, Birmingham, Ala., knew that, but he used it to arouse greater interest in the theatre which has only recently come under new management. The result was the receipt of over 800 properly pasted together replies. Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

BY the time this is read S. L. Rothapfel will be on the other edge of the continent, and therefore, from one point of view, the general heading of this article this week, and for several weeks to follow, is misleading. Mr. Rothapfel had no personal part in arranging the presentations at the Rialto and Rivoli this week. Yet, in the greater sense, it is not misleading and the premier exhibitor did have about all to do with it. To explain:

The Rothapfel spirit fully imbues every one of his employees. There are few organizations in the country that show the same team work. Mr. Rothapfel demands a high percentage of everything from his staff, but he is always ready to accord them the fullest credit. The organization that he has built up can run the Rialto and the Rivoli in the Rothapfel way, and so when he goes on these annual vacations he leaves the whole thing to them. And you can bet that they leave nothing undone to get the highest degree of perfection in the presentations.

And so, with these introductory remarks, we can go ahead and see the two shows just as if Mr. Rothapfel were right by our side.

Now an excellent effect is being secured at the Rivoli since the installation of the new John Wenger general setting. The lights are all down before the outer curtain goes up and then as the second starts revealing the orchestra it is bathed in blue. The lights in the dome and proscenium arch come up in blue while the heavy curtains at either side of the house are fringed in red. The "Symphonic Poem," from Liszt's "Ideale," is the overture this week, and at the end the lights all come up in gold.

Rivoli Animated follows immediately, opening with bugle calls and the roll of drums and then turning into "Semper Fidelis" with Gaumont pictures of the parade at Washington to supply milk for the babies of France and reviewed by Mrs. Wilson. With Hearst-Pathe pictures of a negro battle royal and other sports for the sailors at Charleston, S. C., we get "You Bet," a very lively air. Then come beautiful colored pictures entitled "Love Bird," released by Education. These get many laughs and take the strain off the warlike character of the rest of the Animated.

Then comes the Official War Review, which opens with the American attack on St. Mihiel, and you should hear the crowds drown out the music. First we have the artillery preparation, and then with the tanks rolling along ahead, the doughboys start forward. There are a few groups of cavalry and we watch the advance of the soldiers from various angles. These pictures were taken in the midst of the battlefield and are some of the most realistic that have come out of the war. "Battle of Ypres" is played during the first portion of these and with the appearance of the tanks it switches to "Les Preludes." Just as we see the barrage fire laid down and the men kneeling between their dashes forward "New York Hippodrome March" is used.

After the battle General Pershing decorates some of the heroes, and here, amid great applause, "You're a Grand Old Flag" is played. It is hard to tell whether this gets more applause than the scenes that follow—of the king and queen entering Bruges, which was recaptured just before the armistice was signed. With the orchestra pealing forth the very martial Belgian National Anthem, "La Brabaconne," the audiences pay an earnest tribute to the rulers of the heroic little nation.

Then we switch back to this country and Hearst-Pathe gives us pictures of the sailing of the "George Washington," bearing the President and the peace delegates. "Invincible Eagle" is played twice through and then as the ship is seen passing the Statue of Liberty there comes "Liberty Bell March." The pictures open with views of the delegates and the President and then we have various views of the ship, the battleship "Pennsylvania" and the destroyers which accompany her and of aeroplanes that hover overhead. The pictures get a great ovation.

With the dome in blue and no other lights in the theatre, the curtains part and reveal Emanuel List, in evening clothes and seated before a fireplace. The only light on the stage comes from the glowing coals. Two evergreens and a fanciful hanging light are the only decorations. The song is "Little Grey Home in the West."

"Clouds that Smile" is the beautiful Van Scoy scenic that comes next. These are wonderful views of all sorts of clouds, with the titles cleverly done in verse. "In the Garden" is the music here.

There is another one of the wonderful Wenger settings for the second vocal number, Madeline D'Espincy singing "Un Peu d'Amour." There is a golden flower-covered moon in the foreground with the stars in the background and the singer, in white, is seated in a garden, with green trees all about her and just a suggestion of light upon her. The screen curtain comes down just at the end of the song and one gets the idea of the moon perfectly, for the introductory scenes have the star of the feature, Elsie Ferguson, seated in the hollow of a new moon. The same music is carried into the opening of the picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree."

Unquestionably, a great deal of the charm of the production rests on the brilliant score that Dr. Riesenfeld has arranged. We have never heard a more pleasing one at either of the houses. Nevin's "Romance" is the theme and it comes in with the introduction of "Mary Hamilton," played with harp, 'cello and one violin. Then comes "Songs from Shakespeare," followed by "Merry England" with the arrival of the old family lawyer. Some of the other selections that are used are "Country Dance," "Three English Dances," "Shepherd Dance," "Hungarian Dance No. 2," "Love Song," "Gypsy Song," "Babillage" and "Forget Me Not." The theme is brought back only twice during the feature, once at the title "Oh, Moon" and then near the very end at the title "With Recovered Calm." But "Un Peu d'Amour" is also used twice, the first time when the loving pair are seen after the gypsy scene when the selection is played as a violin solo with organ accompaniment and then at the very end when the romance comes to its happy conclusion and the phantom forms of the children are seen dancing around the couple.

For the second orchestra number all the lights are in gold. This is selections from "Florodora." We have recommended so often to other exhibitors that they try the plan of playing these favorites of a few years ago that we are almost ashamed to repeat it. But if you could be present at one of the Rivoli or Rialto presentations and hear the people humming and singing and then hear the burst of applause at the end, you would be convinced.

"Hitting the High Spots," a Mutt and Jeff comedy, is the "send them home laughing" part of the bill. "Hezekiah," "Woodland Dreams" and "Introduce Me" are the three musical selections used.

Dr. Riesenfeld is "putting one over" this week at the Rialto, when he had introduced one of the most impressive overture arrangements that we have ever seen. It is Saint-Saens' "Dance Macbre." Now, the lights are all down even before the en-

HE FELT AT HOME

And That's a Secret of Success for Your Theatre

THIS is a true incident.

Sunday evening we sat next to a middle-aged man who enjoyed every bit of the performance at the Rivoli. We heard him say to a friend that he hadn't missed a week at the Rialto or Rivoli in years except when he was out of the city. The friend in turn then asked him whether he went to a certain other theatre and mentioned a success that was playing there.

The Rialto-Rivoli fan replied that he never went to any other motion picture shows but those at the Rothapfel houses.

"If you like pictures, I cannot understand that," replied the friend. "The other theatres have some mighty good pictures and I can't see why you miss them to keep up your record here."

"I don't go to merely see pictures," was the reply. "I go to enjoy myself. I always feel like I am HOME in these houses."

There's a great thing in that statement. You owe it to yourself to make your theatre like home to your patrons—to make them feel that they are in just the right place and that they can be just a little happier there than anywhere else.

Rialto and Rivoli

trance of the musical director, a very rare occurrence, and with the start of the music we have the weird sounds of the mournful wind and then against the background of the curtain a ghostlike form appears and in a few seconds a woman's voice is heard. It is Elsie Herndon Kearns reciting "The Dance of Death," a dramatic poem by R. A. Barnett. There is no music with the recital and as it is ended and the orchestra takes up the refrain, there is applause, in marked contrast with the utter silence of the house up to this time. The end of the number gets a great reception. It is a wonderful number and is especially good when the rest of the bill is comedy, as is the one at the Rialto.

"Peaks, Parks and Pines" is the scenic which is helped along by Nos. 2 and 3 of the "Ansell Suite."

Now, another surprise is here in the musical arrangement. For the first time that we have ever seen it done, the same singers are used for the vocal numbers, but you will see in a moment how differently they are used in the two of them.

With the center dome in red and blue, the arch in white and the inner dome in red, bringing the national colors of France, the Rialto quartet appears on the stage and sings. "Home Coming Week in France," which stirs the audience to insistent applause, which, however, fails to break the Rothapfel rule of "No encores."

Then comes the Animated opening with Gaumont pictures of the "Mauretania" arriving with the first American soldiers from the other side. The first glimpse of the big liner gets a great hand and then as we have the close-ups the enthusiasm swells. The music does its part for first time; it is "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," until the title, which says they are men of the air service and then the orchestra turns into "When You Come Back."

Hearst-Pathe pictures then show French sailors showing what they do when they sight a submarine and storm music is played up to the time the sailors are decorated and here we have the first eight bars of "Les Enfants de France," repeated through these scenes. Then Hearst-Pathe shows us pictures of the new marine railway at Alameda, Cal., and here the music is "Melodie." Then we are given some more comedy with a short Mutt and Jeff comedy called "The New Champion" and for this, "Habanola" is the lively accompaniment.

Gaumont then shows us pictures of our flying men at Kelly Field, Texas, and the orchestra remains tacit during these pictures, only the effects for the motor being used. When we gave you an account of the way that "America's Answer" was presented by Mr. Rothapfel at the Cohan theatre, we told you that Joseph LaRose, the production manager, had obtained a miniature sawmill to get this effect, and it is used again at the Rialto this week.

The orchestra takes up the music again with Gaumont pictures of "Our Boys in France" with the doughboys "pushing on toward Potsdam" and then we have "Columbia," played until the appearance of the French General Belenet, when the music becomes "La Pere de lay Victoire."

Stage Manager Kickels of the Metropolitan, Iowa Falls, Iowa, has a hobby, curios and and collections. He has a collection of firearms, missiles, etc., that look like an exhibit at a World's Fair, and an assortment of money of all nations that would start a Cosmopolitan bank. A part of this coin and paper money collection was utilized to advantage by the Metropolitan in exploiting Goldwyn's "Money Mad," as shown in the accompanying photograph

There comes a crashing ending to the Animated with Gaumont pictures of the "peace ship" off to Europe. First we are told that just before she sailed, in came the "Lapland," bearing wounded soldiers, and these boys get a great hand. Then we have pictures of the ship, taken from various angles, with the warships and the airships, whistle effects being sounded as the harbor crafts salute and then the presidential salute of twenty-one guns, which was fired by the "Pennsylvania," being reproduced. The closing title, "Bon Voyage, Mr. President," gets a cheer from everyone. Those who do not like the idea of the President sailing away, evidently were not in the Rialto when we saw these pictures.

Then comes the second vocal number, supplied by the Rialto quartet again, but this time they are seated with the orchestra, and as they begin to sing Arthur Gibson's "The Drums," two little tots with drums appear and march back and forth on the stage, giving an intensely human touch that draws more applause than most musical numbers get.

Comedy is the ruling element in the feature, which is a rather ordinary affair with timeworn plot of the heiress hireing the rich young man without knowing who he is. "Waiting for You" is the theme, which is first used when Enid Bennett is seen for the first time. "Reuben Fox Trot" is played where the old man comes to the city and Friel's "Romance," "Tete a Tete," "Old Time Valse" and "Ectasy" are used, but the most of the music consists of the Rothapfel numbered selections.

After the orchestra plays selections from "Pinafore" we have one of the funniest of comedies in "The Fatal Marriage," a Fox Sunshine. The audience simply howls with glee all the way through it. The clever dogs are again used in the introduction, with the daschund getting a storm of hisses as he appears on the screen. Billie Ritchie and Ethel Teare have leading parts and there is not a moment of it where there isn't something doing—and where the audience isn't laughing. The music selections, in the order they are played, are "Oh Frenchy, Frenchy," "My Belgian Rose," "Y. M. C. A.," "Full of Dash," "Honeymoon," without the introduction, "Electric Galop" and "Trolley Galop."

Yes, comedy is the strong feature of the Rialto bill. It is introduced three times during the presentation and one goes away from the theatre after more laughing than one has done in weeks.

In brief, they are great bills at the two houses this week. They are up to the Rothapfel standard and after he reads this he can keep enjoying his vacation with the certainty that the rest of us back here are enjoying the Rialto and the Rivoli.

Theatre Issues Novel Form of Holiday Program

Andrews theatre, Sherman, Texas, has issued a clever little booklet for the holiday season, giving the program during December. The cover carries Christmas decorations and is tied together with ribbon of holy design. The booklet is arranged so that each succeeding page projects a little below the one just before, bearing the words, "First Week," "Second Week," etc., making it convenient.

McCormick Stages a Wonderful Pageant for Circle Theatre Showing of "Under Four Flags"

By Davis Hampton

ONCE upon a time Indianapolis looked to the coming of the Winter Garden shows and similar big musical attractions for spectacular stage effects. Now they just crank up the old Tin Henry or "step on" the '19 Stutz and go to the Circle, for a great change has come about in local theatricals and the playgoers look forward to the Circle's spectacular curtain raisers, tableaux and stage prologues with as much pleasure as the coming of a popular star.

The Shrine of the Silent Art has also become the temple of stage spectacle.

The scenic studio, electrical work rooms and mechanical departments are constantly busy painting new scenes, devising and inventing new mechanical and electrical effects for the embellishment of the program and it is doubtful if any theatre has attained the success of the Circle in the presentation of stage pictures.

Pageant of the Allies

For the official government presentation of the Victory Picture, "Under Four Flags," S. Barret McCormick, managing and producing director of the Circle, created "The Pageant of the Allies," a spectacle of music, song and tableau, perhaps the most striking of the many things he has done.

The theme of the spectacle was symbolized in the person of a wounded soldier played by Gerol Gardner, who lay alone, dying, in a shell crater on No Man's Land. Around him stretched the bleak, shell-torn battlefield with its tangle of wire and grim ruins, at his feet, as though defiant of the war machine, red poppies in small uneven patches valiantly blossomed in the spaces that lay untouched by the cannons' vomit.

Blood smeared, the last breath nearly gone, the soldier stirred, and as though moved by some supreme hand, lifted his head and spoke the lines of the poem, "On Flanders Fields the Poppies Bloom." With the last words—"if ye break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep though poppies grow in Flanders fields," he fell back, clutching for a picture, a frayed and tattered picture of a silver-haired old lady—his mother.

SHRINE OF THE SILENT ART

Advance advertising followed this style, some of it in colors, with talks about the picture

Softly from the orchestra came the plaintive strains of "Mother Machree," the lights dimmed, a pale blue haze fell over the dying fighter, and he sang softly, like a child feeling the dark shadows of night creeping on, would sing. It was not the "Mother Machree" song that you and I have heard so often from the throat of a dress-suited tenor who tried for the nasal twang of all Irish ballads, but the song of a man, once again a child, who, in the falling shadows, took the memory of the silver-haired one as his companion.

"Hosts of Freedom Come"

With a sob, clutching the picture to him, he fell. In the distance a bugle sounded, a white light illuminated his face. "They Come," he cried. Again came the distant echo of the trumpet. "They Come,—I Die in Peace—The Hosts of Freedom Come."

He lay still. The orchestra swung into the sweeping chords of the introduction of the inspiring overture; "The Victorious Allies," which soon developed into the Serbian National Anthem, at the first strains of which a beautiful young girl, barefooted and draped in the national colors that fell in filmy folds about her, entered with the sword of Serbia drawn and bearing proudly the flag of the tiny kingdom.

Before the body of the dead soldier she paused, the sword and flag of Serbia saluted, then she took her position at the right as the Russian Hymn was heard and another girl, bearing the flag and sword of Russia, entered. In succession came France, Belgium, England, each to do honor to the fallen and pledge allegiance to the holy cause.

Then, a distant rumble of drums, almost inaudible at first, then increasing to a resounding thunder, Russia vainly tries to lift her sword, but she weakens, her flag falls and drags on the ground. Russia has failed; crouching, ashamed, beaten, she withdraws from the group of nations, then comes the sound of trumpet and drum, which soon develops into Marcia Reale and Italy enters to take her place in the pageant of nations.

Red Flag of Russia

Again the drums are heard, this time mingled with wild discordant notes, and Russia dashes in, flaunting the red flag of the revolution, the nations turn from her, vainly she tries to take place among them as the music rises and swells with the fury of a nation gone mad. With a crash of drums and symbols she falls, clinging to the Red Flag of anarchy, as the music

These two scenes picture the arrival of the Allies and then celebrating victory, with Russia cast down breaks forth into its mighty and overpowering climax, a veritable paean of peace, and the Star Spangled Banner, the exalted symbol of Liberty and Freedom, rises above the tumult of battle.

America enters, her sword drawn, the flag of the free floating on high.

Then came the unexpected, the glorious climax to an already magnificent spectacle. The scene of the battlefield painted on a transparent drop was suddenly flooded from behind with light and in the place of grim desolation a scene of wonder came to view. The earth, a huge ball, seemed to float out in space, encircled by an orbit in which, floating in the winds of the world, were the flags of all the allied nations while atop, with the torch of freedom guiding them, stood the figure of Liberty. And from the heavens a pure white dove descended to hover on the body of the soldier. Peace had come, peace to the world and to him, the symbol of the nation dead, who had laid down his life that freedom might live.

As we remarked before, Indianapolis used to look to the big musical shows for spectacle, now they look to McCormick.

THREE OF THEM

Now Give Us Your Idea on the Same Pictures

IN this issue there are three Special Service Sections which undertake to give the exhibitors an idea of the character of the productions and to make suggestions for their exploitation. They are:

D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life."

Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams."

"The Key to Power."

We want to urge exhibitors who show these pictures to send in accounts of the way that they are presented with photographs of any lobby display or special stage settings that are used, together with specimens of their advertising. We don't claim to have any corner on ideas, and we want YOURS for the benefit of other exhibitors.

think of this too. The theatre offers the easiest and quickest jobs for many of those who will come back. Experience is not so essential as clean intelligence. No manager need have any fear of being displaced, if he makes any effort at all to live up to the new requirements. On the other hand every one of us can breathe easier knowing that we can pick once again the best from the country's brains for our own little shoe-shop.

They Want a Welcome

When the boys come home! What a breeze of welcome we should give them; and how deep from our hearts it will come if we catch the new spirit of "doing your bit" and "doing it right now" which the army life has stood for. We couldn't go ourselves, perhaps. But we can get the spirit of it now, with new and fresh energy arriving to help us and to make ours the quickest business of all to respond to right treatment.

Our theatres will fill up with eager new faces. We will take in new dimes and nickels and quarters until perhaps we are intoxicated with it all and forget the responsibilities that go with this silver lining to the dark clouds that we have just passed through. Now is the time, you boys at home, to see that the good feeling of this home-coming is turned into permanent good by having the home welcome one the boys from over there won't forget in a week or a fortnight.

Music and flowers, touches of courtesy, refinements that don't obtrude as mere "show" will help mightily to give the impression that home is the best place after all. When the boys come back they are going to look you over with a critical eye born of a new training, a training that leads to appreciation of the real things in life.

Does your present organization provide every possible pleasure and comfort for the boys, father, mother, and the best girl? If you have any doubt on this point, get busy. There is not much time to prepare.

And these boys judge by results. They have done their bit and will accept no excuses if things at home don't measure up to their new keener perceptions of what ought to be.

Cleveland House Books Its First Serial for Children

Alhambra theatre, Cleveland, O., has just booked a serial for the first time in the history of the house. This is "The Lure of the Circus," and it will be shown at the special children's matinees each Saturday. Heretofore the theatre has been using only short subjects for the matinees, on the principle that the longer features tire the little ones.

Blasé New York Wakes Up as Kashin Starts Big Teaser Campaign on "Wanted for Murder"

NEW YORK is notoriously blasé. It takes something mighty much out of the ordinary to wake the old city up and to get things started. Maurice A. Kashin is showing at the Broadway theatre this week how it can be done. And if it can be done in New York certainly the same thing can be accomplished in any other part of the earth.

If we started in right off the reel to tell you that Kashin did "neighborhood" exploitation to put the picture over at the Broadway, one might resort to the slang and retort: "What do you mean—neighborhood?" And we will reply that we mean exactly what we said. We do not mean that he advertised solely in the neighborhood of Broadway, but that he went into the neighborhood sections and exploited each one of them so as to bring the greatest volume of business to the Broadway.

He even used the grocery stores, and used them in a way that every other exhibitor can follow. And he not only used them with the American grocery stores, but he invaded the Yiddish. And the results in attendance at the Broadway this week show the result.

These teaser posters were in the form of the usual police "reward" offer

But let's start at the beginning. The picture which he is showing this week is "Wanted for Murder," the latest Harry Rapf production which is now being distributed through the Film Clearing House, Inc. It features Elaine Hammerstein and was written by S. Jay Kaufman, conductor of "Round the Town" column in the New York Globe. As the title indicates it is based on the demand that the Kaiser be tried for murder as the result of his running bloodily amuck in Europe.

Mr. Kashin had only to take one glance at his morning paper and note the growing sentiment among the allies that the Vandal of the North be placed on trial when he decided to do just a little more on this than he had ever done before. And he has pulled some sensational stunts on other pictures, so that he had to "go some" and this he did by utilizing every means at his disposal from newspaper advertising to lobby display, with quite a lot of things in between. And he hinged every bit of the publicity on the first page stories in every newspaper.

His campaign started out with the posting of hundreds of posters on the order of the ordinary police poster advertising for the arrest of an ordinary criminal. These did not mention the name of the Kaiser, but gave a description of him that gave every one a good clue. Reports came to the police from several sections of the big city that traffic had been blocked by the posters and extra men had to be sent our from various stations. New York is the most curious city in the world. All you have to do is to stop in the middle of the street and begin looking intently at the sky and in a couple of minutes you will have a few thousand others doing the same thing. Kashin simply banked on that knowledge.

This teaser campaign was carried further by posting of "snipes" nine inches deep and forty-two inches wide which carried a drawing of the Kaiser and then the simple legend, "Wanted for Murder."

Then there were handbills distributed bearing the same matter as on the larger posters and these were put in all parts of the city through the use of an aeroplane. The same effect can be used in other cities by circulating them from housetops. The lines "Wanted for Murder" were used in newspaper advertising without any explanation.

Now none of this matter bore the name of the theatre or any indication that reference was being made to a photoplay. The mystery idea was kept the dominant one in all of this exploitation, and when one can hard to carry out the same plan in a smaller community.

Then came the second phase of the campaign. It was linking up the advance, or teaser advertising with the name of the theatre. First there appeared the newspaper advertising that told that this was a motion picture and that it would be seen at the Broadway.

A large balloon was sent up above the Broadway and moored there. It bore the title of the picture in striking letters.

Then four mysterious horsemen, dressed in the colors of the allies, were employed in searching the city for the Kaiser. A limousine was then brought into play. The curtains were tightly drawn and on the side windows there were painted silhouette figures of the Hun ruler. It was guarded by a couple of soldiers, while a bunch of "supers" were also employed as a mob

These mysterious "snipes" covered New York City and these were held back from the limousine by the soldiers. This stunt was employed only at night.

Front and lobby view of the display used by M. Kashin at the Broadway on "Wanted for Murder"

Now the advertising became all of a distinctive type. It represented the Kaiser dressed as a Hollander and cringing as he read the posters announcing that he was wanted on a murder charge. These posters mentioned the playhouse and the dates of the showing and again an aeroplane was employed to aid in their distribution.

Fifty thousand letters were also sent out to a select mailing list, these starting off with a talk about what would happen to the former Hun ruler. These, of course, also mentioned the name of the theatre.

However, the neighborhood element came in through the distribution of 150,000 paper bags to various grocery stores in different parts of the city. These were in Yiddish and in English, according to the neighborhood in which they were used. They bore the title of the production, then the description of the man wanted and finally ended in the announcement of the place and dates for the showing.

These paper bags are inexpensive and the smaller merchants will jump at the chance to use them when they are getting something for nothing.

Mr. Kashin, of course, made a special lobby display. In the two side arches were panels showing an allegorical figure of Justice. In the center arch was an electrical display of the title. On the two center columns were two huge official-looking indictments against Wm. Hohenzollern, with Woodrow Wilson as the foreman of the jury, and Marshal Foch as the prosecuting attorney.

Inside was a huge painting of the Kaiser in Holland, as already described, and on the left side was an allegorical painting of the World's International Court of Justice.

All the lobby cards carried the Holland theme, and the tall narrow frames on the door easily lent themselves to being turned into indictments.

Preceding the showing of the feature the stage represented a bivouac, and a singer dressed as a soldier sang "The Rose of No Man's Land." A female singer dressed as a nurse responded from a stage box.

150,000 of these bags were used, printed in Yiddish for these sections and in England for the remainder

See Motion Pictures, Newspaper Answers the Pacifists

An incidental tribute is paid to the motion picture by the New York Globe in replying to one of its correspondents who sought to give speech-making and note-writing credit for winning the war rather than the feats of arms of the Americans and our allies. And so at the end of the editorial the Globe says:

"Our advice to our correspondent is to go into a movie and see what sort of labor it took to discourage German power and to break down German morale. He will come out with a desire to salute the first uniform he sees, rather than to read a copy of the New Republic."

In other words, the motion picture today is the final proof to everyone of every accomplished fact of the day. It is easy to see, therefore, why a decade from now a feature from the actual war scenes will attract its thousands, while the actual history of the war in pictures is never likely to lose its popularity.

"Something Different" Gets the Crowds, Declares Detroit Manager

"GIVE the public lots of variety in pictures and lots of music and you'll get them," remarks Phil Gleichman, managing director of the Broadway Strand theatre, who was expressing his views on local conditions.

"A good picture is half or most of the battle and we all must admit it," continued Mr. Gleichman, "and yet it is the attractive program as a whole that starts the public coming and keeps them coming week after week.

"The department stories draw people into their big establishments because they advertise bargains. In fact they have new bargains every day. The theatre that gives the most for the least, as it were, though price is not so much an object as many people think, is the one that has the greatest receipts. Of course on Mary Pickford we may do a little more than with some of our other stars, because the public knows her and that helps the box office, but after all the big show is the thing.

"There was a time when you could satisfy everyone with two or three reels. Then came four, five and six reel shows. Later the three reel and longer features arrived. Managers began putting on a feature with a news weekly or a comedy. Now they want more than that so we have big orchestras and soloists.

"For instance this week the Broadway Strand has an Ethel Clayton feature, a Montgomery Flagg comedy and a news weekly. Our regular soloist is assisted by a trio and a member of the orchestra offers xylophone and concertina solos.

"That isn't too much because the public likes it. The only necessity is that we give them something different a week hence. This I am prepared to do by lending continued variety to the bills."

Lots of theatres just run themselves, and you can always tell which way they are going.

Willis Gives His Photoplay Views

Well-Known Coast Writer Draws Distinction Between Screen and Stage Art—Urges Removal of the Barrier

By Richard Willis

IT is a curious fact that the dramatization of novels and short stories for speaking stage purposes has seldom proven either an artistic or a financial success, yet the reverse is true in regard to the photoplay.

One reason is that the drama relies on dialogue to present much of the action which has taken place outside of the scenes actually presented, and the lengthy action of the novel has to be compressed into comparatively few words and only enough action to comply with the demands of dramatic construction.

With a photoplay, the dialogue is confined to a few sub-titles, as they are termed; the rest is action; the more action there is in a photoplay the better is is as a rule, while in a stage drama the happenings must build to a climax.

The building of a stage play is an art apart and cannot be confused with the art of writing a photoplay.

Considerable latitude and liberty can be, and is, taken in adapting a novel into a photoplay. The action is what is actually adapted, not the dialogue, and this action must be well connected, put into good continuity and well sustained throughout.

It is very true that in adapting a novel many hack writers lose sight of the main ideas advanced by the author, who will recognize but little of his work in the adaptation. On the other hand, it is almost impossible to make an adaptation without alteration, although a skilled writer can do this and even make additions and yet keep to the ideas and main plot of the author.

It is also true that producers will at times purchase the rights to a well-known book or short story, mainly to advertise the name of the author or his book, although an adaptation which will follow the novel faithfully is impossible.

Again, it is true that authors do not, as a rule, make good adaptations, because they do not understand the needs or limitations of the photoplay, nor do they comprehend the necessary technique required. They are inclined to keep too strictly to their own story and are afraid to leave anything out, when by so doing they would improve the adaptation immensely.

Adaptations are undoubtedly popular, especially at this time, and I look forward to the time when our leading authors will make a closer study of the technique of the photoplay and not only be able to make desirable adaptations of their published work but write original stories for screen use.

The one objection of the author: that the producers will not pay adequate prices for photoplay rights, does not hold good any more, because good prices for good photoplay material can be obtained. An author has the right to expect payment for photoplay rights to his good adaptable material in proper proportion to what he can secure in other channels, but he should not expect large sums for material which is not easily adapted and if he chooses to sell "an idea," that is his own affair.

Coming to ideals, and ideals are not always possible or practical, the most desirable procedure is for an author to collaborate with a skillful adapter; it is being

SOME OF HIS VIEWS

"IN adapting a novel many hack writers lose sight of the main ideas advanced by the author, who will recognize but little of his work in the adaptation. A skilled writer can make changes and additions and yet keep to the ideas and main plot.

"Coming to ideals, the most desirable procedure is for an author to collaborate with a skillful adapter; this procedure will certainly become more popular.

"The feeling of hostility among writers toward producers and the feeling of resentment among producers toward authors should be done away with."

Huff in Paramount-Artcraft Special

Although the complete cast for the John Emerson-Anita Loos Production, "When the Boys Come Home," which is now in production at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has not been announced, it is stated that the leading roles in this Paramount-Artcraft Special will be in the hands of Ernest Truex and Louise Huff.

It is further stated that although these two well-known players have the feature parts, the entire cast is of a proportionately high standard and there will be no star.

Strong Cast Reported for "Made in America"

In "Made in America," the new eight-reel patriotic series illustrating the training of the American soldier here and abroad, which will be released one reel each week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the principal roles are taken by well-known actors and actresses and 40,000 typical American youths clad in khaki.

The scenes of the series were taken in one of the greatest cantonments in the country under the direction of Ashley Miller, producer and director of the play.

Bruner in Charge Pathe Serial Publicity

Frank V. Bruner has resigned his position as Director of Publicity for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation to become Manager of Serial Publicity for Pathe.

Mr. Bruner has had long experience in the field of theatrical and motion picture publicity and will specialize on the tremendous serial campaign Pathe is planning.

Just now his particular space-filling pets are Pearl White and Ruth Roland, Pathe's two Serial Stars.

Norma Talmadge to First National

First National Exhibitors' Circuit Has Signed a Two Years' Contract to Distribute Productions Starring Former Select Player

AFTER completing four more productions for Select Pictures to complete her agreement with that concern, Norma Talmadge will release all her productions thereafter for a period of two years, through the exchanges of First National, according to announcement from the First National offices.

This addition of another star of known box-office value to the ranks of independent producers whose releases are booked to exhibitors on an independent basis is declared by First National officials to be one of the biggest transactions, financially, ever concluded between a star and a distributing organization.

J. M. Schenck Pleased

"And for the first time in my experience as a producer," declares Joseph M. Schenck, who is the active head of the Norma Talmadge Productions Company, "I am able to understand how it is possible for a producer to make bigger and better pictures with an increase in values at the box-office compatible with the added quality in the picture. To me this contract with First National is the solution to an ambition I have cherished for more than a year.

"I have wanted to make bigger pictures. I have wanted to pay the price demanded for big stories. Of course, there has been nothing to stop me but the uncertainty of whether I could do any better than break even on the investment. This was the fault, not of an individual or group of individuals, but a system."

While the details of the contract are not made public, it is understood that First National will distribute a minimum of twelve Norma Talmadge productions during the two years the contract is in force, and that a total of twenty productions will be the maximum. By his system of keeping two directors constantly employed, Mr. Schenck plans to make at least six releases each year, allowing a minimum of six weeks' actual studio working time for every production.

Although the amount that will be paid by First National for the negative rights to each picture totals, in the aggregate, what is described as one of the biggest, if not the biggest sum ever involved in a contract of this nature, it means, according to Circuit officials, that the Norma Talmadge pictures will, as a consequence of the increased latitude given Mr. Schenck in production, take on a proportionate increase in box-office value, apart from the exhibitors' advantage in booking them independently.

J. D. Williams Elucidates

"The exhibitors will book the Talmadge pictures exactly as they are booking the Chaplin, Pickford and Stewart releases," declared J. D. Williams, manager for First National, "and independent of anything else. Mr. Schenck's features will stand absolutely on their own merits.

"And no exhibitor will be compelled to spend in rentals for subjects he may not want, or which have no popularity in his community, the profits he makes on the Talmadge pictures.

"Mr. Schenck has seen the general trend of the industry toward the open market booking policy. He is convinced that if exhibitors can make double and treble the profits today on big star productions booked independently that they made when those stars were rented on the program series principle, it follows that the popularity which Miss Talmadge has attained in the last two years more than justifies the opportunity to offer exhibitors her future releases on the open market.

"But most important of all, to exhibitors, to Mr. Schenck and other producers, and to First National franchise holders as distributors, is the solution provided for the problem which for months past has harassed and worried manufacturers of quality films with a big box-office pull—the alarming discovery that the producers have made no profit, and that to strive for greater quality in releases on the program distributing system meant going more deeply into debt, and increasing the loans from banks and individuals to finance their activities.

"I understand that Mr. Schenck has made a statement on this point, which explains his position. So let's look at it now from the exhibitor viewpoint. First National franchise holders are exhibitors every one of them. Their present and future is affected when the producers whose films they show fail to make the profits necessary to encourage them to continue making bigger and better pictures. Industry without progress is a car without gasoline. It stands still.

Productions Must Continue

"The remedy is to make it possible for producers to continue in business by allowing them sufficient financial latitude to make quality releases and realize a legitimate profit from their efforts and investments. If they have the financial freedom to produce really good pictures the exhibitor is certain to benefit.

"There is not a locality in the world that will not patronize a good picture in sufficient numbers to profit the exhibitor who shows it. Consequently, when producers make good pictures the exhibitor cannot fail to benefit. He may have to pay more for them, but he makes more in proportion.

"But how can any star or recognized producer continue gambling from $50,000 to $100,000 on each picture without some assurance, and a very definite one at that, that they will get it back? If theirs is quality workmanship they are entitled to a return of their investment, plus a profit.

"If it is not quality, the market will quickly prove it," continued Mr. Williams. "But to make and release big pictures on a percentage basis, and then have them offered to the exhibitors under conditions which compel him to book anywhere from two to a dozen other productions of questionable value in order to get the big one is a menace to the continuance and furtherance of the quality this industry needs more than anything else.

"If producers would begin active investigations of the reasons for their lack of profits on box-office winners they would quickly discover the solution—and that is to offer every star and every production to exhibitors on individual merits and drawing power, and not in such a way that it is necessary to carry weaker releases, or to be carried by stronger attractions, 'and compel the exhibitors to stand the expense through heavily taxed profits either way they take.'"

Revolutionary Changes

Mr. Schenck summed up his opinion of the contract with First National by describing it as "the revolutionary change of method which gives me the open door to greater quality in productions starring Norma Talmadge and to a realization of a profit from the superior releases I will place at the disposal of exhibitors." As the chief executive of the Norma Talmadge Productions Company for the last two years, Mr. Schenck has confronted the financial problem involved in producing features for program distribution, and gave a liberal expression to his opinions.

"First let me make clear," he requested, "that my comments are not in any sense a criticism of individuals or organizations, but an analysis of a system. For this system there can be no individual responsibility. It is universally employed by program distributors. That it cannot endure much longer is obvious to me. I have been producing pictures with Miss Talmadge as the star for more than two years. When I first took charge of her studio I received an offer of $750 a week for her services.

"Recently I was offered $7,500 a week by a program company. To have accepted it would have been fatal to her popularity. True, an income of $30,000 a month is better than a reasonable salary. The fact that I refused the offer was not due entirely to my belief that she is capable of earning more.

"It was also because I knew that to accept it would be to place her against a dead wall obstacle to progress, and would result in a decline in her popularity. Allowing six weeks to a production, her salary alone would burden each picture with approximately $60,000, because she would require ten days or two weeks of rest between pictures. Add to this about $40,000 for other expense, not including prints, advertising supplies and sales cost, and figure what it means to get back that sum.

Madge Kennedy Scores Thrice

Goldwyn Declares That Last Three Productions of Madge Kennedy Were Marked Successes and Evoked Enthusiasm

"THREE marked successes in as many months is a record of which Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, may well be proud," declared a Goldwyn official.

"Hailed as an instantaneous favorite in her first Goldwyn production only a year ago, the following she won for herself in her first screen performance has grown to tremendous proportions, until today Madge Kennedy enjoys a popularity that has come to but few young stars of the screen.

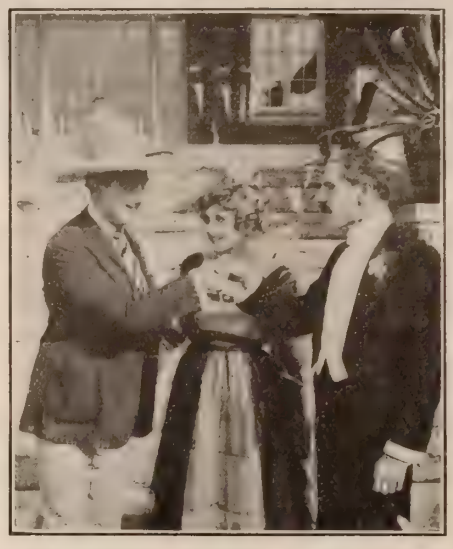
"Recently Miss Kennedy's personality and art in 'Friend Husband' thrilled and amused thousands. Even more pronounced was the enthusiasm evoked by 'The Kingdom of Youth,' rated by many as the most delightful and entertaining of all Madge Kennedy-Goldwyn pictures."

Madge Kennedy's success in "Friend Husband" and "The Kingdom of Youth" is said to have been duplicated in her latest release, "A Perfect Lady," the Goldwyn picturization of Rose Stahl's stage vehicle by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf.

In fact, it is said that no other story has given the artist such wide scope for the talents that differentiate Madge Kennedy from any other screen luminary.

Essentially a comedy, "A Perfect Lady" is not without pathetic moments, and in these Miss Kennedy displays the dramatic skill with which she surprised her big following in several of her previous Goldwyn productions.

"Madge Kennedy is a success because she's different," remarked Clarence G. Badger, who directed "A Perfect Lady." "And when I say different I mean that there isn't another personality like hers on the screen.



Louis Bennison, Presented by Betzwood in "Oh, Johnny," Released Through Goldwyn

"The greatest factor in her success, to my mind, is the fact that she's never the same in two pictures. Charming as she was in 'The Kingdom of Youth' it is an altogether different Madge Kennedy in 'A Perfect Lady.'"

Mr. Badger added that making a success of a Madge Kennedy picture was the simplest of tasks. "Without realizing it she dominates every situation—and the direction, too," Mr. Badger smiled.

Burton King Directed Many Big Pictures

IT was Burton King who directed "The Master Mystery," the fifteen-episode super-serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., and all who have seen his work are said to be of the opinion that Mr. King had added new laurels to his list of achievements.

Mr. King's first engagement in the amusement world dates to his early youth. At the age of seventeen he became an actor, playing with road attractions. Later he became a stock leading man and then stock director.

When the motion picture field first opened, Mr. King joined the growing film colony as an actor, but after two years gave up work before the camera to take a director's place back of it. Since then he has been directing continually.

As a director he was connected with Universal, Selig and Thomas H. Ince for a year each. In the last named affiliation he directed Charles Ray, Louise Glaum and other Ince stars.

Later he was with the World Film Corporation, directing Jane Grey and John Mason. Thereafter he was the producer of a number of independent features, starring such players as Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Edmund Breese.

Joining Metro Pictures Corporation he directed Mme. Petrova, and after a year's engagement went over to the Mutual, for whom he directed Edna Goodrich. His next and present association was with B. A. Rolfe in filming Houdini's serial.

Universal to Start the New Year Auspiciously

Ruth Clifford and Priscilla Dean are the stars in Universal's feature releases the initial week of 1919. Miss Clifford is seen in "The Cabaret Girl" a Bluebird in five reels, while Miss Dean's vehicle is "The Wildcat of Paris" a Universal Special Attraction in six reels.

"The Cabaret Girl" is based on a story of the failure of a country girl to realize her operatic aspirations and her engagement as a cabaret singer. Douglas Gerrad produced the film from the scenario by Rex Taylor.

"The Wildcat of Paris" presents Miss Dean as a model for an Apache artist, Jean Rovel, who was so fascinated by the girl's loveliness that he was insanely jealous of her. Joseph deGrasse produced the photoplay from the scenario by Harvey Gates.

Other films on the week's schedule are "Klever Kiddies" a two-reel comedy, "Screen Telegram, No. 77; Universal Screen Magazine, No. 99, a two-reel Western drama entitled "The Secret Peril," featuring Helen Gibson, Universal Current Events No. 86, "Straight Crooks" with Lyons-Moran and the seventh episode of "The Lure of the Circus" featuring Eddie Polo.

James Vincent to Produce Patriotic Picture

James Vincent, who is the Secretary of the Advisory Board of the Division of Films, is engaged upon the production of a patriotic feature based upon James Mott Hallowell's book, "The Spirit of Lafayette." This feature has the endorsement of Director Charles S. Hart, of the Creel Committee's Film Division.

Mr. Vincent, although a very young man, has been associated with the film industry for many years. He was one of the original Kalem Company, and may be remembered for his work as director of special features and his connection with many of the large organizations, including Fox and Pathe.

It is said Mr. Vincent's new feature will disclose an entirely new angle in patriotic pictures. The story follows closely Mr. Hallowell's book.

"Spreading Evil" Scores Solidly

James Keane's special production, "The Spreading Evil," which has recently been released in the New York territory under the booking direction of D. Solomon, of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, is said to be scoring in a really sensational manner in some of the bigger of the outlying theatres.

The picture opened at the Empire theatre, 163rd street and Westchester avenue, Saturday, December 7, for a five-day engagement, and on Saturday and Sunday the theatre management found it necessary to call out the police reserves in order to keep the crowds in order. Repeatedly during the day the sale of seats had to be discontinued, despite the fact that the house seats 2,200 people. The Empire is owned and operated by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York branch of the Exhibitors' League.

"The Spreading Evil" has also been chosen as the opening attraction at the remodeled Metropolis theatre, 143rd street and Third avenue, which will throw open its doors again December 16 after having undergone extensive changes, calculated to make it one of the best houses in its locality; the Metropolis has a seating capacity of 2,000.

Recent trade paper announcements by Mr. Keane, controlling the picture, indicate that the production is to be marketed on the states rights plan.

Goldwyn Changes Title on Kennedy Picture

Goldwyn announces a change in the title of Madge Kennedy's next production. Instead of "Primrose," the title selected for it by the author of the story, Cosmo Hamilton, it will be called "Day Dreams."

"Day Dreams," written especially for the star by Mr. Hamilton, has been completed and will be ready for release in a few weeks.

Cannibals to Exhibitor-Mutual

The Martin Johnson "Cannibals of the South Seas" Pictures Transferred to Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation

"THE Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas" pictures will be released in the United States and Canada by the Robertson-Cole Company through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation. Previous to this arrangement it was decided to distribute this subject through the First National chain of exchanges.

However, upon the completion of the deal whereby all subjects controlled by Robertson-Cole Company were to be handled by the Exhibitors' Mutual, arrangements were made with the First National for the transfer of the picture back to Robertson-Cole Company.

Much promotional work has been done by the Robertson-Cole Company to further public interest in this subject. The premiere showing in Canada under their management is said to have brought crowded houses to Massey Hall, where it was offered for an entire week. The newspapers were reported as lavish in their praise of the subject and it was said to be considered one of the most auspicious picture presentations of the season in that city.

In New York City it was offered at the Rivoli theatre by Samuel Rothapfel. Mr. Johnson appeared in person in connection with the picture and told many interesting things about his trip as the film was presented. The New York papers are said to have devoted considerable space to the picture, claiming it the greatest novelty in many years that had been presented in this country.

Interest is being maintained in this picture by a broad line of advertising. A massive signboard has been erected on Broadway at Forty-seventh street which tells Broadway's millions the wonders of "Martin Johnson's Cannibals of the South Seas." The recent showing at the Hotel Astor which was put on in a very unusual manner was attended by a great number of exhibitors who since have been awaiting the news of the releasing channel. At this showing Mr. Beynon conducted the orchestra.

He is also responsible for the special orchestral score which is used in conjunction with this subject. In addition to this many things of a helpful nature have been prepared which include lithographs in sizes from one-sheet to twenty-four-sheets as well as slides, trailers and many unusual exhibitors' aids.

This first installment of the "Martin Johnson Cannibals of the South Seas" will be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation on December 15. The second installment which is also ready will be issued on February 15.

Drews Start Production Work on Fourth Paramount Comedy

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have engaged space at the Biograph Studio and began work on the fourth Paramount picture, three films having already been finished before they signed with Famous Players-Lasky.

The fourth picture will be entitled, "Harold, the Last of the Saxons," and is adapted from a short story written by Florence Ryerson, published in the December issue of the Pictorial Review.

Mrs. Drew is directing the picture as she has done with all the previous pictures, and also takes an active interest in the interior decoration of the sets and costumes worn by everyone in the production.

The play in which Mr. and Mrs. Drew appear on the stage, "Keep Her Smiling," closed in New York Saturday night and is now playing in Newark.

Universal Executives Maintain That "The Heart of Humanity," Starring Dorothy Phillips, is Their Greatest Photoplay

UNIVERSAL executives have just completed a thorough "diagnosis" of what they maintain is their greatest photoplay.

Approximately eleven months in the state of production, Allen Holubar's timely film drama, featuring Dorothy Phillips, was brought to New York and has just been given a permanent title.

Every production, from the one-reeler to the biggest drama produced, undergoes a rigid and thorough examination at the hands of Universal executives before it is sent into the laboratories for printing, but no feature has ever been submitted to such searching scrutiny as "The Heart of Humanity," by which Mr. Holubar's picture is to be known on the screen.

The negative (15,000 feet of it) was brought to New York from Los Angeles in a baggage car, Director Holubar and Frank Lawrence, film editor, using every available minute to edit and cut the negative so that it would be at its best by the time it arrived in the Universal home offices.

Dorothy Phillips, star of the production, accompanied Mr. Holubar on his trip East and also assisted in the editing of the film.

Upon the arrival of the negative and the studio print in New York a committee of executives, exhibitors and exchangemen was appointed to prepare the most fitting title possible for the film.

For nine days this committee discussed many suggested titles. Letters, telegrams and telephone calls went to leading exhibitors asking their opinions on various titles.

"Till We Meet Again," "A Mother's Heart," "The Dawn of Reckoning" were suggested and debated. They were good, but not particularly fitting for a picture with so many unusual angles as the Holubar film is said to possess. A title which would be a composite of love, power, hatred, sympathy and of life and death would alone suffice.

On the tenth day of the debate it is said that three men suggested "The Heart of Humanity" at the same time. This, broad in meaning, after considerable "sounding," was adopted as the permanent title.

"The Heart of Humanity" will be released as a Jewel production and will be backed by a publicity and advertising campaign surpassing any previous effort of Universal's large and capable forces, it is announced, and will be released early in the new year.

Billy West Begins on New Comedies

After a prolonged stay in New York caused by a serious attack of influenza, Billy West has started the production of two-reelers for the bulls Eye Film Corporation, a new company formed recently with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

This comedian is declared to be in great demand.

Samuel Gompers to Appear in McClure Film

Frederick L. Collins, President of McClure Productions, Inc., who will soon release a film based on the life of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, announced today that Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has signed a contract with the McClure Company to appear personally in a motion picture based on his career and on the loyalty and helpfulness of American labor to the cause of democracy through the great world war.

Now that Bolshevism has entrenched itself in Russia, secured a foothold in the Central Empires, and is threatening to engulf other countries of Europe, the loyalty of Samuel Gompers and his associates in the American Federation of Labor is declared to stand out in contrast to those who would disorganize the industries of our country.

Even before American entered the war Mr. Gompers took a firm stand against the spread of German propaganda through the ranks of the working men, and from the time war was declared he and his companions toiled unceasingly to send our army and its vast supplies to the battle front.

Two Cameras Smashed in Arden Production

In the filming of Zena Keefe's first picture as a star for Arden Photoplays, Inc., "The Challenge Accepted," two cameras were said to be smashed. The first time was when one of the actors on horseback rode into the camera.

Before it was repaired, the second camera is said to have fallen off a fifty-foot platform, from which a panorama of Camp Dix was photographed, and literally smashed into splinters.

"The Challenge Accepted" was directed by Edwin L. Hollywood from the original story by Donald Gordon Reid. It will be released December 23 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Fritzi Brunette Supports Walthall in Latest

Heading the cast which supports Henry Walthall in his initial National Film Company production, "And a Still Small Voice," Fritzi Brunette appears in the role of Mary Singleton. Miss Brunette has long been associated with motion pictures and starred in her own name. One of her late successes was "The Jaguar's Claws."

In addition to Miss Brunette the cast includes Joseph Dowling, whose character work is established.

Robertson-Cole Company, who control the world rights of the Walthall production will release this picture on December 29 through the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Eleven Months to Produce "Heart of Humanity"

Allen Holubar's production "The Heart of Humanity" featuring Dorothy Phillips and based on a story of love and sympathetic understanding with the war as a background, is scheduled for release as the initial Jewel production of the new year.

Eleven months in preparation "The Heart of Humanity" is said to be a most stirring tale of war and love.

Miss Phillips as Nanette is said to do her best screen work. William Stowell is seen as Lieutenant John Patricia and Erich von Stroheim, Robert Anderson (D. W. Griffith's "M'sieu Cuckoo" in "Hearts of the World") and Gloria Joy are prominent in the supporting cast.

done, and this procedure will certainly become more general.

Good stories, those suited to photoplay adaptation, are a necessity, this is now recognized; they are the life of the industry of motion picture making, and it is devoutly to be hoped that the understanding between the authors and the producers will be more thorough. The producers need the stories badly and their sales bring comparatively new and fair financial benefits to the authors, a most legitimate benefit which should not be underrated even by the most temperamental writer.

There exists a feeling of hostility among writers towards producers, much of it warranted. There is a feeling of resentment among certain of the producers towards authors. The barrier is not unbreakable and should not exist; it was erected by a want of mutual understanding, and now that reasonable prices are being paid for stories, this barrier will gradually be removed; the producers look towards the talented writer, and the authors are getting a better insight into the necessities and technique of the photoplay.

Mary Pickford Deal Commended

According to Information Gathered by the First National the Exhibitors Welcome Pickfords for the Open Market

EXHIBITOR opinions of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit—Mary Pickford distributing contract, generalized in reports received from twenty-six First National branch managers, are said to indicate that an amazing number of theatre owners and managers have taken sufficient interest in the agreement to express themselves in person or in writing.

The universal exhibitor attitude toward Miss Pickford's action in putting her future productions on an open market booking basis is said to predict that she has taken the initiative in starting the next great epoch in the industry.

What is declared to be a surprising feature of the reports from the exchange managers is that many theatre owners, particularly those playing productions during the first thirty days, are said to be voluntarily offering to pay more money for Mary Pickford releases than they ever have before.

They are quoted as declaring that it is possible for them to do this and save money by the open market booking method.

Boyd C. Cunningham, manager of Tom Moore's First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange in Washington, D. C., declare that exhibitors in his territory have expressed themselves to him in letters, and during visits to his office, to the effect that in their opinion Pickford productions on the open market offers the greatest opportunity to every branch of the industry that it has ever had during its entire history.

"In August, 1916," said Mr. Cunningham, "when Miss Pickford first decided to go it alone, the exchange man handling her productions had to make allowances for the fact that leading theatres were tied up with program film. In August, 1917, every important distributor followed the trail that Miss Pickford had blazed, and the market was sold on the basis of a so-called star series arrangement.

"But, unfortunately, it is remembered by a score of exhibitors in this territory, they were not so much persuaded to pay a legitimate price for the Pickford productions as they were 'persuaded' to buy at least six or eight other sets of star releases, amounting to from fifty up to sixty pictures during the year and pay the same for them as they were paying for Pickford pictures.

"Just yesterday there was an exhibitor in my office who, in 1916, paid $1,000 a week for the Pickford productions, but he had to shelve two other releases each week he ran Pickford's, and at a cost of $550. In 1917, this same exhibitor, through the so-called salesmanship argument, was sold fifty-two pictures including the Pickfords for $52,000.

"He, like other exhibitors with whom I have talked recently and who have written me letters I have on file here, has learned his A B C's in open booking. He has declared himself for much longer runs on future Pickford releases than he was ever able to give her past productions, not because of lack of quality, but because of the cost of shelving program booked releases."

Exhibitors booking shows from the Louisville First National exchange are particularly interested in the type of stories Miss Pickford will produce, according to Lee Goldberg, manager of the office there.

Red Cross Freely Booked

Heavier booking of the American Red Cross films is reported each week by General Film Company exchanges, through which the Bureau of Pictures secures its distribution. A sample set of bookings obtained in two days is that from the Wilkes-Barre exchange, J. R. Lynch, manager.

Among those theatres recorded are Poli's, Wilkes-Barre; Lyric, Shenandoah; Poli's, Scranton; Feeley's, Hazleton; Lyric, Plymouth; Elks, Mahanoy City, and American, Pottsville. Each of these theatres engaged a series of nine subjects, and most of them are to be used at the rate of two changes each week.

The Wilkes-Barre office made a great impression with the initial Red Cross release, "Historic Fourth of July in Paris."

Fairbanks Fits His Role in "Arizona"

Headed by Douglas Fairbanks, in the role of Lieut. Denton, U. S. A., a superlative cast is announced for "Arizona," which was released under the Artcraft trade mark December 8.

Mr. Fairbanks is said to be supremely suited to the role of the hero of Augustus Thomas' famous play, which is still popular whenever it is revived or seen in stock.

In the role of the humorous, open-handed and good-hearted rancher, Canby, Theodore Roberts will be seen.

Mary Pickford Deal Is Commended

"My accounts," declared Mr. Goldberg, "are voicing their approval of Miss Pickford's action in buying the screen rights to such stories as 'Daddy Long Legs' and 'Pollyanna.' They declare that their patrons want good stories as much as they want to see the stars. They seem to feel confident that she will strive harder than ever to prove her real value as an artist and a single drawing card."

Intensifies Poster Value

To give a longer range to the pulling value of lithographs used by exhibitors in their lobby displays and local billboard campaigns, the studio technique of the camera closeup has been applied by the advertising department of First National Exhibitors' Circuit to the posters for "Virtuous Wives," first of the Anita Stewart productions to be distributed by that organization.

The result, considered from an exhibitor viewpoint, is said to give long distance vision with just enough of the scene to which the closeup relates to arouse curiosity and interest. It intensifies the value of the posters, particularly for use in locations where passersby are inclined to hurry, or where, for some reason, they do not come within easy sight of the displays.

By using the principle of a closeup, with the action from which it is taken as a background, it results in a definite focusing point for the eye, with just enough of the scene visible from a long distance to create interest.

Advertise Houdini Serial Direct to Public

A preliminary phase of an extensive direct-to-the-public exploitation campaign which will be conducted by Octagon Films, Inc., for B. A. Rolfe's super-serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, the handcuff king, was begun last week when thousands of twenty-four-sheet stands appeared on the billboards throughout the United States and Canada heralding the coming of the attraction.

The stand pictures Houdini under water extricating himself from the restraint of handcuffs and heavy ball and chain while a white light gleams from the eyes of the automaton, whose machinations have caused the hero's predicament. Done in five colors, the stand is of exceptional artistic design and of interest compelling attractiveness.

Keith-Proctor Theatres Book Houdini Serial

What is declared to be one of the biggest contracts ever made for the exhibition of a serial picture was concluded this week between J. J. Murdock, representing the United Booking Offices, and Harry Houdini and Carey Wilson, on behalf of the Effano Film Exchange, whereby "The Master Mystery," the fifteen episode serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, will be shown in sixteen Keith and Proctor houses in New York State.

The New York City and State rights to "The Master Mystery," have been acquired by the Effano Film Exchange, from Octagon Films, Inc. Temporary offices have been opened by Effano at 1600 Broadway, under the management of Carey Wilson.

Mr. Wilson opened the first Paramount exchange in America. It was located in New York and owned by Wm. L. Sherry. After two years with Mr. Sherry, Mr. Wilson went with William Fox for whom he installed the contract sales system in all the Fox exchanges in the United States.

The United Booking Offices does not pursue a policy of booking serials in its houses, but made an exception in the case of "The Master Mystery," after seeing the early episodes of the serial on the screen.

December 30th has been set as the date for the first showing of "The Master Mystery" in the Keith and Proctor houses.

May Allison First Metro Star Working in West

Jack Blystone Joins Henry Lehrman

Jack Blystone, who for a number of years has been associated with L-KO comedies, has resigned his position as general supervisor of productions last week to become a member of Henry Lehrman's staff of directors at the Sunshine Comedies Studios.

He has already started work on his first Sunshine Comedy, in which Billie Ritchie, Hugh Mock and Betty Carpenter will be seen in the principal roles.

Keenan Has Auspicious Start on West Coast

FRANK KEENAN PRODUCTIONS, INC., is a new firm added to the list of producing organizations in Los Angeles, upon the arrival of Frank Keenan from New York where he completed arrangements for a release of subjects made by him and his company through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Prior to his departure for the West, Mr. Keenan made arrangements for his first five stories which will be of a dramatic nature. Three of these are original stories, written especially for Mr. Keenan and particularly adapted to his characterization work.

Two are adaptations from well known stories. By wire Mr. Keenan made arrangements for his producing staff which will incude Jack Cunningham, scenario and continuity writer; Ernest Warde, director, and Charles Kaufman, cameraman.

Mr. Keenan before leaving the eastern Broadway engaged Joseph MacManus, who has been leading man in a number of New York successes, for the past two years, to come to the coast and play leading man parts in the Keenan productions.

MacManus is a new man for the screen, and Mr. Keenan is positive he will prove a finished actor before the camera, as he has done upon the stage.

"No, I will not appear in comedy again," Mr. Keenan said when questioned concerning his future productions. "The Pathe officers advised me that my dramatic characterizations were in demand in the foreign market, and so I am going to produce only dramatic subjects with touches of comedy sufficient to soften the stories.

"While en route to the Coast I was asked to speak at several theatres in Chicago, and there I outlined my future policy. I do not expect to make the greatest pictures the screen has ever had, but I am going to try and produce good pictures that every theatre will want to book."

"The Better 'Ole" from an Expression

The title of "The Better 'Ole," the seven-reel production just secured by World Pictures, was derived from a spoken phrase where one of the characters replying to another says: "If you do not like this (h)ole, find a better one."

"The Better 'Ole" stage production, now playing at the Cort theatre, New York City, is said to have done over $14,000 gross business for the week ending December 2. Although the play has been seen in this country less than two months, so great is its success that three companies are now being formed to tour the country. It was written by Bruce Bairnsfather, the English soldier cartoonist, whose efforts have been exploited in a great number of daily American newspapers and the more prominent of the illustrated weeklies.

World Pictures will release the picture version of "The Better 'Ole" as a special. It was made with the cast that was identified with it during its London run. Such scenes as were correlated to the fighting zone were made in Flanders.

World Pictures to Issue Animated Weekly

WORLD PICTURES has completed all arrangements to enter the field of the animated weeklies. It has perfected an organization to secure the momentous news of the world and to record it on the screen in a most interesting manner.

Neither distance nor expense will be a deterrent factor in securing for the millions of patrons of the moving picture theatres the very best service that money and intelligent discrimination of news values can secure, according to report.

"Not being bound nor influenced by time-worn precedents nor shackled by editorial policies nor dictated by interests who cannot be gainsaid, 'World News' will bring into the field, youthful enthusiasm tempered by the experience of minds who have long understood the public taste through having had splendid experience in conducting the news columns of the very best newspapers of this country," declared a World official.

"No propaganda will be permitted to creep in the screen columns, nor will any interest be permitted to use 'World News' as the weapon to attack those who differ with them.

"News as it is understood by those who are connected with this picture weekly is matter that the greatest number of people are interested in."

June Elvidge Stars for World in "The Appearance of Evil"

The first issue will be published about January 15. Full and complete details will soon be issued to the exhibitors.

Advance Bookings on Serial Pleases Pathe

Pearl White's forthcoming serial, "The Lightning Raider," seems destined to be the most successful of this star's many serials, and likewise to break any record ever established by a Pathe serial, judging from the advance bookings, which are said to pouring into the home office.

Miss White is without a doubt the most popular serial star on the screens today, according to the Pathe branch managers and salesmen, and they declare that they find a tremendous market ready for them when they start their campaign on one of her serials.

Starting with her first Pathe serial, "The Perils of Pauline," and then running down the list of her others, "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Fatal Ring," "The Iron Claw," "Pearl of the Army," and "The House of Hate," each one is said to have established a new high water mark for business, and in consequence the Pathe men say they are confronted with a more difficult task on each new serial—to break the record of the previous one.

In the case of "The Lightning Raider," it is evident already that a new record will be established, according to these officials. The New York branch reports already enough advance bookings to insure its setting up a new record and the other Pathe branches are showing signs of accomplishing the same result.

In the middle west, where the influenza epidemic still rages unabated, the salesmen are of course working against a heavy handicap, but even this and the continued closing of many theatres will not prevent them from breaking records, they claim.

Manager Raynor of the New York Office, in announcing the booking of the Fox Circuit, reveals the fact that "The Lightning Raider' will be shown, through this booking, in a number of New York picture theatres that have never before exhibited a serial, notably the Academy of Music.

Constance Talmadge Team Pull Together

With the production and distribution of the four Constance Talmadge pictures past and present, there has leaped into being a combination of star, leading man and director that from all indications gives promise of becoming one of the foremost teams of screen workers.

Constance Talmadge, who is presented in all of her Select Pictures by Lewis J. Selznick, is the star; Harrison Ford is the leading man and Walter Edwards is the director.

The life of this combination dates back to one of Constance Talmadge's recent Select Pictures, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," in which Harrison Ford first made his appearance as a Constance Talmadge leading man, and making also the advent of Walter Edwards as Miss Talmadge's director.

The success of this combination in "A Pair of Silk Stockings," "Sauce for the Goose," and "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," where all three were found together, and in Miss Talmadge's current attraction, "A Lady's Name," is taken to indicate that the charm is still working.

American Humor Prevails in Capitol Comedies

One of the principal reasons given by Goldwyn for the success of "Smiling Bill" Parsons and his Capitol comedies is the essentially American quality of their humor.

It is said of "Proposing Bill," which will shortly be seen, that it could not have been written or produced anywhere but in America.

The characters are all unmistakably American, the fun is of a kind that only the American spirit could evolve—it is declared to be broad, genial and of the swiftness that has come to be generally recognized as one of the dominant qualities in American plays as in industrial affairs.

Breamer to Take Rest

Sylvia Breamer, the Blackton star, who is featured with Herbert Rawlinson in "The Common Cause," the Blackton-Vitagraph special, has completed her work in a leading role of "My Lady's Garter" under Maurice Tourneur direction. She was loaned to Mr. Tourneur by Commodore Blackton for this picture.

Her work in the two specials has been so strenuous that Miss Breamer has decided to take a brief vacation and will not accept the role offered her in another production. She plans to rest until called for the next picture which Commodore Blackton will produce.

Universal Nails the New Bluebird Rumor

Exchange managers of the Universal were amazed last week at news which appeared in newspapers of the Central West and South to the effect that the Bluebird Productions had been discontinued. Inquiry instituted by the main office failed to reveal the origin of the report.

It was officially announced that there was absolutely no foundation for the rumor. The company does not contemplate any revision of the present schedule at this time, and it has mentioned important Bluebird productions on the program for some time to come.

It was believed that the appearance of one or two former Bluebird stars in current Special Attraction pictures may have led to the mistaken belief that the Bluebirds were being eliminated.

Universal wishes to make it very plain that the assumption is altogether wrong and that Bluebird pictures will continue.

Blanche Sweet Visits East

After completing the Garson-Neilan production of "The Unpardonable Sin," in which she starred, Blanche Sweet left Los Angeles to visit New York City on a business trip, after which she will again return to the West Coast to start work on her next big picture under the management of Harry Garson, the name of which Miss Sweet would not divulge.

Neither would she give any inkling as to the nature of the picture, but when it came to "The Unpardonable Sin," which Miss Sweet has just completed, her enthusiasm knew no bounds, and she declares it to be the biggest picture of the year.

Miss Sweet recounted all her troubles of making "The Unpardonable Sin" during the "flu" epidemic. Marshall Neilan, the director, persevered, however, and the result has been beyond all expectations. The picture will be in nine reels instead of eight as previously announced.

The picture goes into Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, for a run.

Two Blacktons to Independent Sales Corp.

J. Stuart Blackton announces that he has completed arrangements whereby "The New Democracy," his new special photoplay starring Mitchell Lewis, which had a pre-release run as the feature of the Rivoli theatre program during the week of November 3, and "The Littlest Scout," a five-part Paula Blackton Country Life story starring little Charles Stuart Blackton, will be exploited by the Independent Sales Corporation and physically distributed through the exchanges of the Film Clearing House, Inc., with which the first named organization is affiliated.

These two Blackton features, both of which are ready for immediate release, are said to be the first productions placed with the Film Clearing House for distribution. Under this arrangement Commodore Blackton will not maintain his own sales force for the booking of "The New Democracy" and "The Littlest Scout," but will have these two productions handled by the Independent Sales Corporation through the Film Clearing House separately and distinctly from other pictures placed in their charge.

The Film Clearing House idea of distribution appealed to Commodore Blackton from its inception, while the plan of having special salesmen for each producer's product, made possible by the working proposition of the Independent Sales Corporation, of which William M. Seabury, organizer of the Film Clearing House, is vice-president, led him to make a thorough investigation of the new distributing companies, their personnel and business systems.

As a result he decided that his interests could best be served by placing "The New Democracy" with the Independent Sales Corporation for Film Clearing House distribution than by continuing the previously announced plan for its exploitation through another organization.

The fact that Commodore Blackton has placed these two special productions on the market in this manner does not mean that he has severed any of his other affiliations in the industry. The plan of the Film Clearing House, it is understood, is such that any producer can use it for one or more of his pictures without obligating himself to market all of his product in the same way.

Music Scores for Robertson-Cole Pictures

THE inauguration of complete music scores with the Robertson-Cole Company releases is an innovation in the service that will be rendered with their productions which are handled through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

This service starts with the first release, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," issued December 15.

Mr. George W. Beynon, who has devoted many years to the preparation of musical scores for motion pictures and is an accomplished musician, is the director of the Musical Department of the Robertson-Cole Company, and bears the distinction of being the first to adapt orchestral scores to motion pictures, it is said.

Considerable comment was made on the musical offerings at the premiere presentation of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" by the press as well as by the audiences which viewed this production both in New York and Toronto.

The great value that is placed in the musical accompaniment of pictures is evidenced by the very best houses throughout the country who employ large orchestras that would do credit in size and ability to grand opera. This part of the program is being given as much attention as is the selection of proper pictures.

The Billie Rhodes subject, "The Girl of My Dreams," will also be accompanied by a complete musical score arranged by Mr. Beynon.

"By having her productions distributed on the open market plan, whereby they are available to every exhibitor in the country, burden free, I receive a sum for each negative which is sufficient to give me ample latitude for obtaining the greatest possible quality, and which tells me in advance just how much I can afford to spend on production and still give me a profit.

"There is no guesswork, no waiting for booking receipts to come in to give me my percentage income, no doubt about the total amount each production will return to me, no question as to whether I can afford to buy a story which will cost $100,000 or $125,000 to produce. I know, under the contract with First National, just how far I can go.

"And when my negative is completed I do not need to wait a year, eighteen months or two years to get back my costs with a possible profit. I receive my costs, plus a profit, when the picture is finished. The result is that I have the money immediately available to begin work on another picture.

A Free Agent

"I do not need to go to a bank or a group of individuals and paint rosy pictures of probable profits to finance myself for the succeeding production. I am a free agent, working under conditions which make it mightily to my interest to give Miss Talmadge the utmost in story, settings direction, everything that contributes in any measure to big box-office success.

"It is the most liberal form of cooperation, and a tremendous encouragement to Miss Talmadge as the star, and to me as the producer, to give the very best that is in us. Nor is the arrangement by any means one-sided. It is just as big in its advantages to the exhibitor as it is to the star and producer. First National franchise holders are giving us a wide, unobstructed thoroughfare to greater quality.

"They know, as exhibitors, that improvement is needed in productions, and that they can make bigger profits themselves by showing better pictures. They realize also that to permit the continuance of the present restrictions on producers and stars means that they will suffer in patronage from the betterment which no manufacturer can achieve on terms and at prices that leave him in doubt for months about whether he will lose or profit from his work.

"Some exhibitors who do not reason may say: 'It's a fine thing for Miss Talmadge,'" continued Mr. Schenck. "'She can make cheap pictures and still be sure of a big profit. We won't get her releases any cheaper if they are not up to a standard.' But they should remember that a big profit on each of two pictures—which is the maximum that any producer could use to hoodwink a distributor—does not amount to one-tenth as much as a reasonable profit on twelve or fifteen productions of a quality that makes them big winners at the box-office."

tention to the fact that the exhibitors get their profits immediately and so should dealy kindly with the producers who were trying to build a business for the years to come.

Mr. Goldfish laid particular emphasis on the fact that producers should make clean pictures that do not offend—pictures to which the whole family can go in safety and assurance of clean entertainment.

Among those who agreed with Mr. Goldfish, as was testified to by their hearty applause at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks, were: Aaron Jones, Fred and Frank Schafer, Adolph Linick, Joe Hopp, Sam Katz, Abe and Barney Balaban, Joe Finn and Mark Heyman, Morris Choynskey, Harry Lubliner and Jos. Trinz, Louis Frank, Mr. Shoenstadt and his son, Sam Gold, Louis Zahler, B. C. Seaver, Paul Sittner, Robert Levy, M. M. Rubens of Joliet, J. J. Rubens of Aurora, Mr. McElroy and Mr. Fitzpatrick and Harry Miller.

Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel left Friday morning for Milwaukee, where a banquet was tendered them at the Wisconsin Hotel, the opening address being made by the mayor of that city. Mr. Rothapfel's entree into the business was made in Milwaukee.

They left immediately for Minneapolis, the second city that can claim the distinction of having had Mr. Rothapfel in a managerial capacity, which city assured both gentlemen of a rousing welcome.

Minneapolis Sees Them

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York, accompanied by Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, arrived in Minneapolis December 8th on their way to California.

Upon their arrival, Mr. Rothapfel and Mr. Goldfish were met by Manager John M. Hick, Jr., of the Minneapolis Goldwyn exchange, and after a short business visit the party proceeded to the Gold Room, Hotel Radisson, where they were guests of honor at a banquet attended by over thirty exchange men, exhibitors and newspaper men.

Among those present at the banquet were Manager Julius K. Johnson of the New Garrick, formerly an organist for Mr. Rothapfel at the Lyric, Minneapolis, and Regent, New York; Manager Charles G. Branham of the Minneapolis Strand; I. H. Ruben of the Ruben & Finkelstein circuit; Manager Theodore L. Hays of the New Garrick, St. Paul; Manager William B. Koch, of the New Aster, Minneapolis; Manager Billy Watson of the New Garden, Minneapolis; Manager Bert Goldman of the New Princess and New Majestic theatres, St. Paul; Manager Hugh Andress of the Lagoon, Minneapolis; Manager Oliver A. Rowe of the Blue Mouse, St. Paul; George D. Strong, the oldest operator in the Northwest, and W. A. Deeth, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest.

Mr. Goldfish expressed himself as very gratified at the splendid showing Goldwyn productions are making in the territory.

Tally to Build Another Theatre

Owner of First National Exhibitors' Circuit Franchise Plans to Build New Theatre at Los Angeles

T. L. TALLY, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Southern California and Arizona, is to build a theatre designed exclusively for long runs on super productions, according to a recent announcement from Los Angeles.

His decision is based on his opinion that with the new era of specialization in productions by such stars as Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart and others there will come a much higher quality in releases. This he believes will be the foundation on which exhibitors can make their plans for increasing the length of their runs and reducing the frequency of their program changes.

Mr. Tally has been contemplating the erection of a new theatre in Los Angeles, but his plans for its construction were delayed by war conditions and the consequent lack of materials. Now that the War Industries Board has removed the ban on the commercial use of structural materials it is expected that he will go ahead with his intentions to give Los Angeles an entirely new type of motion picture theatre.

"Events of the last few months," declared Mr. Tally, "are conclusive proof that longer runs are the thing of the future for exhibitors. We know to a certainty now that indefinite engagements of genuinely good pictures are profitable to exhibitors and that it is throwing money away to give only two or three days or a week to productions that have the merit necessary to longer bookings.

"Take the results of Charlie Chaplin's 'Shoulder Arms.' Exhibitors are playing not one, but three, four and five repeat dates on it, each repeat averaging from two to three days. The public does not get a chance to patronize a worth while film if it is shown for one or two days. Every theatre will receive a certain amount of nominal patronage each day. But not every prospective patron—not one-fifth of the prospective patrons could or would patronize a theatre within one or two days to see a production that is being talked about.

"There are many reasons for this. Some people are kept at home by illness, others are out of town for a few days, others are entertaining guests, others are too busy the first two or three days that a good production is shown. And a far greater number, who are not regular fans, do not hear comments on an especially worth while release until several days after it has opened.

"To play longer runs requires a certain type of physical equipment in a theatre which, while not absolutely essential to the success of indefinite engagements, adds enough to the atmosphere and general effectiveness of the production to make the investment profitable. Of course, almost any theatre with the standard equipment can serve as the background for runs of a week, or even longer.

"But where it is possible to do it and particularly in the instances of new theatres being built, I believe that it is a wise precaution for the exhibitor to consider carefully the advantages of special interior arrangements which will give him opportunities for settings, lighting effects, greater latitude in musical accompaniments and which will contribute to the quality atmosphere imparted by the super-productions which the public will patronize, day after day, for runs ranging from two weeks to a month or longer."

Nazimova Starts Work in Hollywood Studios

Mme. Alla Nazimova arrived in Los Angeles December 3, and on December 9 she started work at her new studios in Hollywood on her production, "The Red Lantern," under the direction of Albert Capellani.

June Mathis, in collaboration with Director Capellani, completed the screen adaptation for Mme. Nazimova's first picture on the West Coast. It is from the novel by Edith Wherry, published by the Bodley Head, and affords Nazimova a role of tempestuous emotional display.

Two days after the arrival of Maxwell Karger, director general, the completed script was in his hands. Miss Mathis and M. Capellani did some of their work on the scenario of "The Red Lantern" while en route from New York to Mme. Nazimova's new studios.

Seven Stars Are Promised for World Feature

The most ambitious and pretentious production ever made by World Pictures is declared to be "A Scrap of Paper," which will inaugurate the resumption of studio activity of this company.

The cast embraces all the stars connected with World Pictures and includes Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Madge Evans, George Drumier and Johnny Hines. It will be directed by Dell Henderson.

The scenario was written by Wallace C. Clifton from an original story secured by the World Pictures scenario department from a famous French author.

This aggregation of talent has been arranged for the production because the world believes that the exceptional strength of the story told in "A Scrap of Paper" demands a wholly stellar presentation.

Margarita Fisher Gives Medal for Hero

A gold medal, offered by Margarita Fisher, American Film Company star, featuring in "Flying A" productions, to the first Rockwell Field aviator to bring down a German plane, was won by Lieut. Frank Luke, of Phoenix, Ariz.

Because of Lieutenant Luke's death shortly before the armistice was signed, the medal will be given to his father.

Government Releases a Series

Each of the Two-Reelers to Take Up Phase of the War—First Scheduled for December 23

TO meet the demand of the people to know more about the war activities of the nation the Government has prepared and will begin the release of a series of two-reel pictures, announced as the U. S. A. Series, each of which takes up a phase of the war and pictorializes it with detail. The new pictures are presented by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

It has been clearly indicated that the American people want to know the more intimate details of the war and of the participation of their country in that war. In the new two-reelers they will be shown just how the wounded were taken care of, how an airplane industry was built up, the real part played by machine guns and hand grenades, how men were made fit to fight, how, despite the utilization of auto trucks and motor lorries, the horse and even the army mule held its own and did its bit, and how the guns, which did so much to crush Prussianism, were made.

The first of the pictures, scheduled for release December 23, is entitled "If Your Soldier's Hit." It is a revelation of the care given the soldier boys overseas. It gets close to the heart and is true—every bit of it. There will be a release every two weeks, the complete series being made up of six pictures.

Number two of the series, "Wings of Victory," is the full story of the air program of the United States and of America's achievements in building planes and training aviators for the gigantic effort of defeating the Huns; the story of motor, plane and coming ace, and how the three were aligned that America might fill the skies of France with swift fighters.

The next release is called "Making a Nation Fit" and is a picture of striking interest, showing how America met the difficult problem of rendering millions of men of sedentary occupations into physical fitness for the labor of war. It shows the new entrants of the Army and Navy being put in the top of physical perfection for their jobs.

The fourth release is entitled "Horses of War" and shows how the horse still holds his place of honor on the field of battle. The vivid, sweeping, irresistible story of the horses of the cavalry and artillery which, in spite of motor trucks, tractors and tanks, must still be relied upon to help win the day.

"The Bath of Bullets" is the fifth release. The last release of the series, "The Storm of Steel," is the story of the Ordnance Department.

The World Film Corporation, which has handled the distribution of both "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," will also handle the "U. S. A. Series."

New Distributing Policy for News Reels

A NEW policy of distributing news reels will be inaugurated by Universal the week beginning December 22.

The distributing contract with Pathe expiring December 23, the Hearst International News Service, having acquired the producing and distributing rights of the Universal Current Events and Animated Weekly and of Mutual's Screen Telegram, will issue the first of its tri-weekly news reels Tuesday, December 24.

Hearst News No. 1 will be released through Universal exchanges on this date and this will be followed on Thursday, December 26, by Screen Telegram No. 76 and on the following Sunday, December 29, the Universal Current Events No. 85 will be marketed.

The reason the Hearst interests selected the Universal exchanges to do the distributing of their news reels is declared to be due to the success attained by these branches when releasing only Universal weeklies.

In addition to the release of Universal Current Events, Hearst News and the Screen Telegram, by Hearst through Universal exchanges, the Universal Screen magazine will be released each Saturday, independently by Universal and will be developed along newspaper feature lines.

Pathe Has Gloria Joy in Short Comedy-Dramas

In a series of three two-reel comedy dramas to be released by Pathe under the general title of "The Fortunes of Corinne," Baby Gloria Joy carries the role of the heroine upon her frail but capable shoulders.

This child actress is well-named, it seems, and is said to have an exceptionally keen sense of comedy and of pathos. The series will be released in the following order:

December 22, "Fortunes of Corinne"; January 5, "I Want To Be a Lady"; January 19, "Corinne, Come Here."

Selig Appoints Priest Exclusive Agent

Colonel William N. Selig has appointed Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., exclusive sales agent for all of his feature productions in the United States and Canada.

Features which have come into the immediate possession of The Film Market, and which will be disposed of on the independent market are, "The City of Purple Dreams," "Who Shall Take My Life," "Beware of Strangers," "The Garden of Allah" and the reissue rights to "The Spoilers."

Before leaving New York for California, where he goes to supervise a very important production, Colonel Selig made a statement in which he said that Mr. Priest has all sale rights, and that any person interested in any of his productions should see Mr. Priest in reference to them.

"Little Orphant Annie" Territory Selling

In the six-reel photodramatic production of the late James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "Little Orphant Annie," which is being state righted by The Pioneer Film Corp., Coleen Moore and Thomas Santschi are the featured players, while the supporting cast includes little Billy Jacobs and little Ben Alexander, who has appeared in many of D. W. Griffith's productions.

Already great interest is being shown, it is said, by exhibitors who are inquiring as to when and how they can book the picture. Nathan Hirsh, president of The Pioneer Film Corporation, says that he has never had a feature which seems to have caught on so quickly. Every mail, Mr. Hirsh says, brings letters from theatre owners from all parts of the country who are anxious to book the film.

Pauline Frederick Busy on First Goldwyn

Pauline Frederick is rapidly progressing at the Biograph studio in the Bronx under the direction of Hobart Henley on her first Goldwyn picture. The cast includes Ben Hendricks, one of the forceful character actors of the stage; Fred Lennox, who has played the foremost roles in the support of many popular stars; Jere Austin and Tammany Young.

Prominent on the distaff side is Florence Ashbrooke, who has played with the Kendals, the Bancrofts, Sir Henry Irving and others.

Small Baby Is Essential to One Producer

Jesse D. Hampton discovered, when all was in readiness to produce the first of the William Desmond pictures, "Life's a Funny Proposition," especially written for Desmond by William Parker, that the story called for a baby.

The tragic blow fell late on a Saturday afternoon. Everything had been prepared to start "shooting" Monday morning. In walked the technical man—usually always the bearer of good tidings. But now he announced: "The Board of Health forbids the use of any baby in a motion picture during the influenza epidemic!"

With an expensive cast of players already on the payroll and engaged for the duration of the picture, the technical man's words fell like the proverbial "bolt from the blue."

How the necessary permit was finally obtained is a moving narrative of fast auto rides, visits to officials' homes and, in the end a long conference between Mr. Hampton and Dr. L. M. Powers, the Los Angeles city health commissioner who for the purposes of controlling the epidemic possessed autocratic authority.

Birthdays Celebrated in "The Girl Question"

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph star, had a to take proper cognizance of the event. But Miss Griffith and her company were busy day and night completing the Blue Ribbon Feature, "The Girl Question," and there was time scarcely for congratulations.

Then it was that Kenneth Webb, director, had a big idea and put it over. There is a big cabaret scene in "The Girl Question" in which Miss Griffith is of course the leading feature, and all her company are in it and there are lots of toasts and good fellowship and such things.

And Director Webb figured that it would be in the interest of screen realism to turn that cabaret scene into a surprise birthday party for Miss Griffith. Which is just what was done.

Cecil De Mille Finishes Another Artcraft

Cecil B. DeMille has reached the final stages of his new Artcraft picture, "Don't Change Your Husband," at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. He is said to be using a trio of the most elaborate sets which the Lasky studio folk have seen in many a day.

One represents an idea of the beauty of the world, another the riches of the world and the third the love of the world, all being visions conjured up in the mind of a young wife by a romantic description on the part of a whilom lover.

Mr. DeMille is said to give ample evidence of his penchant for beautiful women in the matter of choosing his casts, and for one of the leading roles in "Don't Change Your Husband" he selected Gloria Swanson.

Exhibitors Praise "Eye for Eye"

S. L. Rothapfel, E. C. Bostick and Other Nationally Known Exhibitors, Praise Nazimova's Latest Production

Nazimova, Talented Star in Mètro Pictures

PRONOUNCING it one of the greatest works Mme. Nazimova has ever done on the stage or screen, prominent exhibitors throughout the country are said to be flooding the offices of Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger with letters and telegrams congratulating them upon their latest Nazimova production, "Eye for Eye."

S. L. Rothapfel, one of the first to see the picture and to declare that the international star's "personal performance has not been surpassed upon the screen" and that the picture itself was "a revelation," expects to show it at the Rivoli theatre in New York the week of December 22.

E. C. Bostick, managing director of the big Merrill theatre in Milwaukee, who has already shown "Eye for Eye," is said to be even more enthusiastic about the picture and Nazimova's drawing power than Mr. Rothapfel.

The Merrill, Mr. Bostick says, has broken all Milwaukee attendance records with "Eye for Eye." Crowds, he says, even during the supper hour, were lined up to the curb awaiting an opportunity to get into the Merrill. Mr. Bostick's letter speaks for itself.

Dec. 30, 1918.

Mr. J. S. Grauman,
METRO PICTURES CORP.,
403 Toy Bldg.,
City.
My Dear Mr. Grauman:—

I believe that it is fitting that both you and Metro should have some statement from me as to the remarkable business I am doing on "Eye for Eye." I will confess that when you sold me this series of pictures at more than twice the highest rental I have ever paid for a picture, I was somewhat doubtful as to whether or not I could make any money to speak of on the Nazimova productions. However, I felt it would be a big treat for my patrons, so you can readily see the question of profit on this picture was secondary.

The public, however, has proved that I was wrong. We opened with "Eye for Eye" on Sunday, the 24th of November, and there has not been one hour during the past week, including supper hour, that we have not held them out to the curb, and we have done what, I am confident, is the biggest business ever done in Milwaukee. Certainly the biggest in my experience.

I am absolutely sincere when I state to you that as a drawing card I consider Nazimova unequalled, and I am only too glad of this opportunity to state to you that I am more than pleased to have booked the entire series at $2,000 per picture. You may send this letter to your different offices if you wish, since I feel that it is a privilege for any first-run exhibitor to be able to play this subject, and I shall be greatly surprised if the phenomenal business done by us is not repeated by everyone who plays it.

Yours very truly,
MERRILL THEATRE CO.,
E. C. Bostick,
Manager.

Mr. Rothapfel's letter is equally superlative in its enthusiasm:

Mr. Richard A. Rowland,
Metro Pictures Corp.,
New York City.
My Dear Mr. Rowland:

I have just finished seeing Nazimova in "Eye for Eye" and I want to compliment you upon having one of the best pictures I have seen in a long time. It will lend itself to a wonderful presentation and I am sure will be a great box office attraction also.

Mme. Nazimova is absolutely a revelation and her personal performance has not been surpassed upon the screen. I am looking forward to its presentation at the Rivoli on the week of December 22 with a great deal of pleasure.

Very truly yours,
S. L. ROTHAPFEL,
Managing Director.

Among other large first run houses which are already playing the picture or plan to give it special runs within the next few weeks are the Strand, Youngstown; Alhambra, Toledo; Madison, Detroit; Gold, Chicago; Strand, Cincinnati; Empire, San Antonio; Rex, Duluth; Regent, Paterson, N. J.; Goodwin, Newark, N. J., and others.

The California, in Los Angeles, which recently ran "Pals First," starring the late Harold Lockwood, to capacity houses, according to report, has also booked "Eye for Eye" and expects to break all attendance records with the picture.

"From an artistic as well as a box-office standpoint 'Eye for Eye,' and Nazimova's other de luxe pictures, 'Revelation' and 'Toys of Fate,' have satisfied the exhibitor and the public as no other productions have done in the history of the industry," said Richard A. Rowland, "and her coming plays will even surpass these.

"They will be made in California under the direction of Albert Capellani and the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Nazimova Productions, and will embody in story and production qualities the finest work on the screen has yet known."

Poland Writes Scenarios for American Film

Joseph Franklin Poland, New York fiction writer, has recently joined the scenario staff of the American Film Company, at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mr. Poland will write for Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The story of "Impossible Susan," a feature starring Miss Fisher, was from his pen. The original story of a new Minter vehicle not yet released likewise was written by him.

Joe Maxwell, producer of "The Married Virgin," surrounded by his aides. Vera Sisson, Rodolfo di Valentina and Kathleen Kirkham are seated. The picture is distributed by General

Al Lichtman Completes Journey

Famous Players-Lasky General Manager in Charge of Distribution Concludes Five Weeks' Tour of Principal Cities

THAT the motion picture industry has gone through its greatest crisis and is now well on the road to recovery is confirmed by Al. Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution.

Mr. Lichtman has just concluded a five weeks' tour of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges, including visits to Pittsburgh, Cleevland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, having been stricken with the influenza in St. Louis which compelled him to give up further travel at his next stop, Kansas City.

"After personally seeing just how the motion picture industry at large went through the period of national depression, I am proud to say that I am connected with the business," said Mr. Lichtman. "In every district I visited, the theatres were closed for an average of three weeks. While gloom was evident everywhere and everyone including myself, seemed to be suffering, either personally or in a business way from the epidemic, exhibitors and exchange managers were not sitting down to bemoan their fate.

"Quite to the contrary. Everyone was active, planning for better days to come and taking the dark days with grim determination to make up as soon as the business was resumed.

"As for the Distribution Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the country, the lull, although it has cost us a great deal, will in the end result in direct benefit to the exhibitor. Although we were not booking pictures we used these so-called idle hours to good advantage.

"We were able to get the undivided attention of all executives and employees on matters of importance in a manner impossible under conditions of business activity. New ideas have been created and new systems installed, all of which point to greater service to the exhibitor. Conditions that have been hanging fire for some time have been cleared up, and with the resumption of business, we are today in a better position than ever to give a service to the exhibitor, the like of which has never before been attempted, much less duplicated.

"With the installation of film clearing houses we introduced only one of these ideas pointing to enhanced service. No longer will the exhibitor have to show poor prints, if he books Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

"The trademarks of this product have now become insignias of a physical high-class quality of the film itself as well as the contents of the film which is evidenced on the screen. With the reopening of theatres the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has also prepared its releasing schedule so that it offers the exhibitor attractions that will insure his making up for lost time."

"Sunnyside" Is Title of Chaplin's Next

"Sunnyside" is the title given by Charlie Chaplin to his third production for distribution through exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Beyond this, and the statement that the story is laid in a small country town, little is known of the nature of the forthcoming release. Several advance "stills" from the Chaplin studios, taken with Chaplin entertaining various celebrities in the course of his work, indicate that he will appear in it in his number twelve shoes, baggy trousers and derby, but evidently without his cane.

This latter item of adornment does not appear in any of the scene stills.

Fred C. Quimby Takes Two Week Vacation

Fred C. Quimby, General Sales Manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., has closed up his office and has gone on a fortnight's vacation at Old Point Comfort.

Mr. Quimby has been working night and day of late arranging the details of the launching of the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," and in consequence he was said to be in need of a rest.

His original itinerary led to the Greenbrier Hotel at White Sulphur Springs, but when he was told that a dress suit was as necessary an adjunct at the Greenbrier as a toothbrush, the sales manager balked and immediately switched to Old Point Comfort, where he is doubtless by this time luxuriating in a flannel shirt.

Theda Bara Begins New Fox Production

Theda Bara, the William Fox star, has begun work on a new super-production, temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars."

The picture is being produced at one of the William Fox studios in Yonkers under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, this being Mr. Edwards's thirty-first production for William Fox. The scenario is by Adrian Johnson from an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley.

Fred Fishback Engaged by Henry Lehrman

Fred Fishback, who has been responsible for many comedies during the past ten years, is now a member of the staff of directors producing Sunshine Comedies under the general supervision of Henry Lehrman.

Mr. Fishback's early experience was with Thomas Ince.

Stuart Holmes seems all cut up about something. He is being represented by Edward Small

Seventy Prints Now Used on Les Miserables

It is reported that there are seventy prints of "Les Miserables" now in use. If every one of these prints played every day of the year since "Les Miserables" was first released the total time of the picture's showing would be seventy years.

Perusal of this phenomenal record, says an official of the Fox Film Corporation, shows that the leading theatres all over the country have played "Les Miserables" for engagements in excess of the average time given to special productions.

The following theatres, selected at random from a long list, have played "Les Miserables" for one week each:

Rose theatre, Chicago; Dayton theatre, Dayton; Pastime, Columbus, O.; Bank, Akron, O.; Stillman, Cleveland; Alhambra, Toledo; Queen, Dallas, Tex.; Queen, Fort Worth, Tex.; Colonial, St. Joseph, Mo.; Princess, Sioux City, Ia.; Majestic, Portland, Ore.; Liberty, Seattle; Victory, Tacoma; Colonial, Camden, N. J.; Isis, San Diego, Cal.; Rialto, San Francisco; Granby, Norfolk, Va.; Colonial, Richmond, Va.; Leader, Washington; Strand, Buffalo; Olympia, Pittsburgh.

All United Theatres Will Show "Kaiser's Finish"

All theatres controlled by the United Booking Offices will show "The Kaiser's Finish." A contract has been signed between the U. B. O. and the Emanee Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, which purchased the New York City and State rights on the production from A. Warner, whereby not only the Keith houses will play it, but also on the Proctor and Meyer and Schneider circuits, embracing all of the down town territory.

One of the first showings it will have in a house controlled by the U. B. O. will be at the Brevoort, known as the Strand of Brooklyn, New York. This theatre has given it the star position in all billing.

The Name of Pathe's Newest Pearl White Serial Is "The Lightning Raider." It Is Expected to Prove Unusually Popular

Moreno-Holloway Study New Serial Script

ANTONIO MORENO and Carol Holloway, stars of Vitagraph's current serial, "The Iron Test," have received the scripts on their next fifteen-episode play, work on which will start at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood in the near future.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the newest thriller, the title of which has not been announred.

A report from the Vitagraph western plant declares that the stars will be called upon to perform even more hazardous stunts than they did in "The Iron Test," and that if such is the case their courage will be taxed to the utmost.

In "The Red Mask's Prey," the eleventh episode, soon to be released, the action called for Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway to escape from a band of pursuers by fleeing across a telegraph pole spanning a chasm.

This scene was made above the roadway which was cut in the mountains by General John C. Fremont in 1840 to facilitate the movement of his troops, the road thus made being known as Fremont Pass.

The point where the scene was filmed is 150 feet above the pass and had the scene been taken as originally planned the two stars undoubtedly would have been hurled to death. The director to keep the action of the flight continuous, had decided to have the pole dropped and Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway start across it immediately its upper end landed on the far side of the chasm. Later he decided to let the pole fall first and then later to take the complete action. On the test the pole fell with such force that it broke in the middle and went crashing to the pass below.

Despite this, however, a second pole was obtained and after a test had proved it could withstand the fall, the action with Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway was taken as originally planned.

"The Silver King," with Faversham, Completed

The work of assembling and titling the Paramount-Artcraft special production, "The Silver King," in which William Faversham is starred, has been completed and the finished picture was given its first showing a few days ago in the projection room of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Faversham was present, together with his wife, Julie Opp, and Maxine Elliott, who is his partner in several theatrical enterprises.

So impressed were the executive and department heads by the entire picture and particularly the work of the star that spontaneous and prolonged applause followed the final scene and all present proceeded to verbally express their complete satisfaction and offer their congratulations to Mr. Faversham.

Small Town Exhibitor Is Convert to Long Runs

B. L. Feinblatt, manager of the Westchester theatre, Mount Vernon, N. Y., is a convert to the creed of longer runs and the abandonment of the practice of definite program change dates.

In explanation of his reason he has notified the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that he has played two repeat dates on "Shoulder Arms," and plans to book it for another return engagement as soon as the New York exchange has a print available.

He opened with the second million-dollar Chaplin comedy in opposition to the big Keith and Proctor house in Mount Vernon and did considerably better than average business, according to report. He then arranged to repeat it for two days the following week and on this engagement played to capacity business at every performance and declares that he was obliged to turn hundreds of people away because of the local fire laws which prohibit the sale of standing room.

"It goes to prove," said Mr. Feinblatt, "that when the public finds something that strikes its fancy the exhibitor cannot begin to satisfy the demand with a two or three days' run. I do not know, of course, just how many patrons came to see 'Shoulder Arms' for a second or third time, but I do know that at every show I wished that the twelve hundred seat capacity of the house had been twice that."

National Film Engages Two More Directors

More tangible evidence of the growth of Parson's National Film Corporation of America is evidenced by the engagement of two additional directors.

Harry Pollard, known for his American Beauty comedies with the American Film Company during the past three years and Frank Grandon, one of the dramatic directors who has just arrived from New York, are the latest members of the directorial staff of the National.

Arrow Reissues Serial Under New Name

For the first time in the history of the industry, a serial is about to be re-issued, and by the Arrow Film Corporation.

"The Demon Shadow" is the new title for the ten-reel re-issued serial of two episodes each, being a revised and re-edited version of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" which was originally issued in twenty episodes of two reels each, and in which Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Mitchell Lewis, now being starred in Select pictures assume the leading roles.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, made the following statement concerning "The Demon Shadow":

"We have contracted with the Big Productions Film Corporation, owners of the rights, to revise and re-edit the production so as to cut it down to ten episodes of two reels each and to distribute it on the State Right basis in that territory."

Big Demand for Lockwood

According to officials of Metro, the passing away of a motion picture star does not affect the popularity of his productions, and they declare that although the late Harold Lockwood died at the height of his career, his productions are in greater demand than ever.

The Screen Classics production which had just been completed before his death, "Pals First," is said to be enjoying unprecedented runs in the large theatres of the country.

The photoplay version was made from Lee Wilson Dodd's conception of the novel by Francis Perry Elliott, which was published by Harper and Brothers. The picture was directed by Edwin Carewe.

E. M. Sanders, special representative of Screen Classics, Inc., attributes the increased demand for Harold Lockwood productions not only to the popularity of the star, but the fact that his untimely death has aroused worldwide interest among many who were not regular patrons before.

Universal Takes Umbrage at Misleading Letter

The issuance of a circular on the coast, advising the trade that the Universal and Mutual weeklies had disappeared from the market, elicited last week a hot statement from the Universal and Hearst news representatives.

M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Universal exchange in San Francisco, issued a direct contradiction of the circular, and describes it as misleading.

The circular calls upon exhibitors to take up the news pictorial service circulated by the All Star Company, with the argument that it is now the only considerable service of its kind left since the withdrawal of the Universal and Mutual weeklies.

Mr. Markowitz replies in part as follows:

"The circular is an outright attempt to mislead the exhibitors. This is to advise you that the Hearst interests have taken over the Mutual Weekly known as the Screen Telegram and the Universal weeklies known as The Animated Weekly and Current Events."

He goes on to announce the facts already pretty widely advertised, that the Hearst International News, and the other subjects taken over by it, will continue to be released regularly.

Hart's New Artcraft Still Minus Title

Two weeks more will be required to complete the new William S. Hart picture for Artcraft, which follows in order of release "Branding Broadway," but which is still minus a title.

This is the production which was started in Chicago, where the Thomas H. Ince star is said to have obtained some remarkable scenes at the stock yards.

These scenes, shown in the projection room at the Hart studio in Hollywood, have aroused the enthusiasm of the studio force.

When D. W. Griffith Makes a Picture

YOU want it, because you know what D. W. Griffith showmanship means to you and to the motion picture industry.

There's always a very human story, intimate heart appeals upon a background of the universe.

And there's always something new — something nobody else ever thought of.

When You Show a D. W. Griffith Picture

MAKE your showmanship worthy of the production.

Advertise it and stage it with all the care it deserves. You can't be perfunctory with a Griffith production any more than you can be casual with a Christmas Dinner.

Put on all the new linen, the best china and the fine old silverware when you serve a Griffith picture.

After Your Patrons See a D.W. Griffith Picture

THEY talk about it. They argue as to whether it is the best thing he ever has done and most of them say it is. They tell their friends about it, advise them not to miss it.

And always, remember, it gives to your theatre prestige that lasts for months to come.

WHAT would you ask for if the gods decreed that the one thing you wanted you could have?
You'd want the greatest thing in life, wouldn't you?
Well, what is the greatest thing in life?
Victory? Money? Love? The Distinguished Service Cross? The Sight of home at the end of the war?
Or is it—
—the glorious thing that an unenvied American youth found in France in the midst of battle, the thing that brought him all that's really worth while? Is it that?
D. W. Griffith has that answer for you in his newest production.

That Girl In France

What do you know about that French girl that your soldier-boy, back victorious from the war, is going to tell you about? Are her clothes startling? Do the skirts show her hose? Is she the "Frenchy" sort of person you imagine her to be? D. W. Griffith's newest motion picture introduces you.

Lillian Gish portrays the girl. Her two love affairs don't go quite smoothly. Garlic fumes bathe one of her idols and the other is scarred with a sneer for all mankind. But a war well-won makes a tremendous difference! There are worse things than garlic, and cads can change.

Meet that girl your boy knows in France.

DEATH for the Huns who were beating down the door.
Life for the American girl, trapped behind it.
And for the American boy who led the Yanks, the one who threw the grenade, the greatest thing in life.
What is the greatest thing in life? Victory? The veteran's first view of the Statue of Liberty after the end of the war? Or—just what is it?
D. W. Griffith will show you in the newest production from the hand of the genius who made "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love."

The Creeping Barrage

LIKE the shadow on the earth of a cloud crossing the sun, the creeping barrage went forward.
From artillery, miles back, the shells dropped death on the German trenches.
Behind the protecting curtain the Yanks advanced, bayonets ready, grenades in hand.
Above, a bombing aeroplane darted like an angry wasp through the reek of battle.
Now you are in the midst of it with an American boy. Now you are back of the German lines where the girl he loves is in peril.
The Yanks are coming! But will they reach her in time?
It's a moment of terrific suspense!
For the first time in motion pictures you are taken into the line back of a creeping barrage. For the first time you charge side by side with the army of Yanks over No Man's Land
It shows you why the Germans had to quit.
Robert Harron is the American boy. Lillian Gish is the girl. You saw them in those wonderful D. W. Griffith pictures "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love."
The producer? That's easy. Of course it's another D. W. Griffith production.

Special Service Section on

"The Greatest Thing in Life"

WITH the magic name of D. W. Griffith to use in his advertising, the exhibitor does not need to be told to play the producer to the limit in this advertising, but we would make a somewhat different appeal with "The Greatest Thing in Life" than has been made in any of the other Griffith pictures that have come out of the war.

Famous Players-Lasky in its advertising which it has prepared for the exhibitors has referred to this as a victory picture and arranges the advertising along that line. And that it is a good plan to follow, for it is really a victory picture and while it does not undertake to show the actual surrender of the Germans, it does have the air of triumph in the end—not only the triumph of arms, but of all that is good in the world.

"Heart-comedy of the world war"—that is the selling line that we would use in all the advertising that we write. The comedy element is very strong through the picture and yet there are as great heart grips as the master director has been putting into any of his productions. The war scenes themselves are brief and humanness prevails over everything. Lillian Gish is a veritable ray of sunlight through the offering and we believe that element ought to be strongly featured in all of your exploitation.

THIS picture might almost be called an idyl. In a mere outline such as is given here the story might be called flimsy, but one has to take into consideration that it has the Griffith direction, and that the man who has the ability to bring out the little things and call forth a laugh or wring a tear ever had his hand on the patron's emotion.

And right at the start of the film we are given the spirit of your sales argument for a title tells us the picture is:

"The story of a young girl and the most important thing in the world to a young girl—love."

You couldn't dig up a better sentence to use.

Lillian Gish is seen as the tom-boyish daughter of M. Peret, a Frenchman who conducts a little tobacco shop in New York. His daughter, Jeanette, is full of life and fun, and in fact, in this picture Miss Gish pictures girlhood in its most joyous element There is a rich youth who is in love with her, Edward Livingston (Robert Harron), but she is not sure of herself and when the youth, who is the best cigarette customer of the tobacconist, calls her a silly brat she casts him out of her heart (she thinks).

Now all of this time the old tobacconist has a drawing at his heart a desire to go back to France, when suddenly there comes a check for him, represented to be from one who borrowed the money from him years before. As the title tells us, "He pretends to remember the incident well, though it never occurred." Right here let us say that the bright titles add a great deal to the value of this picture and they will bring many an added laugh.

THEN the scene changes to France with the father and daughter, Peret, the guests of the girl's aunt. Here the girl thinks that another love has come to her. He is the sturdy young farmer who also conducts a vegetable shop in the little town. He is very fond of Jeanette and also exceedingly fond of garlic, and so between the loyal love of this hulking young Frenchman and the smell of garlic on his breath the love of the girl, who is trying to

There Are Two Elements of This Picture to Bring Out

THAT this is a happy victory picture, that it is intensely human, should be brought out strongly in everything that you say about "The Greatest Thing in Life."

Tell your public that they'll laugh, and choke a little, and then smile again, and that they'll remember this latest Griffith offering long after the peace treaties have been signed. They'll know then that it is something more than a record of fighting; they'll know that it must have the real heart appeal to accomplish that.

Make it not only a victory picture in the triumph of America and her Allies in the war, but a victory of life and love. Keep every element of the freak out of your exploitation. You don't need "trick stuff" when you have the human heart to work upon.

Lillian Gish never put greater heart interest into her work, and the French poilu helps put over the punch

At first he hated everything but himself, and the girl, and now the wonderful understanding has come. The child interest is powerful

Human Element Is Your Strong Appeal in This One

WHEN you book this picture, we would advise every exhibitor to sit down and think how he would feel if he had a service flag in the front window of his home, and now that the fighting is over he knew that his son was safe and that he had helped to bring the great victory to stricken France.

Go a little further than this and picture how you would feel if this star had represented a son who was narrow and selfish, before the war started, who hated children and who thought seriously of little but cigarettes, though his heart was big and manliness was hiding in the background. Go further and picture how you would feel if you knew that this war had regenerated him, that he was coming back to you stronger and better and supported by a wonderful love.

Possibly it sounds a little foolish to ask the exhibitor to put himself into any frame of mind before he starts exploiting a picture, but you have to feel the grip of this latest Griffith production for yourself, as your friends and neighbors who have sent their youth "over there" are going to feel—that you may get the real appeal of "The Greatest Thing in Life" over, and earnestly. When you have once felt the heart appeal you are a great deal more apt to transmit it to others.

WITHOUT entering into the discussion of what is going to be the fate of a production that is largely a war spectacle, you have nothing of that element here. You have a little skirmish in the street, a wounded and dying French soldier, a few glimpses of some Germans, but the big human element is the great love of country which comes to the fore when our shoulders are straightened and our hearts expanded by the touch of real life.

Now Lillian Gish is the real star of this picture and she has never had a role that is going to make her more delightful to your patrons. And so, in the happy vein we would feature a considerable portion of the advertising around her, at the same time not forgetting the other big elements that you have. Don't merely tell the people that there is fun in the production, but show them by the lines that you use. For instance:

"She thought she loved the rich young American, but she feared that he cared too much for his cigarettes and he called her 'a brat.' And then she thought she loved the brave young Frenchman, but his passion was for garlic, and she hated that. So what was the poor young girl to do?"

That reference to garlic will not give offense, for really a portion of the picture turns on that and it is so well done that the only effect is a series of genuine laughs. Or:

"There were laughs in the war if you get under the cloak of it. And this little French-American maid was always busy being happy, though she was heroic when the moment came, and a woman when the real love swept her. Just a heart grip accentuates the sunshine of life here."

THAT'S a touch of the comedy side, and you get the regeneration element in easily with a phrase or two. Do not come out and say that this picture shows the regeneration of an American through the war. The moment that you do that there is an element of your public that will jump at the conclusion that this is some preachment—and it isn't, further than the way that Griffith can put such elements into an offering.

Here is a line:

"She thought she loved the Frenchman because children loved him, but she was surer that she loved the American, until she found he hated children. But when he came to her in the uniform of an American victor and the little French child snuggled up to him and kissed him she knew that the war had opened his heart—and she was happy."

Or this one:

"Robert Livingston cared for nothing in the world but the little girl and his cigarettes, until he found the greatest thing in life on the battlefields of France. And when the war clouds were gone and he came to her she knew and understood and they made the great discovery together."

IN other words, let us say again, at the danger of being guilty of repetition keep away from the element of strife here, except as it is reflected in the principal characters. You have a novel picture here, in that it doesn't go into a screened accusation of the barbarity of the Germans—not that it makes you love the Germans any more, but it simply leaves out the horrible elements.

And your patrons will feel a greater grip on your emotions than they would if they were constantly up and cheering some title damning the Hun, as much as he deserves it. And it gives the patron a greater loyalty to his country, a stronger love for France for the reason that we have before us a few genuine, loyal, sacrificing persons, in the midst of life—human and appealing.

Which suggests a good line:

"A heart-comedy of the great victory that you will remember long after the war is over."

There is a strong comedy element through the picture. Here is Lillian Gish as the tom boy French-American girl

"forget" her love on the other side of the water.

But just at that moment Livingston shows up at the French village and Jeanette's heart is torn between her changing emotions more than ever. She loves children, and so does the strong young Frenchman, Monsieur Le Bebe, while Livingston has already shown that he hates them, and that is another argument in her countryman's favor.

And right here there is a mighty strong heart element brought in by Peaches Jackson as the French kid. Exhibitors will do well to bring this out and to use in their newspapers some of the scenes that we have reproduced showing Peaches.

THEN the war comes. Le Bebe is called and as he comes in his uniform to say goodbye Jeanette is sure that she loves him beyond the rest of the world. Then comes the fighting in the village and as the French are about to be driven out an officer shows M. Peret a telephone hidden in the cellar and asks him to keep communications with the retiring army. This forms a gripping element of the photoplay. The Germans come and Le Bebe is wounded in the fighting and is taken to the cellar and hidden under the earth, one of the cleverest of scenes. The father is shot and Jeanette acts as the operator of the 'phone to notify the Allies that the Germans have weakened their line, and after that comes the attack, with Livingston, now an officer with the victorious Americans. And the war has now made a man out of him, and one way that he shows it is by his love of children. La Bebe dies in the end, there is a touch of pathos there, but every one will agree that the ending is the right one and that Griffith's touch is all through the picture.

OF course, another element that you are going to advertise strongly is that Robert Harron and Lillian Gish both appeared in "Hearts of the World" and "The Great Love." These two pictures have now been seen by thousands and that announcement will be sufficient to bring a great share of patrons to your theatre.

That and the character of the story ought to be carefully brought out. As we have said before, the human element is the part to emphasize. It is a war picture to a degree, but it might best be described as a heart-comedy with the background of the war and the spirit of victory predominating.

You can bring the victory element out strong if you want to take advantage of the timeliness of it, or you can show this a couple of months later and get results by going strong to the heart appeal. But by all means do nothing to indicate that this is a big realistic battle scene. That is a minor element, and, in fact, the only fighting that is seen is a mere skirmish.

People want to laugh and cry with the tears of sympathy. Feature the laughs of the picture, the pathos will take care of itself and create the word-of-mouth advertising for you.

GRIFFITH

Use the Magic of His Name, for It's a Guarantee

OF course, you will use the name of D. W. Griffith in exploiting this picture, but use it in the form of a guarantee of the production. Famous Players-Lasky has prepared several advertisements calling attention to the first, second, third and fourth successes, and then pointing out that here is the fifth. It is a mighty good idea to follow. But don't be satisfied with merely that. Put the other selling arguments, the humanness, on which we have put such emphasis here, into your displays.

Use the names of Miss Gish and Robert Harron prominently. They have a big following and this has increased with the last two of the Griffith pictures.

IN YOUR LOBBY

Keep It Simple and Avoid the Battlefield Idea

HERE is a picture that we keep repeating has the heart appeal. You do not want anything that resembles the freakish about your exploitation.

Keep away from the battle idea—the victory element is the one to bring out. It is a story of France and America and you can use the flags of those two nations to good effect in your lobby if the idea has not been overdone with you.

Here is a suggestion for a series of panels: Use a streamer asking what is the greatest thing in life and then suggest the answer:

First, wealth; then power, then love, and then home, and finally a question mark. Figures bearing out these ideas should be carefully prepared, for unless the execution is good they will not appeal.

You can circularize along the same idea and you will get results from simply mailing a card bearing the question: "What is the greatest thing in life?" and on the other side the fact that it is revealed in the newest of Griffith pictures.

Coming Program Offerings

Pathe Program Offers Variety

For Week Beginning December 15 Fannie Ward Heads the Program with a Star Photoplay, "The Narrow Path"

THE Pathe program for the week beginning December 15 is headed by Fannie Ward in another of her Extra Selected Star Photoplays made from the play first presented in New York, "The Narrow Path," under the management of A. H. Woods, who is also the producer of the picture.

It is said to be an exceptionally strong story of New York life and the screen affords it a breadth and detail of treatment impossible in the theatre.

Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham made the adaptation, George Fitzmaurice directed it in a manner which has elicited high praise and it was made by the Astra Film Company.

The keynote of the play is expressed in one of the subtitles: "God never planned a double standard—one for a man and another for a woman. And, yet, in the eyes of the world, a woman always must pay."

Harold Lloyd, with his active assistants, Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard, appears in a Rolin made comedy called "Take a Chance." The comedian was not slow to accept the invitation, and how he managed to escape broken bones in some of the stunts that he accomplishes is said to be a mystery to the beholder. Miss Daniels does some of her most charming comedy work in this.

The entire history of war as it affected America up to the time of peace, is told in a special one reel patriotic feature called "Liberty's Triumph." It has been called "The Condensation of a Thousand Books."

The tenth episode of "Wolves of Kultur" is called "When a Woman Wars," and shows how a clever, wideawake and patriotic girl outwits the fiendish Hun, only to face another peril. Leah Baird is given splendid support by Sheldon Lewis, Charles Hutchison and Edmund Dalby.

Little Gloria Joy, Pathe Star, in "I Want to Be a Lady"

No. 25 of the Official War Review is reported as showing some of the most vivid scenes of the conduct of the great war that has yet been exhibited. A reviewer has called these issues "Weekly Trips to Four Great Battle Fronts."

The head-hunting Dyaks, the fierce savage men of Borneo become closely familiar with the camera in Post Travel Series No. 25 and they make an entirely odd and interesting study. Those who have seen "The Wild Men of Borneo" of the circus, will be surprised when they see what really super-freaks the real, "blood-drinking" originals are.

"Strange Woman" Aboard President's Ship

"The Strange Woman," the widely-heralded film version of the famous play by William J. Hurlbut, was released this week by William Fox, with Gladys Brockwell in the title role.

An interesting point in connection with the release of "The Strange Woman" is that this picture was among those chosen to be shown to President Wilson and his Peace Conference party on the voyage to France.

The picture, which was enacted by a cast of fifteen well-known screen players, was directed by Edward J. LeSaint. The scenario was written by J. Grubb Alexander.

In the cast supporting Miss Brockwell are Charles Clary, William Scott, Harry Depp, Ruby LaFayette, G. Raymond Nye, Ada Beecher, Eunice Moore, Grace Wood, Margaret Cullington, Lucy Donahue, Miss Billy Armst, William Hutchinson, Miss Gerard Grassby and Louis Fitzroy.

Liberal Bookings Claimed for "The Bells"

Taking into consideration the diminution of business done by exhibitors during the period of the epidemic, "The Bells," with Frank Keenan as the star, has been unusually fortunate in its bookings, according to Pathe.

Its pre-release at the Rialto obtained the largest amount of bookings in the Greater New York zone.

War Review Shows Yanks in Russia

The first pictures to come out of Russia in two years are shown in the Official War Review, No. 27, which will be released on December 29. These pictures show American troops marching through the streets of Russian towns, American machine gun corps in action, etc.

"Little Women" Paramount-Artcraft Jan. 5

"LITTLE WOMEN," the William A. Brady production based upon Louise M. Alcott's story of New England life, which was purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation immediately after its initial showing at the Strand theatre, New York, will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special January 5.

Two million five hundred thousand copies of the book have been sold since it was written and it is still selling at the rate of a hundred thousand a year, according to report.

Of added historical interest is the fact that the scenes in the photoplay were filmed in and about the home of Miss Alcott in Concord, Mass., which is said to be in a perfect state of preservation. Here the author wrote "Little Women" and here gathered frequently such literary geniuses as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry D. Thoreau and others.

Assisting in the details of production was a nephew of the author, who gave many valuable pointers to Harley Knoles, the director. In cast as the four little women are Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn. Henry Hull is Brooke and Conrad Nagel is Laurie. Kate Lester, Julia Hurley, George Kelson and Lynn Hammond are also in the cast.

"The Goose Girl" Success Series Release

One of Marguerite Clark's screen productions, "The Goose Girl," has been selected by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the Success Series release for December 8.

This was originally released as a Jesse L. Lasky production, directed by Frederick Thompson.

Gloria Swanson, to Appear in a De Mille-Artcraft Production

Pauline Starke Appears as an Irish Lass

Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, both writers with many successful photoplays to their credit, were the joint authors of "Irish Eyes," the Triangle play released for the week of December 15. Pauline Starke is the featured player, and she is said to portray as lovable a little Irish lass as ever graced the screen.

She plays the role of Pegeen, a poor neglected stepchild of Irish fisher folk, who meets Sir Arthur Ormsby and is helped by him to escape from her brutal guardian.

Shelled Hospitals Shown

What is termed "one of the most vividly thrilling pictures of the war" is shown in Official War Review, No. 24, released the week of December 9 by Pathe.

One of the scenes clearly shows two Red Cross hospitals destroyed by shells; the other intensely dramatic episode is a close view of the troops going into attack.

PRESIDENT — A FAN

President Wilson Would Not Go to Sea Without Films

WHEN the George Washington sailed on its eventful mission carrying President Wilson and others to the Versailles Peace Conference, nothing was left undone to anticipate any desire that the President might express.

Therefore it seemed but natural that the authorities would provide several of the right kind of pictures that would appeal to the President and his honored guests.

Mme. Nazimova's "Revelation," "Toys of Fate," and "Eye for Eye" were the Screen Classics selected from the Metro offices.

Other Metro pictures selected for this honor were "Romeo and Juliet," "Blue Jeans," "Lest We Forget," "My Own United States," "Draft 258," and "The Slacker."

William Fox has also contributed heavily towards the President's entertainment. Among the Fox photoplays to be shown aboard the George Washington are "The Strange Woman" featuring Gladys Brockwell, and "Fame and Fortune" starring Tom Mix.

Thomas Ince Special to Select

"The Midnight Patrol," Produced by Thomas H. Ince, Will Be Released As a Select Pictures Special

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces the acquisition of the Thomas H. Ince Special Production, "The Midnight Patrol." The picture will be released exclusively through Select Exchanges, as a Select Special. It was made by Mr. Ince prior to the existing agreement whereby his productions are exclusively released by another concern, and it is the only Thomas H. Ince picture to be so marketed.

"The Midnight Patrol" is described as a swiftly moving melodrama, produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince and featuring the work of that everyday American hero, the police detective. A cast of even excellence has been assembled for the feature, and includes Thurston Hall, Rosemary Theby, Marjorie Bennett, William Musgrave and a number of others, including Kino and Yamamatto, two Chinese actors of first-class ability.

The story for the picture was prepared by Julian Josephson and Denison Clift. Director Irvin V. Willat was in immediate charge of the production.

Most of the action takes place in and around San Francisco's great Chinatown, that romantic playground from which so many tales of adventure have come. We see the plotting and counter-plotting of a corrupt ring in which local politicians enlist as confederates unscrupulous leaders of the Chinese underworld.

An important episode pictures the disruption of a band of opium smugglers and the capture of the ring-leaders in the illicit trade. There are scenes aboard the ship on which the opium is being brought to America, in the gambling holes and opium dens far under the surface of Chinatown, and many scenes of life on the surface of the squalid oriental section.

The action culminates in a fight which takes place in a subterranean gallery far under the street. A white girl has been captured and held as a lure which, as anticipated, draws into the clutches of the plotters the enemy whom they fear the most—the government's most energetic agent in the person of a young Irish patrolman. A fight ensues.

Recruits arrive for both sides, with the bluecoats slowly gaining the upper hand. It is described as a tremendously realistic fray, one of those screen battles that lives long in memory. Here the producing genius of Thomas H. Ince scores heavily, it is said.

Select believes that in "The Midnight Patrol" it is offering to its patrons a clean, manly picture which will be welcomed everywhere.

Pathe Needs Tiger Face Actor for Serial

Pathe Scenario experts are exceedingly busy just at present preparing the various episodes of "The Long Arm," the new serial in which Ruth Roland, who has just renewed her Pathe contract, will be starred.

The particular puzzle that is causing the Scenario gentlemen to burn the midnight oil at present is the proper method to make up an actor so that his face will resemble that of a tiger to a certain degree, while still holding more or less of the human features.

The story of "The Long Arm" concerns three adventurers who penetrate to the wilds of Sumatra and steal an image of a tiger from a cult of natives known as the Tiger Worshipers.

By some secret process of tattooing and skin grafting they remodel the face of the third man until it resembles that of a tiger. Thus this man is compelled to go out into the world wearing, so that all may see, the badge of his shame.

The Pathe Scenario men are now puzzling on just the right make-up for the actor who will play this character, and they have been calling in most of the tattoo artists in New York to give them suggestions.

Famous Players Reopens Fort Lee Studios

THE winter bugaboo in the East seems to have lost much of its power to incite the producers to terror.

Last week it was published, exclusively in Motion Picture News, that Goldwyn Pictures intends to return its entire producing outfit to New York from the West Coast following the completion of pictures now on hand. This week it is made known that Famous Players-Lasky has reopened its Fort Lee studios after it had been announced the plant would be closed until next spring.

These facts appear to be giving a "black eye", to the energetic personages who have press agented Los Angeles and its sunshine so persistently. A few weeks ago the news was rife in Los Angeles that "every last producer in the business" was moving hurry scurry to the Coast, to remain there the rest of their days. From last reports, it appears that San Francisco is to usurp the throne of Los Angeles in West Coast production, and that little old New York and the East will continue to move along at the same merry pace followed in the past.

Famous Players-Lasky last week had three pictures in work at Fort Lee. Marguerite Clark was being directed by Hugh Ford in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." At present, in addition to the Clark picture, the new John Emerson-Anita Loos production, "When the Boys Come Home," is being filmed there, as are also the bigger scenes for Elsie Ferguson's new Artcraft picture being made under the tentative title, "For Sale." Productions not requiring the large amount of floor space which the Fort Lee studio affords will be made at the Fifty-sixth street studio in New York and present indications are that the coming months will be exceedingly busy ones for the Famous Players-Lasky eastern producing organizations.

Louise Glaum Now An Independent Producer

LOUISE GLAUM, long a star in her own right, has entered the ranks of the independent producers and has started work on the first of a series of special features.

Miss Glaum's initial effort under her own auspices is intended to establish an exceedingly high standard. The author of her screen story is the photoplaywright, C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production is under the supervision of Allan Dwan, until recently director general of the Douglas Fairbanks photoplays.

He has the assistance of Director Art Rosson, who has been associated with him for several years. This collaboration, combined with the technical environments which surround Miss Glaum, is declared to indicate a notable production.

The Louise Glaum Company, after negotiating with a number of the important California concerns has leased space at the new Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City, just approaching completion, at a cost of something like $250,000. The new plant is said to offer the last word in studio efficiency and technical perfection.

The cast with which Miss Glaum has surrounded herself comprises Matt Moore, of the quartet of Moore brothers; Edwin Stevens, the stage player, Jane Novak, well known leading woman, and others.

Metro Directors in West

Herbert Blache and Henry Otto, directors, are the latest arrivals in the rapid migration of the Metro producing organization from New York to California. Messrs. Blache and Otto reached Los Angeles Saturday evening.

Forceful Stories Demanded by Brentwood Film

The Brentwood Film Corporation has a very clear-cut policy regarding scenarios. It is to consider only those with dramatic situations which might come within the immediate knowledge or experience of at least 50 per cent of any audience.

Stories measuring up to this standard are scarce because of the dearth of writers of perception and power who can give force and grandeur to strong, everyday situations without destroying their simplicity.

In "The Turn in the Road" the Brentwood declares it had such a story, written and directed by King W. Vidor.

James A. Keough Manager of Pantheon, Chicago

After an absence of four years from Chicago's Loop, James A. Keough is back again in the city as manager of Lubliner & Trinz's Pantheon theatre, situated on Sheridan road.

Mr. Keough is well-known principally for his past successes with Saxe Bros., owners of the Strand theatre of Minneapolis.

Later he was with Ruben & Finklestein, of the same city, where he managed their Lyric theatre.

Previous to going to Minneapolis Mr. Keough was connected with Charles Weeghman, manager of one of the houses in Chicago's loop—the Casino.

He has been connected with the business for the past twelve years, in all capacities, and was with the first moving picture theatre in the city of Indianapolis, where he ran the phonograph, sang illustrated songs, took tickets and relieved the operator.

Mr. Keough was originally a musician in Chicago and his thorough knowledge of music helps him a great deal in presenting his pictures.

Billie Rhodes in "Girl of My Dreams"

Billie Rhodes' beauty pulls in advertising and lobby displays

HAVE you ever "adopted" a star for your theatre?

Writing some months ago in the NEWS the author of "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor" told how he had taken up a new star and had made her the greatest of favorites in his community and that in a very short time her every appearance marked record attendance at his theatres.

In Billie Rhodes you haven't a really new star, for she has delighted and charmed millions by her work in comedies, but she is now coming into her own as a real star in feature pictures. She will appear only in these special productions which are to be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

You have a distinct advantage in featuring her, for she comes to the screen as a star in features at the ideal moment—with the war over and the people wanting bright and happy things—wanting to laugh and to look on the brighter side. And this girl has been so associated with laughter that all who love comedy know her. And she is to be seen only in bright anl pleasing offerings. Her beauty of face and form are known wherever motion pictures are shown.

Let's call her:

"The girl with the Victory Smile."

MISS RHODES is a California girl, born in San Francisco. She began her stage career on the Orpheum circuit and after that played the soubrette role in "Babes in Toyland," and then turned to the screen going with Kalem, later with Universal and then with Christie comedies. It is probably for her work with the last named company that she became best known. Her pictures were featured in most of the big theatres and she began to attract great attention. Since then she has appeared in Strand-Mutual comedies and now has just finished the first of her big features, "The Girl of My Dreams," for the National Film Corporation.

With you it should not be merely a question of increasing the popularity of a star, but of building up greater patronage for your theatre by making that star the better known to your patrons. And where you have a player that can deliver the goods and where you are assured that she will be shown in the right sort of productions, you can go even further by creating the impression in your community that you are virtually one of her discoverers and convert your audiences into her most loyal supporters.

JUST as soon as we booked these productions we would sit down and write a letter to every person within the radius of the theatre—to every possible patron. In most cases circular letters are overdone, but here is a case where you can write one that will attract attention.

In the first place let us suggest that you take the ordinary correspondence size envelope and get an attractive cut of Miss Rhodes, say a three-inch oval and use this at the left of the envelope and over it the words "Introducing her." Use nothing else on the envelope except the address of the patron.

Then write a letter something on this order:

"For a long time we have been watching the work of Miss Billie Rhodes in short comedies and, together with other exhibitors, we have been awaiting the day when she would have a chance in the bigger features. We have admired her beauty, laughed at her infectious humor, taken heart with her Victory smile. And we know that you have, too.

(Then if you have been playing comedies in which she appeared, call attention to that fact and list the titles of several of them that you have used and which the audience have appreciated most. Then go ahead:)

"And so we have decided to adopt her for the Liberty theatre. We know that you will be glad, especially after you have seen her in the first of her really big offerings and that you will soon be ready to claim her as your own particular star. She doesn't come to us as a novice. We all know her beauty and her ability, but now that she has been granted her proper place among players, let us all show that we appreciate it and that we are going to be charter members of the 'Billie Rhodes star club.'

"'The Girl of My Dreams' is the first of her offerings and it will be shown at the Liberty, January 18 and 19. It is a happy picture, with plenty of laughs, a lot of heart interest, a lot of action—and genuine satisfaction."

WHEN you get the second of her pictures follow it up in the same way. After that you will not need to do any more than to simply notify your patrons of the dates on which you are showing the later offerings. But always refer to her as the star that your theatre has adopted.

Call her "Our Billie."

Figure in all of this sort of exploitation the psychological angle. People do not like to be forced into anything. They are willing to be led when the leading is apparent, but when you make them think that they are doing the thing themselves—in this case that they are putting over Miss Rhodes—they will be with you to the limit and will go further than you would ever dare ask them to go.

We make this statement advisedly. We are not giving you "arm chair" exhibiting ideas here. We have seen them work successfully in the cases of individual theatres and there is no reason why it shouldn't work in the country's theatres as a whole if the managers will put a little enterprise and hard work into the plan.

This is the way she looks as the little girl of the mountains. These stills feature personality and arouse interest

Use Pictures Everywhere To Put Over The Big Appea

IN Miss Rhodes' first picture you have a title that is going to help you launch the campaign for her as a feature star—"The Girl of My Dreams." In fact, it is such a business pulling title that it ought to be featured strongly in all your exploitation, second only to striking pictures of your beautiful new star.

And right here while we are talking about beauty let us take the matter of pictures up. Just as soon as you book these pictures put in your application for every picture of Miss Rhodes that you can get. There is an unusually attractive collection of them that can be bought and you may be certain that they will prove a splendid investment not only for use in your advertising and newspaper work, but for a striking lobby display.

Don't merely rent any of these pictures. Buy them outright. See that your exchange sends through your order without delay and then begin to use them. And don't throw them away after they have been used once, but preserve them for use with every picture. You have a chance here for attractive lobby displays

AS we have said, get every one of these that is available and have them handsomely mounted in a glass case for your lobby. Use her name at the top and then use the line: "The Liberty has adopted her as our particular star." Then come the pictures and at the bottom should be used a card giving the date on which she will appear at your theatre in "The Girl of My Dreams."

Better still if you will include in this display scene pictures from the coming production. The producers have adopted the policy of using strikingly large pictures for this purpose, and there are eight 11 by 14 and two 22 by 28, so that they will attract immediate attention.

Now don't throw these scene pictures away after you have shown the first of the features. You can make these same still work for you on the next one. So that they will not appear exactly the same pictures that you have used once before, have cut-outs made of them showing her in the character that she portrays, and then when you get ready to start the display on your second production you can add to the lobby lay-out a line: "And you'll remember that she looked like this in 'The Girl of My Dreams,'" and then follow this with the scene pictures from the second offering.

FOR theatres that design their own advertising we would advise the use of large and striking half-tones in the displays. The added expense will pay you in the end. The appeal of the illustration is the strongest when the subject is a pretty woman, and you have here a series of photos that will make them all "sit up and take notice."

Don't think that the appeal of a beautiful woman is only to the men. It is ever stronger in case of the women.

We would advise you to make the first announcement of the coming of Miss Rhodes as a real star at least a week before you really start to advertise the first picture. Keep this advertisement separate from your announcement of the current offering. Use one of the photos, a number of which are shown on these pages, at the top and give the general public a talk along the lines that we have outlined in the letter. Merely announce the name of her first offering.

And tell them it is a happy picture.

THEN start in to advertising the first offering. Don't be afraid to use big space and don't be afraid to make one striking cut the dominant thing about all of your advertising. Elsewhere we are suggesting some selling lines, but in this first picture put all the weight you can behind the personality of the star.

And we would go further than this. We would show that this is not a flash in the pan. Call attention to the unusual beauty of the offering and to the cast that is supporting her.

There are Leo Pierson, Jack MacDonald, Frank MacQuarrie, Lamar Johnston, Golda Mawden and Jane Keckley, all of whom are well known, and the mention of their presence in the cast will help a lot.

IT'S ATTRACTIVE

Ample Material Supplied for Your Exploitation

ABOUT everything that could be desired is prepared for exhibitors handling "The Girl of My Dreams," including attractive paper, unusually large and striking scene pictures and several sizes of cuts and mats.

The paper, which is illustrated on another page, includes two one-sheets, one 3-sheet, one 6-sheet and a 24-sheet. You will see the attractive cut-outs that it will make for your lobby and you want to remember that you should play up the figure of Miss Rhodes as strong as possible.

There are eight 11 x 14 photos and two 22 x 28. There is a thumb nail cut, a 1 column cut and mat, 2 column cut and mat and 3 column mat only, together with press sheet and slide.

There is a special music cue sheet provided.

In addition there is a special 60-foot trailer that you will do well to use at least the week before you offer this first of the Billie Rhodes features de luxe.

Romance and Personality Marked in This One

ROMANCE and personality of the star in the character that she assumes are he two chief points to be played up in xploiting "The Girl of My Dreams." here is a near sensational incident in the tory, but you will hurt the patronage not nly of this production but of other Billie hodes pictures if you go out of the way o emphasize that point.

One big thing to remember is that the eople want cheerful pictures these days. hey don't want to be worried with prob-ms and they don't want to weep over ragedies. But that does not mean that here is not a demand for the heart thrill -the strong romantic element—and you ave it here. Now, let's understand the roduction before we go any further.

"The Weed," for that is her only name, as been raised in the wilds of the Califor-ia mountains, ignorant of who her parents re and living with the Williams family, ypical product of the mountains. "The Veed" is as pure as the mountain air, but qually ignorant of all but the simplest rinciples of life. It is on one of her regu-ar trips to a neighboring resort where she oes to sell the farm products that she at-racts the attention of George Bassett, an ged millionaire, who is there for his ealth. Her simple sweetness quite capti-ates him.

FIRST of the real romance enters the story when Ralph Long, while driving is car down the mountain, skids off a cliff. 'The Weed" comes upon him, drags him o a cave and treats him and then notifies he resort people. Long is taken to the ity with "The Weed" remaining in his nemory as "the girl of his dreams." But here comes another character, Kenneth Stewart, nephew of the millionaire.

"The Weed" knows nothing of bathing uits and the like, and takes her plunge in the mountain pool in nature's garb. Stewart sees her and snaps her and when he goes back to the city he has the picture enlarged and hung in the club.

But in the meantime the old millionaire is so convinced of the beauty of the girl's character that he takes her to the city to educate her. There Stewart never loses an opportunity to force his unwelcome attentions. It is after she has become Bassett's ward and the heiress to his millions that a landslide wipes out the Williams home and a neighbor finds a book in which it is recorded that the girl is the daughter of Stewart and that her mother died shortly after abandoning her.

During all this time Long remains in a semi-conscious condition in his home next door, and there the girl goes into his apartment, taking him fresh flowers each night. He believes her a dream girl, for the moment he awakes and seems to see her she disappears through the window.

THE information about the girl's parentage comes into the possession of Long's chum and he tells Long, who then goes to the club, tears down the photograph and then reveals the girl's identity to the father. Stewart, heartily ashamed of his conduct, begs that the girl never be told and goes away.

In the meantime the millionaire has formally adopted the girl and has named her as his heiress. It is during a party in the home that she goes to his room to take a plate of refreshments and there finds the old man dead. In the end, of course, Long finds happiness with his "dream girl."

Here are a few lines that tell just enough:

"Pure as the mountain pool in which she bathes, her innocence and beauty charm everyone that she meets. The sordid things in life are kept behind her and the heart throbs you feel for her are strangers to her happy heart. You'll love 'The Weed' and she'll make you the happier for having seen her."

"Charmed by her childish innocence, the millionaire took 'The Weed' from her mountain home to the palace of the city, but the beauty of her character remained untouched and she found all that a woman could desire. It's one of the happy stories that put new smiles in your life."

"'The Weed' had nothing but beauty and innocence and a heart that knew no limits, but they gave her everything that a woman could desire—wealth and love and utter happiness. You'll delight in the sunshine of her character, you will thrill with events hidden from her, and in the end you'll envy her a little and be very, very happy."

LET us repeat: In this first picture make this a typical "girl" story. Accentuate the happiness of it every moment.

And don't forget the star. Don't forget to talk about her.

Tell the people that she has been seen in comedies galore and that they then only had a chance to see one portion of her talents, but that here they are developed to the fullest.

Try this line:

"If you've liked Billie Rhodes before you'll LOVE her in 'The Girl of My Dreams.' For she's the girl with the Victory Smile."

Rapf Sells A Picture in Lobby

"Wanted for Murder" Was Bought by Frank Hall in Broadway Theatre Lobby Immediately After First Presentation

WHAT M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway theatre, in New York, termed as the quickest film sale on record, took place in the lobby of his theatre Sunday afternoon, December 8, when Frank G. Hall, of the Independent Sales Corporation, bought from Harry Rapf "Wanted for Murder."

Mr. Rapf believes that the distinction of putting the first feature production through the recently organized Film Clearing House system of exchanges throughout the country, will fall to him with this special production.

After producing "The Struggle Everlasting," with Florence Reed as star, and "An Accidental Honeymoon," featuring Elaine Hammerstein and Robert Warwick, both for the state rights field, Mr. Rapf determined to make as topical a picture as was possible to produce for his next one.

S. Jay Kaufman of the New York Globe wrote the story that Mr. Rapf quickly secured and Frank Crane directed it, with George Peters at the camera. Elaine Hammerstein is the French girl and Charles Raven is the American boy in France.

Irene Franklin and Bert Green are also in the picture, as they appeared while entertaining the boys on the other side.

The fact that Mr. Hall bought the picture five minutes after its first presentation is considered by Mr. Rapf as entirely without precedent. The tremendous but practically inexpensive exploitation given the picture by M. Kashin of the Broadway theatre is declared to be a criterion that other progressive exhibitors could well afford to follow.

The "Wanted for Murder" circulars, appearing miraculously upon so many posts around New York City, is said to have attracted thousands of keenly interested groups and was but a part of the "teaser" campaign which was later augmented by similar descriptive matter in the newspapers.

"Wanted for Murder" is based upon the romance of an American boy and a French girl brought together through the war. The boy's great personal ambition to bring about the Kaiser's downfall is the impelling motive.

That the production is topical is declared to be revealed through the final scenes, which picture the first actual revolts in Berlin against the tyrannical rule of the Hohenzollerns. The abdication is also pictured and the romance is completed by the return of the American boy to the United States, bringing the French girl home to his mother.

It is declared that Mr. Hall considers "Wanted for Murder" contains the best heart romance of all the war pictures, and without any morbid effects.

Harry Rapf has completed another special production entitled "Sins of the Children," featuring Alma Hanlon, Stuart Holmes and Mahlon Hamilton.

"The Challenge Accepted" Released December 23

"The Challenge Accepted" is a dramatic story of the selective service draft as it affected the natives of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Zena Keefe is said to be ideal in the leading role.

She is supported by Chester Barnett, John Hopkins, Sidney D'Albrook, Warren Cook, Charles Eldridge, Russell Simpson and Joel Day. Donald Gordon Reid, formerly connected with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is author of the story.

"The Challenge Accepted" will be released on December 23 and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

New Release Plan for "Romance of the Air"

AN unusual releasing plan expected to be of good advertising value to exhibitors has been mapped out by the Crest Pictures Corporation for the distribution of the production, "A Romance of the Air," featuring Lieutenant Robert Hall, the American Ace, and Edith Day, the prima donna of "Going Up," the Cohan and Harris musical comedy now playing in Boston after a season's run in New York.

The releasing plan begins in the New England States, as Lieutenant Hall will make a personal appearance at the premiere of "A Romance of the Air" in Boston on December 30, when this picture begins its four weeks' engagement at the Tremont Temple theatre.

Each and every territory will then be released only after Bert Hall's personal appearance, and no territories will be either sold or leased until after a featured engagement in one large exchange center of each territory during which engagement Hall will appear personally at all performances and give an informal talk on some of his experiences in the Foreign Legion and as an aviator in the original Lafayette Escadrille during his three years at three fronts.

As Lieutenant Bert Hall is known for the exploits which resulted in his receiving the highest French, English and Russian honors—he wears seven medals on his broad chest—his personal appearances are expected to be greeted everywhere with enthusiasm and patriotic approval.

"The Hidden Truth" Will Have Broadway Run

"The Hidden Truth," an International Film Service, Inc., production directed by Julius Steger, is scheduled to appear for a run in one of the Broadway theatres in the very near future, but inasmuch as the management of the theatre has secured Anna Case's promise to appear simultaneously with the first showing of her picture—an event which naturally will greatly add to the impressiveness of the occasion—and as she is at present on a concert tour which will keep her engaged for the next two or three weeks, the actual release date cannot, at present, be definitely given out."

It is understood, at the time of her appearance, Miss Case will sing that ever popular old ballad, "Annie Laurie," her rendition of which is so frequently requested.

Anita Stewart Entertains French Officers

Anita Stewart, the movie star, immediately on her arrival in Los Angeles was hostess at a dinner to fourteen French army officers who were on their way under orders from Marshal Foch to join the Allied expeditionary forces in Siberia.

The dinner was given at Hotel Alexandria, and in addition to Miss Stewart and the officers, a number of prominent public officials and people high in the motion picture world were in attendance.

"Wanted for Murder" Has Big Exploitation

Harry Rapf's production, "Wanted for Murder," after a big exploitation campaign, opened at the Broadway theatre, New York, Sunday, December 8.

Mr. Kashin, manager of the theatre, in introducing this production for Mr. Rapf, has arranged very novel advertising ideas. Last week, circulars reading "Wanted for Murder" were posted throughout the city, and many of the streets and thoroughfares were blocked with people reading these circulars.

"Wives of Men" Reported Big Around Cleveland

The Cleveland office of Pioneer Film Corporation reported to Nathan Hirsh, president, that a big business is being done in that territory and that exhibitors are most enthusiastic in their praise of "Wives of Men," saying that it has been one of the best box office attractions of the season.

In the city of Cleveland the first run on this feature was presented at the Miles theatre, and a second run at the Orpheum theatre has done remarkable business.

Crowds have been in front of the theatre during afternoon and evening and from the present outlook it appears that the box office record of the theatre will be broken, according to the report.

Gaumont Shows the First Returning Soldiers

The Gaumont News and Graphic released during the first week in December contained two epochal news events. The giant steamship "Mauretania" arrived in New York City on Monday, December 2, loaded with the first contingent of our returning soldiers.

The Gaumont Company chartered a tug and its corps of cameramen met the "Mauretania" in the lower harbor and obtained what are declared to be the first motion pictures which have been taken of these soldier boys since the armistice was signed.

Arthur H. Sawyer Gathers S-L Cast for Lincoln

Arthur H. Sawyer, the "S" of S-L Productions, and well known in the industry as the business associate of Mr. Lubin in their various film enterprises during the past two years, is engaged in the active supervision of the first S-L feature directed by Ralph Ince.

Mr. Sawyer has gathered together an unusual cast to appear in support of E. K. Lincoln, headed by Clara Joel and Grace Darling.

Star Commends Leading Women

E. K. Lincoln Comments on Leading Women Engaged for His Support in the First of the S-L Productions

E. K. LINCOLN, announced as star of the newly formed producing combination bearing the name of "S-L Productions," has appeared in company with many of the feminine screen celebrities of the present day.

Himself, familiar to photoplay audiences by reason of his numerous appearances as leading man in various film features he has been particularly fortunate in his choice of leading women.

During his picture career Lincoln has appeared as leading man with Anita Stewart, Dolores Casselli, Clara Kimball Young, Edith Storey and others equally well known.

Speaking recently of the cast assembled by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin to appear in his support in the initial "S-L Production," Mr. Lincoln remarked particularly on the feminine contingent among the players:

"I am greatly impressed with the calibre of the female leads selected by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin to appear in my support in the forthcoming S-L Production. In securing Clara Joel and Grace Darling to interpret the two leading female characters, I feel that these roles have been placed in the hands of players both competent and popular.

"Miss Joel is more than familiar to theatre audiences because of her personal success in "Common Clay," "Kick In," and more latterly, "Business Before Pleasure." She is exactly suited to the part assigned to her. I believe Miss Joel will prove a veritable "find" for the screen, and register heavily.

"Miss Darling's work is known to the patrons of the movies. She has appeared in a great many successful film productions and possesses the particular photographic qualities which make for beauty and appeal on the screen. The vivid contrast in personality and type offered between Clara Joel and Grace Darling should help the production on which I am now working under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Lincoln, as previously announced, is to be presented as a star by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the first of a series of S-L pictures and Ralph Ince is now engaged in directing the production at the Sawyer-Lubin Studios.

Mix-Selig Two Reelers for State Rights

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES, INC., has made a special arrangement with William N. Selig whereby they will offer for the state rights market the sixteen two-reel western dramas featuring Tom Mix.

In the past it has been rather a hard proposition to get good dramatic subjects in short lengths. For this reason Exclusive Features are placing on the market this series of sixteen two-reelers featuring that western star, Tom Mix. The first release, "Twisted Trails," will be available on January 1 and from then on for sixteen weeks one of the two-reelers will be issued weekly.

Tom Mix is noted for his ability to portray the rugged western type of two-fisted fighting man. In this series of two-reelers he is said to be seen at his very best, in plays of fast, snappy action just brimming over with tense situations and real thrills.

Already a great deal of interest is reported as having been manifested by exhibitors who read the initial announcement of these releases.

Exclusive Features reports that they have already made a good number of state rights sales and therefore suggest that state rights buyers should not delay in getting in touch with them.

Those who have seen these two-reel Tom Mix big little features declare that they will provide a long felt want. Exhibitors have always been on the lookout for good dramatic short reelers, the kind of pictures that can be used to build up a program, and these little Western features are expected to be used to advantage and calculated to fit in well on comedy program, providing a touch of real drama.

United Releases Its First Two in January

CONCRETE evidence of the activity which has been reported from United offices is forthcoming in the announcement of definite dates of release in January of the first two of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., productions, "The Light of Western Stars" and "Adele."

The former which is closely based on Zane Grey's Western romance, "The Light of Western Stars" and was directed by Charles Swickard from the screen version of Roy Clements is definitely announced for release January 5.

The second United release which is firmly set for January 26 will be that of the recently completed Kitty Gordon superfeature, "Adele," which has gone smoothly from its inception at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, and which is said to present this screen star in a novel role differing in its entirety from anything before accomplished by Miss Gordon.

Private showings of "Adele" in New York are reported to have elicited unstinted praise. The piece is based on Adele Bleneau's widely read "The Nurse's Story." Jack Cunningham wrote the continuity and Wallace Worsley directed. Robert Brunton gave personal supervision to the production.

Bruce Announces New Scenics

His Twenty Themes Described as Having Wide and Varied Appeal —Three Thousand Miles to Make One Picture

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made of the releases of the new Robert C. Bruce scenics for the winter and early spring. Of the new crop, the Educational Films Corporation has already released "The Tides of Yesterday," "'Tis Tough to be Tender," "Tales of the Tall Timber" and "A Wee Bit Odd."

The next Bruce offering is called "The Wanderer and the Whoozitt." After it will come "The River Gray and the River Green," "The Restless Three," "Sundown," "Separate Trails," "Frozen Thrills," "The Lonesome Pup," "Scenic Succotash," "The Wolf of the Tetons," "Nature—Rest and Motion," "Horizon Hunters," "The High Horse," "The Pale Pack Train," "Nature—Hot and Cold," "Men Met in the Mountains" and "Before Breakfast."

Dane and Buddy, the canine heroes of "The Wanderer and the Whoozitt," traveled 3,000 miles to be filmed in one of the pictures. Their winter home is Portland, Oregon, whence they were summoned by telegram to the kennel owner to make the next stand of Jackson's Hole, Wyo. They rode 1,500 miles in express car, met their master at the station, worked on location, and then returned with Bruce on the westbound train to the Coast.

In two of the pictures, equine "leads" are featured. Western cayuses bear the packs of Bruce and his dogs up the steep trails, and due need is given to their cleverness and intelligence in "The Little High Horse" and "The Pale Pack Train."

Mr. Bruce believes that in the new series of twenty subjects now offered he has a wider variety of themes and a larger number of original ideas than he has secured in any of his previous seasonal work. The beauty spots of the Northwest, the Rocky Mountains and California have yielded many unexpected treats to the picture-taker, and the novel, the curious and the amusing are blended with the scenically beautiful. Especially is Mr. Bruce enthusiastic in his appreciation of the Jackson's Hole country adjacent to Yellowstone Park. He describes it as the potential Playground of America and warmly favors its incorporation in the Federal Government's system of national parks.

"Motor Corps Night" At Broadway Theatre

In honor of the Motor Corps of America, Mr. Kashin, of the Broadway theatre, will set aside one night as Motor Corps night, during the engagement of the photoplay "Wanted for Murder."

In this picture is a scene in which a few of the ladies of the motor corps with their ambulances are showing their wonderful work on the other side.

"Unique Comedies," Title of Arrow Reissues

The Arrow Film Corporation has secured for exclusive distribution in the United States and Canada thirty-two single reel comedies produced by the United States Motion Pictures Corporation.

Twenty-six of these comedies were released through the Paramount programme, but have been withdrawn from the market, while six of the comedies are entirely new.

The re-issues have been re-titled and re-edited, and the entire series are being offered State Rights exchanges to be released once a week, commencing December 20.

Lee Ochs Recovers from Minor Operation

Lee A. Ochs, vice-president of United Picture Theatres of America, after completing his recent successful tour through the West, was taken down and consented to be removed to St. Luke's Hospital in New York, where a minor operation was performed.

According to reports, Mr. Ochs is now doing nicely and expects to soon be back at his desk and active in promoting the demand for "Light of the Eastern Stars" and "Adele."

Charles Chapman Joins S-L Productions

The latest addition to the special studio staff assembled by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin for the first S-L production, starring E. K. Lincoln, is Charles Chapman.

Mr. Chapman was appointed in the capacity of Art Director with the newly formed producing organization.

In point of experience he is a dean of art directors in the motion picture field, having been the first worker in that capacity with the Vitagraph Company of America over nine years ago.

Arrow Film Corporation Reports Many Sales in One Week

The activities of the Arrow Film Corporation, state right distributors, have not abated, but if anything renewed and added energy seem to have caused the piling up of a sales record.

In addition to the sales made on the serial, "The Demon Shadow," the following sales were made for the week ending November 30:

Unity Photoplays Company of Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana: 32 single-reel "Unique Comedies"; "The Woman's Law," starring Florence Reed; "The Perfect Model," a re-issue of "Inspiration"; "The Sunset Princess," "Her Aviator"; four five-reel "Allison-Lockwood" re-issues, and "Pamella's Past."

Southeastern Pictures Corporation of Atlanta, for the six Southern States: 32 single-reel "Unique Comedies."

J. P. Donnelly of Seattle, for Montana: The special attraction, "The Finger of Justice," and the same production to Max Gluckman for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Standard Films Service Co. of Cleveland, for the territory of Ohio and Kentucky: 12 two-reel "Anna Little" westerns, and the same productions to the Specialty Film Company of Dallas for Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma.

The re-issued production, "The Million Dollar Mystery" in six reels, to the Quaker City Feature Film Company, Inc., of Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. Frank Gerston, Inc., for northern New Jersey, and to the S. S. Film Exchange for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"Huns Within Our Gates," to the Federal Feature Film Corporation of Boston, for the six New England states.

New Independent Plans to Finance Producers

While the operations of the newly organized Independent Sales Corporation are definitely limited to the maintaining of a large force of film salesmen throughout the country for the sole purpose of booking pictures, and it will not be concerned in the producing of pictures or in the physical distribution of productions, it recently became known that an important part of its functions is the financing of producers in so far as a cash advance on finished negatives is concerned and also the financing of prints and advertising.

This places the Independent Sales Corporation in a position where it can close with producers, or groups of producers, immediately to take full charge of the advertising and marketing of their pictures, while at the same time sharing with them the burden of the cost of production.

The physical distribution of the pictures, which is a thing apart from the activities of Independent Sales Corporation, is taken care of by a special arrangement between this company and the Film Clearing House.

Henry Walthall Christmas Star

"And a Still Small Voice" Will Be Released December 22 and Distributed Through Exhibitors' Mutual Exchanges

HENRY B. WALTHALL will be the Christmas star of the new Exhibitors' Mutual release. By the terms of the new contract between the Robertson-Cole Company, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, all pictures for the twenty-nine Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges in the United States and Canada are being supplied by Robertson-Cole.

Robertson-Cole have contracted for eight Billie Rhodes, eight Henry B. Walthall, eight William Desmond, eight Bessie Barriscale and eight Sessue Hayakawa pictures a year, releasing via the Exhibitors' Mutual. Mr. Walthall's first appearance on the releasing program will be on December 22, when his first vehicle, "And a Still Small Voice" will appear.

Mr. Walthall is now at work at the National Film Corporation of America studios on the coast in "Lives for Sale," described as an original powerful story. His next production will be a play founded on Hallie Erminie Rives' popular novel, "The Long Lane's Turning." This will be produced as a super-feature.

"And a Still Small Voice," Mr. Walthall's first release, was made before the star signed his long term contract with the National Corporation to make a series of eight features a year for release through Robertson-Cole. It will serve as an introduction of Mr. Walthall to the Exhibitors' Mutual schedule of releases. "And a Still Small Voice" is described as a photodrama of unusual novelty and strength, with Mr. Walthall at his very best.

"No star is more popular than Mr. Walthall," said one official. "He endeared himself to fans with his unforgettable little colonel of 'The Birth of a Nation' and he has held a position all his own in their affections ever since."

The Robertson-Cole Company promises that the star will be seen in series of releases of a distinctly strong dramatic nature, and that morbidness will not be a part of them, but that Mr. Walthall will appear in the kind of characterizations the public wants.

Stoermer Comments on "Tidal Wave"

BECAUSE of the many changes on popular desire in its relation toward the theatre, all speculations are wasted energy, according to William Stoermer, producer, author of "The Honor System," and now author, producer and purveyor of "The Tidal Wave," which he is preparing to circulate immediately.

There are certain angles of mob psychology that may be predetermined accurately, according to the Stoermer manual of film tactics.

In his preparations for "The Tidal Wave" the producer goes back to July, 1917, almost a year and a half ago. At that time, the owner of "The Tidal Wave" decided that he would have in negative form on the shelves ready to be finally cut and subtitled a picture big in drama and timely in subject just suited to what popular desire should approximately be when the war was over and peace declared.

"Of one thing you may be sure," said Mr. Stoermer, "and that is that 'The Tidal Wave' is not a war play.

"Of another thing you may be certain," he continued, 'The Tidal Wave' is not in the limitations of its definitions a romance. Another fact for record is that 'The Tidal Wave' is not a suspense detective story. But 'The Tidal Wave' possesses the salient and atmospheres of all three of those kind of dramas.

"I am testing my judgment to parallel public inclination at an hour commonly supposed to be the most difficult to gauge by film makers and exhibitors, and, for that matter authors. And I do not think that I am going to be mistaken in believing more than a year ago that I could call the turn public desire in film plays after peace had been finally tagged to the great red bowl that has convulsed the world for the past four years.

"In 'The Tidal Wave' I think I have the kind of play that nine-tenths of playgoers want at this time. While it is not a mystery story, my long acquaintance with the pabulum of playhouses long ago taught me that a mystery story is one of the eternal verities for box office draught."

The story is in eight reels with the surge of souls in conflict as the explanation of the title.

Gaumont Graphic Shows Stirring Scenes

Gaumont Graphic No. 37, which was released December 6, shows many stirring scenes, according to the following partial list:

"With Our Boys in France" shows eleven different scenes, among them being Pushing on to Potsdam, a continuous line of caissons move forward at double time, American engineers build a bridge over the River Meuse, German dugouts near St. Mihiel captured by the Americans, etc.

Gen. Joseph Haller, former commander of the Polish brigade in the Carpathians, is welcomed home at Paris, France. In Los Angeles D. W. Griffith is presented with chevron of honor from the U. S. Government.

At Great Lakes, Ill., the sailors supplant the newsboys and the money realized went to the Naval Relief Society. The official peace ship is seen leaving New York harbor with President Wilson on board.

Just a few minutes before the President sailed the Lapland arrived with several thousand boys from "over there." All this and many more enlivening scenes are shown in No. 37 of Gaumont Graphic.

Special Service Section on

"The Key to Power"

AMERICANISM and pride of country—in its people and its achievement—have been immeasurably increased by the outcome of the war. Only a couple of years ago we were a more or less selfish people. We didn't care anything about the fellow next door. We didn't thrill much with the success that strangers were making. We didn't worry much about where things came from—so long as they came.

But now we do want to know what our country is doing, so long as the things are virile. We want stories of Americanism, set against the background of things American. We want stories that are happy, stories that are logical, stories that work out to the triumph of real manhood and womanhood. And these are the points to consider in framing your exploitation for "The Key to Power."

Although this six reel feature is released by Educational Film Corporation, it is not to be classed as an "educational" picture, but a virile story of Americanism, set against the background of the great war. It is not a war story, yet the spirit that brought us victory dominates it.

It is distinctly a victory story.

There are thousands of Americans who did not have the privilege of offering their lives "over there," but who offered everything that they had to give on this side of the water. And their part will never be forgotten. In the stress of the excitement of welcoming the heroes back the lustre of these war workers may dim a little, but it will be but a passing cloud.

IT is not only not a war picture, but the interest in this should be greater than it was during the actual hostilities. Then the public had time to think only of the feats that the soldiers were performing on the battlefield. Now they have time to consider the whole setting of the great drama. And, as we have said, this forms only the background for an absorbing story of Americanism, full of action and the human elements that people want in pictures.

Here is an idea of the story:

Bruce Wendell, son of a West Virginia coal mine owner, is a West Point graduate and a captain in the American army and in love with Ann Blair, granddaughter of Gen. Blair, who believes that the army is the only profession for a man. Another suitor is Lieut. Parrish, son of the president of the B. & W. Railroad which moves the coal from the Wendell mines. Just before this country gets into the war Meyer, a German agent, comes to the section and under the guise of making millions for Parrish, senior, really plots to tie up the coal production by having the railroad delay cars. But the elder Wendell fathoms the plot and when he does he is set upon by thugs in the hire of Meyer and receives mortal wounds.

ON his deathbed he calls in his son and tells him of the plot and insists that he leave the army and save the coal mines, thus doing his country an even greater service than he could do as a fighter. This offends the Blairs and after this country gets into the war and Bruce refuses to return to his post the break is an open one. Lieut. Parrish and the rest believe that Bruce is animated by cowardice, and the girl finally accepts Parrish's offer of marriage. It is at that moment that Meyer and his crowd resort to further violence and determine to destroy the mines. Ann's little brother, Bobbie, still believes in him and when he is seeking Bruce he is sent by one of the German plotters into the mine just as the explosion is about to go off. Bruce goes to the lad's rescue.

Later, the boy and his sister are trapped by the spies and taken to their headquarters in the mountains. Bobbie escapes and goes to summon Lieut. Parrish and his men from the army post. Bruce shows up just at that moment and a battle with the plotters follows, in which the mine owner is getting the worst of it just as the soldiers arrive. When Lieut. Parrish is told by Meyer of the part that his own father has in the plot he withdraws from the contest for Ann's hand, as well he might, as her faith is now restored and her love is sure.

PURE Americanism—that is the point to play up.

There is just enough of the industrial angle in the picture to give an unusual setting. It is brought out clearly the important part that coal takes in the life of the nation. That is brought out incidentally while Bruce is explaining to Ann and the little brother why he had to leave the army and guard this portion of the national essential resources. This is in the form of allegory, but there are just a few feet of it—enough to strengthen the story without becoming tiresome.

Most of the settings are in West Virginia. There are flashes shown of the mines, of the methods of loading and transport and many scenes in a typical mining town. There isn't the slightest thing of a fake about this picture.

The point that you want to make here is that you have more than a mere story, that you have something everyone will remember. It is a picture that will cause a great amount of "word of mouth" advertising.

Tell them:

"Coal is the key to the power that won the war for America, and the Americans who guarded it and frustrated the plots of the Huns over here are just as much heroes as those who fought over there—they all did their duty, and gloriously."

At the left and right are the two principal characters in "The Key to Power." In center scene after rescue of the little brother

Victory Idea Should Be Played Up Very Strong

THIS is a picture that should be exploited as a special picture. Get out of the rut and do things different. You have a production here that will be a welcome relief after the usual war picture and the general line of current offerings. There is matter here that will make your audiences think without their knowing that they are thinking; that will add greatly to the knowledge of this country's power without their getting the impression that they are being "educated."

Don't go into the industrial element of this too much in your advertising. Let that be incidental. We have already told you that the power of coal forms only the background for the story and we wouldn't go a bit further than that in the publicity. But because of the solid interest, because of that background, because not only is the story real but the settings are genuine you can afford to go much further than you could with one of the purely artificial creations. It should be given all the attention that you give any of the "specials" that you use.

Keep the story the main thing. Keep the victory idea strong. Play the hundred per cent American element for all that it is worth.

HERE is one point that you want to remember:

When the armistice was signed we had more than three million fighting men in service.

That is a great number, a remarkable achievement, but stop to remember that this was but a fraction as compared to the number that were doing war work in this country. A great share of the population was engaged directly in helping to win the war. With the strain of the war over there has been a relief in the tension here at home, just as the boys in the army and navy have relaxed to an extent when the fighting days appear over.

Over on this side of the water the millions have been attending the motion picture theatres and cheering every appearance on the screen of the boys in khaki and blue.

But now the men who did their part on this side are going to have something of an inning. We want all of us now to look further behind the scenes and see the things that contributed to the great victory. We haven't forgotten the bravery of our heroes, but there is room for a tribute to all now.

Every man who has been serving his country on both sides of the water, every woman, every child knows that there has been every human element at work in this country. You have a chance to show them a part of the war work here, set in with a stirring story of the German intrigue that failed. And though the particular story is fiction the spirit of it is absolutely true.

AND so we would carry that spirit into the advertising. We would talk about the part the workers at home played, keyed up with the victory spirit. Here are a few lines:

"No braver men ever offered their lives than the millions of boys who served Uncle Sam 'Over There.' But there were heroes at home, too, men who have been unsung, but who have contributed their brain and their brawn to winning the war—without whom Gen. Pershing's army could never have forced the Huns to sign the armistice.

"There were thousands of these heroes in the coal fields, supplying the key to power. They grappled not only with nature, but they had to fight the cunning of German propaganda and Hun violence. Here you have a typical story of the battles that were won at home, how the American coal interests triumphed when all of German power was seeking to cripple our industries. You'll thrill with the bravery of these men just as you have cheered the fighting boys when this tense story of action is unfolded on the screen."

Or this gets the more intimate touch:

"When Bruce Wendell resigned his commission in the army just as this country was about to enter the war, his friends called him a coward. Even his sweetheart turned from him. Among all he knew only her little brother believed in him.

"But he knew that there was a battle to be fought over here, too. He was at the head of a great coal mining plant—and coal is the key to power. How he fought German intrigue and violence and American profiteering is one of the most dramatic stories that has come out of the war.

"There are millions of heroes who never had the chance to don the khaki. You don't know the story of the war until you have seen their part in it. It's a truly American epic."

YOU will note that we have made the selling arguments on this picture somewhat longer than we generally offer in these service sections. It is advisable to do so, because you want to acquaint the public fully with the character of the offering and at the same time to let them know that there is true dramatic interest to the story.

Here is another one that gets the love element into the exploitation a little stronger:

"Ann Blair was a soldier's granddaughter, and when Captain Bruce Wendell came to her in the uniform of a captain, a West Point graduate, he won her heart and hand. But the tocsins of war sounded and Bruce threw up his commission without a word.

"'Coward' she thought, and spurned him and then allowed another officer to win her promise. But she did not know the duty that he had to perform at home. She did not know that German plotters had closed his great mines, that he had to stay at home to supply the key to power of the nation, that our factories might make the munitions of the war, the railroads transport men and supplies and the transports carry them and our fleets over the seas.

"He faced the Hun over here. She saw him in his manhood, with she as the pawn. She came to know that there were heroes on both sides of the water in the big conflict—O, and you know what happened then."

MATERIAL A-PLENTY

It's Up to You to Make Use of These Accessories

THIS picture should be billed and advertised strongly. There is ample material with which to work, and the greatest care should be taken to see that the whole of your territory is covered.

For the posting there is a striking twenty-four sheet with a design at the sides carrying out the coal mining idea, and a striking big scene picture in the center with the title of the production carried out in letters coming from the smoke. There are, also, one, three and six sheets.

There are seven 11 x 14 scene cuts and two 22 x 28, heralds and plenty of squegees for newspaper use. There are one, two and three column newspaper cuts, and two scene mats. There will also be page and half page mats supplied for newspaper use, and these will give complete and convincing stories.

In addition there will be a special plan book giving additional hints on putting over the picture and showing all of the material.

THREE names should be played up in connection with this picture. You have a most charming star in the person of Claire Adams and she will win the sympathy of your audiences quickly. She was born in Calgary, Alberta, and is a niece of Sir Donald McMillan, former governor-general of Manitoba. She recently scored big hit in "The Spirit of the Red Cross which has probably been shown in you city and you can make capital of that fac

Her sole dramatic experience has been motion pictures, beginning at the Ediso studios and was continued in the Jame Montgomery Flagg short comedies, includ ing "The Man Eater" and "Romanc and Brass Tacks." Later she played op posite Richard Bennett in "The End c the Road." She has just finished work i "Oh, Johnnie," with Louis Bennison.

Hugh Thompson, the male lead, is on of the best known leading men on th screen and he certainly has a following i your section. He has played opposite suc stars as Virginia Pearson, Theda Bar Emmy Wehlen and Olive Tell. He wa last seen opposite Doris Kenyon in "Th Street of the Seven Stars."

William Parke, who is responsible fo the making of the picture, is one of th best known of directors. For a long tim he made comedies for Thanhouser, an then directed his first feature with Glady Hulette in "The Shine Girl," the pictur that brought the star into real prominenc One of his most recent successes was "Th Yellow Ticket," starring Fannie Ward.

Mr. Parke has the advantage of years o experience as stage manager with Richar Mansfield, E. H. Sothern and Julia Mar lowe, where he learned the fine sense o values that is shown in "The Key t Power."

STEEL CEILING IS CHECK TO FLAMES

Fire of undetermined origin early on Sunday drove the watchman at Wilson & Co.'s undertaking rooms, 2015 Adams-st, into the street, clad only in a bathrobe. A steel ceiling prevented the fire from spreading to rooms above. Several persons, living on the second floor, were taken to safety by firemen. Loss is estimated at $3000.

This clipping from the Toledo News Bee of July 15 refers to a "Classik" Steel Ceiling installed more than five years ago by our Toledo representative, Mr. J. P. Weyant. This same Steel Ceiling having been cleaned and repainted forms an effective part of the repairs.

The Heart of the Theatre

IT is a peculiar thing that when a theatre man talks of his house he goes into every detail with great enthusiasm EXCEPT the PROJECTION ROOM.

They come into this office and sit and expatiate at length about the Bartola, the Seeberg, the Estey, the Austin or some other form of musical instrument of which they are the happy possessors. They will tell you how these instruments have increased their patronage and what a fine musician they have located or the difficulty they are having getting one, as the case may be.

They will go into the stage settings which they will diagram on a pad in order to show the arrangements. They will tell of the cost, etc., all of which we are most interested in and information on which we wish to obtain in full detail.

Some will ask questions as to how to improve their lobby decorations and how to display certain pictures which they have booked. These are the questions on which we are only too glad to give all the help possible at any and all times.

The questions of local advertising and its application to billboard and newspaper space is gone into, also the use of house to house work on "Specials" and "program pictures." These problems are taken up and discussed and if we can be of service or offer suggestions for improvement, that is our good fortune. We pride ourselves on having this ability.

BUT, and here is the catch, how often does that same theatre man ever take up the question of his PROJECTION ROOM?

How often does he ever inquire as to how he can improve the one thing which he sells to the public and the one thing which means bread and butter to him, "THE PICTURE ON THE SCREEN"?

This never seems to enter his head or if it does he hates to let it remain long enough to cause him any mental exertion. It is the heart of the house, but being the heart, it is hidden and being hidden he seems to think it does not need his supervision. Yet it is responsible for his existence.

It is the same old phase of human nature. The theatre man will pay a large sum for his general equipment but for his PROJECTION ROOM a second-hand rebuilt machine will do or a new one presented to him "because of the advertising possibilities to the manufacturer by having it installed in his house," or a discount from the dealer which is enough to discourage any man from further dealings with the theatre interests and all on the promise to the dealer of his future business in carbons, slides, etc.

A motor generator set? Why bother with that when the people come anyway and pay to see the picture which flickers along under the influence of alternating current?

Why bother to properly ventilate the Projection Room? Why not suck the foul air up from the theatre and let the Projectionist breathe it? None of the patrons can see what goes on up there where the machines are working to produce their entertainment. None of them know the hardships which have to be endured in so many houses by the man who is responsible for this entertainment.

Why are these details—or better, the necessities—of the Projection Room overlooked? Merely because the Theatre Owner or Manager does not care for anything except that which can be seen.

Some of them even go further in this respect, thinking that the inability to see is excuse enough, as we pointed out last week, for the elimination of the proper amount of cleaning. All theatres are not in this pitiable condition but there are enough of them to make the general condition appalling, for if the smaller houses continue to be blind to these things they will be forced out of business and pictures will be used elsewhere for the amusement of the people.

In advertising, how many houses feature cleanliness? What percentage of the whole dare? How many reflect upon the condition of their Projection Room by refering to the class of projection which they offer and the clearness of the picture which they sell.

It is not our desire to be alarmists or super-critical but merely to point out to the theatre men whose houses are in the condition described, what they may expect unless they are awake to conditions.

If theatre men in general were only awake to conditions they would not try to beat down the cost of their projection equipment but each one when he buys would go to the dealer who would give actual service with every article purchased. He would demand absolutely that every so often, in consideration of his purchases, that a repair and electrical man from the dealers should visit his house and see to it that the goods supplied are kept in the proper shape and do the work which they are guaranteed to do. This guarantee and service is worth more to the theatre men than all the price cutting which they could ever take advantage of.

In the one case they are assured of always having their equipment in proper working shape and in the other the dealer does not care whether it ever works or not after the sale is made.

Then there is another feature. We, here at the News, receive photographs and descriptions of houses, all of which we want and ask to have sent in, but how often do these theatre men include photographs of their Projection Rooms? Ever? Practically never. This is wrong and only to prove that these same men who are so progressive in many ways are either thoughtless or have neglected or overlooked that one feature which is responsible for "THE PICTURE ON THE SCREEN"—the one thing they have to sell the public. Let us hope that in future these photographs will be taken and sent in and also let us hope that the Theatre Managers and Owners themselves, as well as the Projectionists, will write in to us and ask us for all the help they need in outfitting or improving the equipment of their Projection Rooms or solving any problem which may arise.

We are conceited enough to think that we can be of help in this regard as well as giving valuable information on running the theatre in general.

E. K. Gillett.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus

By Dr. Hermann Kellner

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Cleveland, O., Nov. 20, 1918.]

Introductory

THE following paper contains nothing with which the optical engineer is not familiar. I have, therefore, to apologize for repeating well - known facts. Most of the subject matter that I am able to present is given in a more or less connected form in other papers, printed in our Transactions and elsewhere. I undertook this review at the request of several members of our Society who felt that there was nowhere available a discussion in simple language of the optics of the condenser from the optical standpoint, and which brought out the possibilities and limitations of the subject. I have confined myself in the following strictly to conditions which are reproducible. Effects which may be traced to mistreatment of the apparatus had to be left out of consideration.

Fundamentals of Optical Projection

Light radiates from every point of a source in all directions. If we had a very intense and at the same time cold, point-shaped source, projection would be possible without any additional optical apparatus. Supposing we have such a source S separated by the distance d from a stencil T and at a distance d' from the projection screen. The size of the image on the screen would be $\frac{d'}{d}$ times the actual size of the stencil, or, differently expressed, the magnification $M = \frac{d'}{d}$. The magnification may be changed in two ways:

(a) By keeping the projection distance d' constant and varying the distance between source and stencil.

(b) By keeping the distance d the same and varying the projection distance.

The illumination on the screen is more favorable with the shorter projection distance, because a greater amount of the radiation from the source is utilized. The illumination in the center of the field is inversely proportional to the square of the distance d' of the screen from the source. For points outside of the center of the projection field the illumination is less than in the center. If a be the angle from the source to a point of the field distant the length b from the center, the illumination I at the point will be proportional to the cosine times the square of the sine of a and inversely proportional to the square of the distance from the center of the field to the point, i. e.,

$$I = \frac{\cos a \times \sin^2 a}{b^2}$$

To utilize more of the radiation from the source, we apply a condensing system which takes in as large as possible a solid angle of the radiation from the source, and forms an image of this source at which the rays forming this image meet under a smaller angle, or, more generally speaking, under an angle which is more suitable to the particular conditions of the case than the large angle of radiation taken in by the condenser.

By combining an optically perfect condenser, i. e., a condenser which forms a point-shaped image, with a point-shaped source of great intensity, a very simple and perfect projection apparatus could be realized, which would need no projection lens and which would utilize a greater percentage of the energy radiating from the source than the condenserless arrangement. For example: In Fig. 2, S may be a point-shaped source and the distance between S and the condenser C may be shorter than the distance from the image of the source S' to C, so that the aperture of the condenser appears under a greater solid angle from the light source than from its image. If we assume the geometrical conditions on the image side of the condenser (location of stencil, angle under which the boundary rays meet at the image, projection distance, etc.) the same as the conditions in Fig. 1, we will have a projected image of the same size, but with better illumination, because a greater solid angle of the radiation is intercepted by the condenser and made useful for the projection than is intercepted by the stencil in Fig. 1.

The image S' can be considered in its effects as a real light source, with the difference that it radiates only within a limited solid angle, the apex of which is S' and whose base is the surface of the condenser.

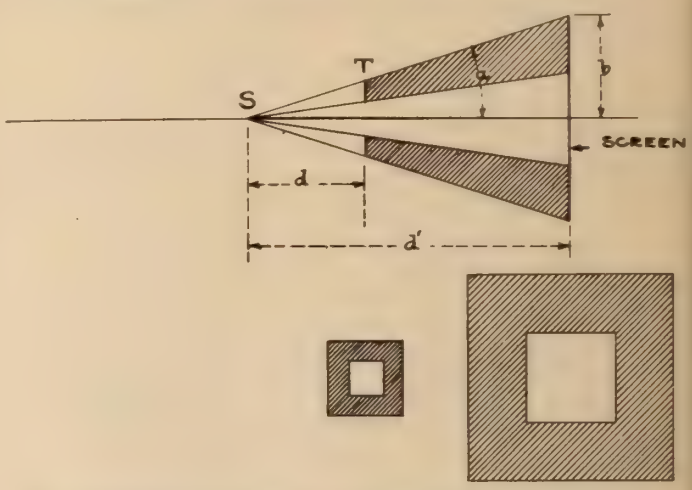

Fig. 1—Projection of the stencil, T, by means of a point-shaped source, S. The picture on the screen is the shadow of the stencil

The amount of radiation taken in by the condenser is proportional to the square of the sine of the angle a between the optical axis and the ray through the margin of the condenser (which is half of the total angle taken in by the condenser). If, for instance, the size of the stencil in Fig. 1 were 3 x 2¾ inches, the diagonal would be with close enough approximation equal to 4 inches. Assuming a magnification of 10 at a projection distance of 113.4 inches, the resulting useful angle of radiation at the source would be 20°. If, by using a condenser of suitable power, we intercept a larger angle of radiation, while keeping the angle at the image the same, we will have an increase of illumination proportional to the square of the sine of half the angle at the source. The amount of such possible increase may be seen from the following table:

Full angle, $2a$, at source	Half angle, a, at source	sin a	$\sin^2 a$
20°	10°	0.174	0.03
40°	20°	0.342	0.12
60°	30°	0.500	0.25
80°	40°	0.648	0.42
100°	50°	0.766	0.59
120°	60°	0.866	0.75

If we increase the angle a in our example from 10° to 20°, 30°, 40°, we shall have a relative illumination on the screen proportional to 0.12, 0.25, 0.42 against 0.03, or, taking the latter as unit, an increase of illumination of 4 times, 8.3 times, 14 times over the original case. This consideration does not take into account the light lost by absorption and reflection in passing through the condenser.

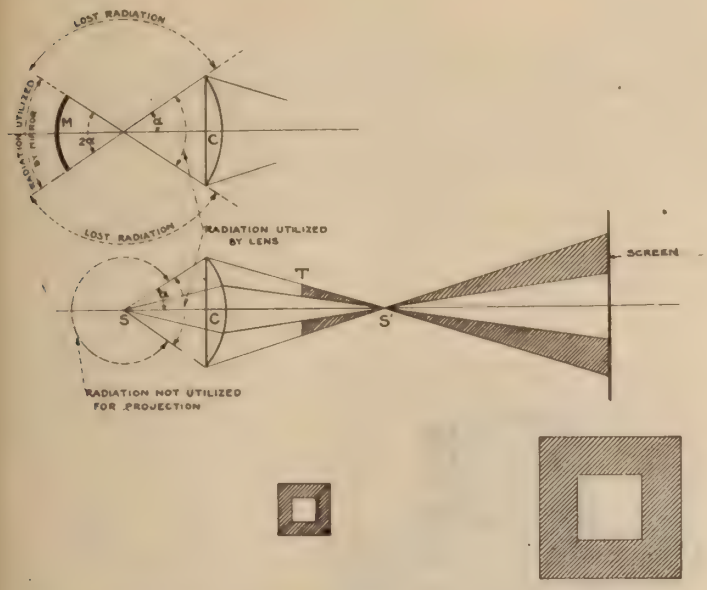

Fig. 2—Illumination on screen increased by interposing an optically perfect condenser, C, thereby utilizing a greater solid angle of the radiation from source, S, in projecting a picture of the same size as in Fig. 1. Upper figure shows quantity of light reaching condenser, C, at least doubled, theoretically, by placing a spherical mirror behind source, S, with its center of curvature coincident with source

Even though, by use of the condenser, we utilize a greater amount of radiation than without it, we must be aware of the fact that the greatest part of the radiation from the source is lost, as indicated in Fig. 2, because the radiation within the solid angle intercepted by the condenser is only a small portion of the total amount which the source sends out in all directions. For optical reasons it is impossible to increase the diameter of the condenser very much beyond a size which takes in an angle of about 90°.

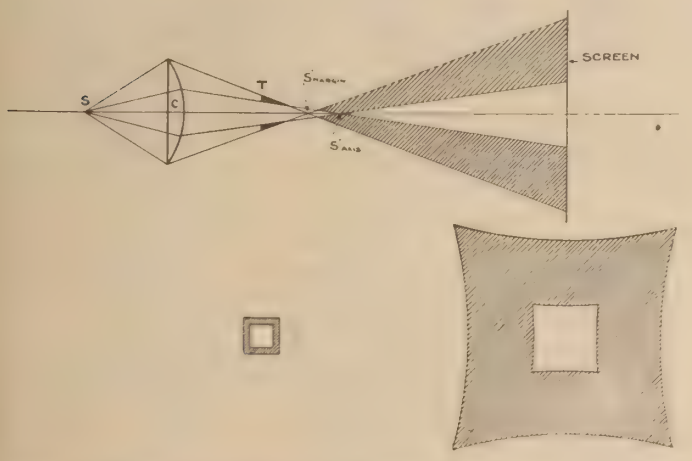

Fig. 3—Projection by means of point-shaped source and spherically uncorrected condenser. Rays passing through margin of condenser intersect axis at S^1 margin, nearer condenser and under greater angle than rays passing through condenser near axis, which latter intersect axis at S^1 axis. Parts near margin of object, T, are imaged with higher magnification than parts near the axis—the result being "cushion shaped" distortion of the projected picture

The radiation within this angle can be increased considerably by placing a cancave mirror M behind the source, so that its center of curvature lies in the source, Fig. 2. Assuming no loss of light by reflection on the mirror, or by passing through the source, the quantity of light reaching the condenser should be doubled by this expedient.

The conditions so far assumed do not exist in practice because neither the condenser is optically perfect nor the source point shaped. We shall consider:

(A) An Imperfect Condenser in Combination with a Point Shaped Source, and understand by the term imperfect nothing due to careless making of the condenser, but rather those imperfections in performance which are due to the nature of a simple lens system. These are spherical and chromatic aberrations. On account of the former, the different zones of the condenser will produce a series of images of the source; the nearer the zone to the margin, the nearer to the condenser the image produced by it: while with a spherically corrected condenser the rays from all the different zones of the condenser go through the same point, or the hollow cones of light formed by the circumference of the zone as base line have the same apex. These cones have different apices with a spherically uncorrected condenser, the apices lying the nearer the condenser lens the greater the diameter of the zone. The rays which pass through the margin of the condenser will, therefore, intersect the axis at S' margin, Fig. 3, under a greater angle than the corresponding rays in the arrangement with the perfect condenser. This increase of the angles will be small for rays passing near the center of the condenser, and will become greater the nearer the zone which produces the image lies to the margin of the lens. The effect is that the marginal parts of the field are imaged under a greater magnification than the center of the field. The image of a square object will therefore show what is termed cushion shaped distortion.

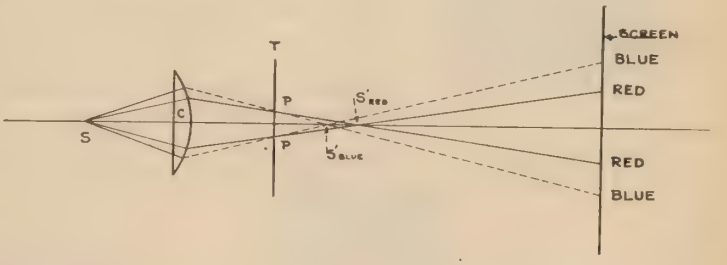

Fig. 4—Projection of transparent point, P, of stencil, T, by chromatically uncorrected condenser. Image of source, S, formed by blue ray passing through P lies nearer to condenser than image formed by red ray through P. Blue image on screen therefore lies farther from center of field than red image

On account of chromatic aberration, an uncorrected lens will produce images for the different colors composing the white light of the source at different distances from the condenser; the blue image being nearest to the lens, the green, yellow, red, etc., lying at greater distances in the sequence given. For each color, therefore, an image will be produced in the same way as shown in the previous paragraph, these images also having spherical aberration and lying at different distances from the lens. We have to imagine the blue rays forming a cone of the same general shape as just shown, the green ones another one, a little more pointed, because the green image lies farther away from the lens, the red rays forming a still more pointed cone, and so on. The precise shape of such a cone is later illustrated in Fig. 7. A point of a stencil interposed in this multitude of cones will be projected by the red, green, blue, etc., rays at different places on the screen, because these differently colored rays intersect the optical axis at different places and under different angles. Fig. 4 shows how the blue component of a white ray drawn to pass through the margin of the lens, and the red component of another white ray passing nearer to the axis, go through the transparent point P of the stencil. The red ray projects the object point at "red" and blue ray at "blue." The green and yellow images will lie between the red and blue ones, and in place of a white image we will have a series of colored ones forming a spectrum. The length of this spectrum is a minimum when the stencil is located near the condenser, and increases as the stencil moves towards the image of the source. The amount of this chromatic aberration depends

PERFECTED PROJECTION

THE automatic self-adjustment of the DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector is only one small feature of many which witness to its completeness. No detail has been overlooked in making the DeVry the strongest, the lightest, and the most compact self-contained projector on the market. It is without a single separate part.

Adopted by the United States Government in all Departments where motion pictures are used, and by the American Red Cross, at home and abroad. Used also in all Y. M. C. A. work, on transports, at home and "over there."

Frames, Easels, Rails, Grilles, Signs, Choppers, Kick Plates, Door Bars

We manufacture the frames in various finishes which do not require polishing only upon the power of the lens, its aperture, and the magnification under which the source is imaged; in other words, if the location of the source and its image with reference to the lens and the angle a are given, the amount of chromatic aberration is determined. The thickness of the lenses has no influence upon it.

The "Fulco Four" for Projectionists

THROUGH the kindness of the E. E. Fulton Company, 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago, Ill., manufacturers of the well-known line of Fulco Products for use in motion picture theatres and operating rooms, we have just received for inspection a new item of their manufacture, the "Fulco Four," a useful set of tools for the projectionist.

This special tool outfit was evolved as the result of suggestions from an experienced repair man, and comprises tools especially designed for the particular work of the projectionist. The "Fulco Four" will prove handy to the projectionist who takes pride in the quality of his performance, and useful in case of emergency.

The "Fulco Four"

As the accompanying illustration shows, the "Fulco Four" consists of a neat military canvas roll, which is taped around the edges and contains the following tools, each held in place by a separate loop (1) Oil-Ejector; (2) V-Block; (3) Set of Punches for Driving Taper Pins; (4) Split Screw Driver.

The Oil-Ejector is a sort of force-pump for forcing oil or grease into the intermittent casings of projecting machines, and it may also be used to advantage in cleaning out the bearings on the machines, as it will shoot a forceful stream of gasoline or kerosene. It is made entirely of brass and heavy brass tubing, and finished in polished nickel.

The V-Block is made of cold rolled steel, and is case-hardened, thus preventing it from becoming easily dented by hammer blows. It is used when removing, or driving, taper-pins in intermittent sprockets and other shafts, and prevents springing the parts when inserting or removing pins. The Set of Punches used with the V-Block comprises four punches of sizes corresponding to the various pins used on projector mechanisms. These punches are made of drill-rod, hardened, tempered and nickel plated, and have knurled hand grips.

The Split Screw Driver, which completes the set, is a mighty useful tool. It is a screw driver with a cleft blade, one side of which is spring-tempered, so that when the blade is applied to the slot of a screw head, the screw will be held in place on the end of the blade, and may be readily put into place no matter if the screw hole is in an inaccessible position. This split screw driver is also nickel plated and has a knurled grip.

The price of the "Fulco Four" tool outfit, as above described, is $5.00, and this neat tool kit will undoubtedly find favor with the projectionists. The tools contained in the set are all "Fulco" specialties, and any of them may be purchased separately by those not desirous of securing the "Fulco Four" complete. The tools are sold separately at the following prices: Oil-Ejector, $2.50; V-Block, $1.25; Set of Four Punches, 50 cents; Split Screw Driver, 75 cents.

Swaab Employs Novel Method of Promoting Simplex Sales

THE latest issue of the Monthly Messenger issued by Lewis M. Swaab, Philadelphia, exclusive distributor for the Simplex products in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, is a particularly attractive number. One full page is devoted to a prospectus of Mr. Swaab's new organization, which he humorously designates the "Simplex Beneficial Association." After the readers of his house-organ are told that they have been invited to join, the aim and objects of the Association are set forth as follows:

"To benefit the exhibitor by advocating the best machines and accessories for his theatre.

"To benefit the operator by giving him a machine that is at once fool-proof, fireproof, with perfect projection and maximum efficiency with a minimum of trouble.

"To benefit the public by giving them clear, steady, flickerless pictures, not occasionally, but all the time. In addition to the aforegoing:

"To benefit the exhibitor by cutting down his repair bills so as to almost make them nil. To avoid sudden breakdowns by the aid of gears cut out of hardened steel. To permit the operator to see every movement of his machine while in operation by the aid of the plate glass windows in the magazines and mechanism, the working parts of his machine made of tool steel, the non-breaking condenser system and the extraordinary advantages of the cooling system in the lamphouse, admitting the maximum ventilation, and other valuable points almost too numerous to mention.

"There are no dues and no assessments. The membership is unlimited and open to all.

"The Association invites every thinking person to investigate its mode of business procedure and refers to any bank and trust company as to its financial standing. It would require too much space to give a list of its membership. One of the principal members is the United States Government, which owns hundreds of Simplex machines."

Then follows a partial list of the principal Simplex installations on Government war vessels, army posts, federal departments, training camps, hospitals, and industrial organizations. After setting forth the declaration of principles of the benefit society and a very striking array of places where the Simplex Projectors are now in use, there appears this whimsical appeal, "Come on and belong."

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Notice! Anti-Misframe League Members

Membership cards are now ready and are being sent out as fast as possible. There are a number of operators, however, who have neglected to send in the desired information. If you will fill out the blank and mail to this office, button and membership card will be forwarded.

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

Prove Their Merit for Alternating Current Projection

White A. C. Special Carbons have made good the claims made for them from the very day they were placed on the market. Hundreds of voluntary letters from all parts of the country testify to that fact. These carbons have met the requirements so exactly that they are now the standard of alternating current carbons.

White A. C. Special Carbons give the penetrating, pure white, flickerless light so necessary for even screen illumination, and clear, sharply defined pictures. In using these carbons no new equipment is necessary. Simply put in a trim of the new carbons.

For Direct Current Projection

THE SILVERTIP IS THE STANDARD NEGATIVE CARBON. IT GIVES A STEADY ARC WITH MAXIMUM BRILLIANCY.

Tinting and Toning of Eastman Positive Motion Picture Film

Equipment

THE equipment necessary for systematic tinting and toning is essentially the same as that required for development, consisting of the usual tanks and racks or small drums, only it is advisable that they should be used for this purpose exclusively, and, if possible, occupy a separate room to exclude any possibility of contaminating the developing solutions by the copper or sulphiding bath, which would cause development fog immediately.

The "drum" system, on account of the expense involved in apparatus and the larger space required for manipulation, is not to be recommended for tinting and toning operations, though for operation on a small scale, a small wooden drum revolving in a shallow wooden tank is most efficient and economical.

When the tank and rack system is employed, the tanks should be of slate or other resistive material, and should have an outlet at the bottom in the form of a hard-rubber stop-cock or a plain wooden plug. The racks or drums may be of wood, but if metal pegs are employed on the racks they should be coated with acid-resisting paint, such as asphalt, since the presence of any metallic surface in the toning baths will cause contamination and effect a precipitation of sludge. The frames should not be interchanged, but kept separate either for tinting or toning, to prevent contamination of one bath with racks previously employed in another. This also applies to the small drum system. For instance, a pink tint would be ruined by using a rack which had previously been immersed in a deep blue dye-bath, unless that particular rack had been thoroughly washed. In case of delicate tinting, however, no harm is done providing the racks have been previously coated with the following waterproof varnish:

	Avoirdupois	Metric
Hard Paraffin	3½ lbs.	1600 grams
Carbon tetrachloride	10 gals.	40 liters

Before treatment it is preferable to immerse the racks which have been previously used for developing, in a 1 per cent solution of hydrochloric acid for two or three minutes, wash for fifteen minutes and thoroughly dry. The well-dried racks are then dipped in the above solution and the excess liquid drained off, when the varnish dries almost immediately. The varnishing should be repeated at intervals.

Mixing Solutions

Developers, toning solutions and dyes should be mixed in crocks of glazed earthenware or enameled iron, using warm water where necessary and ensuring thorough solution by stirring with a wooden paddle, which should be thoroughly washed after each operation. Having thus dissolved the chemicals is as small a quantity of warm water as possible, filter through fine muslin and make up the bath with cold water, so that the final solution will be at approximately the correct temperature.

Troubles in Toning

Most difficulties met with in toning may be traced to one or more of the following causes:

Uneven Toning.

This may be due to:

a. Grease on the film. Never project film before tinting or toning.

b. Drying spots on untoned film. If possible always tint or tone film immediately after washing and before drying.

c. Examination of the film too frequently during toning causes an oxidation of the toning solution in places where the solution fails to drain from the film.

d. Insufficient or uneven washing of the film after bleaching and before toning (Tones F and G).

White Spots.

White spots are produced by particles of hypo or carbonate dust, or splashes of a solution of these, settling on the toned film. The toned image consists of silver together with more or less silver ferrocyanide and the ferrocyanides of uranium, iron and copper as the case may be. Silver ferrocyanides are soluble in a solution of sodium carbonate, strong ammonia, etc., so that the white spots indicate those parts where the toned image has been dissolved away.

Irregular white spots may also be formed if the film is imperfectly squeegeed after washing and before drying, especially if the wash water is slightly alkaline. When a spot of water on the toned film evaporates, the small amount of alkali present in the water becomes more concentrated and finally dissolves away more or less of the tone, leaving a white spot on the film.

White spots due to these causes may be prevented by immersing the film for a few seconds in a 5 per cent solution of glacial acetic acid after toning and before placing on the drying rack.

Stained Highlights.

Are caused by:

a. Traces of fog on the film before toning.

b. An improperly compounded toning bath. All solutions when new should be perfectly clear.

c. Premature exhaustion of the bath. This is due either to the action of light or to the presence of some metal in the tank on the shape of screw heads, faucets, pins, etc., which gather the tone and cause the formation of sludge.

It is important to keep all solutions containing potassium ferricyanide exposed as little as possible to daylight, to use only wooden racks with wooden pegs, and to cover all metal parts very carefully with acid resisting paint.

d. In dye-toning, stained highlights are due either to insufficient washing after toning with copper, too strong a dye-bath, or an incorrect amount of acid in the dye-bath.

Recent Patents of Interest to Cinematographers

AMONG the United States patents granted within recent months the following will probably be of interest to cinematographers and others interested in the technique of motion picture production.

No. 1,275,249—R. F. Hlavatay,
Finding and Focussing Means

Consists of a mirror in the form of a segment of a circle, which is mounted in a cine camera between lens and film, and inclined at 45° to the axis of the lens. The mirror is rotated by a train of gears and throws an image into a view-finder telescope. The scene and action being photographed may thus be observed while the camera is in operation.

No. 1,276,838—A. Wayditch,
Kinetoscope for Projecting Sterescopic Motion Pictures

Uses a film containing left-and right-eye images successively arranged, these being projected in pairs to the screen by a quadruple projection lens in combination with a shutter of special type which allows projection through alternate pairs of the projection lenses.

No. 1,279,276—J. I. Crabtree,
Tinting Process and Product Thereof

Describes a cheap and effective method of tinting films by the use of inorganic coloring matter in place of comparatively expensive organic dyes.

No. 1,282,829—A. Hernandez-Mejia,
Process of Making Photographic Stereoscopic Transparencies

This method is particularly adapted for us with double-coated positive film, and a plastic or bas-relief appearance is secured in the positive as a result of carrying into practice the effect noted when a negative, and a positive transparency printed therefrom, are superimposed and then shifted slightly out of register.

Kodak Co. Erecting Factory for Production of Photographic Gelatine

A HUGE new factory for the manufacture of gelatine is under way by the Eastman Kodak Company near its Kodak Park plant in Rochester, N. Y. The new building will cover a site 600 by 400 in size, will be three stories in height and will turn out four times as much gelatine as the present facilities. The manufacture of this product was started only with the severance of commercial relations with Germany, from where most of the product had been obtained before the war. The new factory will be equipped to supply a much larger quantity than was ever available before. It is to be situated just west of Dewey avenue.

Other building activities of the company include the erection of a big warehouse for the storage of film. A new overflow office building also is under construction to house the medical and other offices of the company, which at present are not provided for. Although the Eastman company has not been a "war industry," its constantly growing business is attested by the frequency with which new manufacturing or storage facilities are made necessary.

Indianapolis Projectionists' License Fees Refunded

PROJECTIONISTS in Indianapolis have been notified to obtain the refund on their occupational license fees by application at the office of the city controller. Sixty projectionists who were taxed under a city ordinance appealed to the courts and had the ordinance declared invalid. Each is entitled to a refund of $2.25.

Dramatic Music in Relation to the Motion Picture

THE film director unfortunately does not, as a rule, consider music in assembling his pictures. Hence it is all the more necessary for the musical director to consider the picture in adapting his music to interpret same. "Since the mountain does not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain."

Music, as we all know, can appropriately emphasize practically every human emotion portrayed in the photoplay, and it is the place of the orchestra leader to immediately recognize all dramatic musical possibilities of the pictures. Dramatic photoplay situations are in most cases either emotional without much action or physical in which emotion is expressed in movement. In a romantic situation where love, hatred or sorrow are shown in facial registration with little or no bodily movement, dramatic maestosos, lentos, adagios or andantes are employed, while in scenes of physical violence or agitation, agitatos, hurries and furiosos are the proper musical mediums of expression.

There is no doubt that the most important point for the orchestra leader is to acquire an appropriate musical library. We are aware of the fact that real dramatic compositions are hard to obtain. We also know that many publications are advertised as dramatic compositions, but turn out to be dramatic in name only and almost anything in character. Realizing this situation, we consider it our duty to call the attention of our readers to a list of dramatic compositions which I personally, as Musical Editor of these columns, have used to great advantage. Everyone of the following compositions are absolutely suitable to portray dramatic situations, and I earnestly suggest that every musician who aims to interpret the photoplay with appropriate music should avail himself, if not of the entire list, at least of a part of same.

As the first number of great dramatic value, I will mention a composition which is composed by Bach. It isn't the Bach born in Germany, but it is our American Bach, born in Milwaukee. The name of this number is "Ein Marchen," a composition opening with a dramatic maestoso for cello and bass, and finishing with a beautiful dramatic melodious movement for violins. The length of this composition is about eight minutes and the price of same is very reasonable.

"Bleeding Hearts" is a beautiful melodious composition of strong heart-interest in the first part, the second strain comprising an agitated movement of intensive dramatic character, same being composed by Sol. P. Levy.

"Schirmer's Photoplay Series," published in four volumes, is another collection of dramatic publications of exceptional merit and can be considered as a very valuable addition to the library of every earnest musician.

"Dramatic Suspense" is an extremely original dramatic composition which in its tonal construction as well as in its arrangement, gives it the distinction of being in a class by itself. This number is composed by M. Winkler and is obtainable for only 30 cents for small orchestra and piano.

The following list of compositions, which I will not describe in detail, can also be considered a very valuable asset in interpreting dramatic situations of the film:

Love Song, by Flegier.
Eva Prelude, by Massenet.
Tragic Theme, by Paul Vely.
Heartwounds, by Grieg.
Dramatic Tension No. 17, by Shepherd.
The Vampire, by Sol. P. Levy.
Rustle of Spring, by Sinding.
By the River, Romance, by Morse.
Symphonette Suite, by Irenee Berge.
Dawn of Hope, by Casella.
Dramatic Recitative, by Sol. P. Levy.
Largo from New World Symphony, by Dvorak.
Adagio Cantabile, from Sonata Pathetic, by Beethoven.
Tears, by J. S. Zamecnik.
Adoration, by Borowski.
Broken Melody, by Von Biene.
Andante Appassionato, by Castillo.
Last Spring, by Grieg.
Melody, by Friml.
Pathetic Andante, by Paul Vely.
Grave-Allegro Molto, from Sonata Pathetique, by Beethoven.
Melody, by Kretschmer.
Dramatic Andante, for suppressed emotion, by Borch.

The above mentioned compositions are only a very small part of real dramatic publications on the market, but the editor will at any time gladly give lists of any style of music to all those who will request him to do so.

THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Valse Parisienne." A very popular waltz by Lee S. Roberts is owned and published by the man who made "Missouri Waltz" the world's most famous popular melody. (Forster Music Publishing Co., 736 S. Michigan avenue, Chicago, Ill.)

2—"Some Day They're Coming Home Again." One-step arrangement of the biggest soldier song success published. By Harry Hilbert. (Carl Fischer-Witmark Orchestra and Band Department, Cooper Square, New York.)

3—"Adoration." By Felix Borowski. An orchestra arrangement of this world-famous violin solo. A number which will immediately appeal to your audience. (Carl Fisher, Cooper Square, New York.)

4—"Jealous Moon." Fox-trot. Certainly J. S. Zamenik has never scored a bigger success than with this number. Bright and tuneful, it is indeed a tinkling fox-trot. (Sam Fox Publishing Co., Cleveland, Ohio.)

5—"My Paradise." Here is a waltz which is encored time and again. Dancer leaders are enthusiastic over it. A dreamy, bewitching melody which the crowd will always whistle. (Sam Fox.)

6—"National Emblem." A national standard composition of exceptional merit by E. E. Bagley. (Walter Jacobs, 8 Bosworth street, Boston, Mass.)

7—"Dramatic Suspense." A palpitating, dramatic, emotional composition, unique in its composition, by Max Winkler. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue, New York.)

8—"Our Director." The international march hit, by F. E. Bigelow. (Walter Jacobs.)

9—"Mountain Music Suite." By that famous composer of "classics for the masses," Gaston Borch. It comprises four separate compositions, entitled "Sunrise on the Mountain," "Mountaineers' March," "Mountain Song," and "Mountain Song." (Belwin, Inc.)

10—"Yankee Tars." By John Boulton. Dedicated to every one of those glorious boys who have upheld the freedom of the seas. It is a rousing nautical march, the very essence of life on the ocean wave. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"Mysterious Nights." There will shortly be placed on the market a new and original valse dramatique. Musicians will find that in the construction and composition of this number every established custom of composition has been disregarded, but yet passionate melodies with weird appassionato interludes make together a waltz which will, we believe, when published, become an extraordinarily successful hit. (Belwin, Inc.)

12—Li'l Liza Jane." The song the soldiers are singing. The greatest one-step published. Hear Earl Fuller's Victor record of this and you will agree with us. (Sherman, Clay & Co., San Francisco, Cal.)

13—"A Rainbow from the U. S. A." The big hit of "Everything," the New York Hippodrome super-spectacle. (Feist Edition.)

14—"When I Get Back to My American Blighty." A new 6/8 number that is full of American "pep." (Feist Edition.)

Coliseum a Credit to San Francisco

SIGNIFICANT for two reasons, the dedication of the Coliseum theatre, Ninth avenue and Clement street, San Francisco, attracted a record attendance of film followers, both professional and popular, on Friday night, November 22.

First of all, the entire gross proceeds of the opening night were contributed by Samuel H. Levin, owner and manager, to the San Francisco chapter of the American Red Cross, which sponsored the dedication. Secondly, film men were particularly interested in the establishment of so substantial an amusement enterprise in such a remotely situated residential district of the city.

The Coliseum is one of the finest moving picture palaces in the country and brings the best in photoplay entertainment to the very doors of San Francisco's most exclusive residential district.

John A. Britton, chairman of the San Francisco Red Cross chapter, in making the dedicatory address heaped words of praise upon Manager Levin's head for the generous gift and wished him the fullest enjoyment of the success which a dedication in the name of so worthy a cause deserved. The various business clubs and merchants' associations of the district attended the opening, occupying loge and box sections, which they purchased at premium prices in order to swell the Red Cross receipts. Mayor James Rolph was present to represent the city.

The Coliseum is a huge pile, Gothic in architecture, occupying a prominent corner in the Park-Presidio residence district of the city. This location is several miles away from the nearest business district house of the size and character of the Coliseum supplying full orchestral and organ accompaniment for the best of film features.

Erected at a cost of over a quarter of a million dollars, the Coliseum represents the crowning achievement of Samuel H. Levin's career as a director of moving picture theatres in San Francisco. "I have sought to embody in the Coliseum every detail which from an experience of fifteen years before the moving picture public I know to be in demand," said Manager Levin in speaking of his latest project. "Many district picture houses have been in my hands," continued Mr. Levin, "but I have not been able to find an owner who would erect the distinctive kind of building which I wanted to house my ideal of a moving picture theatre—so I built it myself. This investment is unique, since the entire transaction represents the work of one man and is a monument to his faith in the industry. I have bought outright the land upon which the Coliseum is built, and have personally financed the deal in every detail."

The main facade of the Coliseum is severely simple in design, rather tending to accentuate the broad expanse of marquise and width of entrance than to elaboration of detail. The interior is suggestive of the same refinement and simplicity with the exception of the delicately traced design of the organ loft. The proscenium arch is somewhat more elaborate as is fitting for the frame of the silent stage upon which are to be enacted the masterpieces for which the theatre was built. A heavy plush curtain drapes the screen when the stage is utilized for musical acts which are a feature of every bill. The stage is given a dignified finishing touch by huge fern jars at either end and a mahogany baby grand piano at one side of the screen.

Twenty-two hundred seats constitute the capacity nf the Coliseum. Of this number 200 are loges and 100 are box seats. About 700 seats are located in the balcony.

Much of the luxury which typifies the furnishings of the Coliseum is centered on the mezzanine floor which is a spacious lounge and reception room extending across the entire front portion of the building. Comfortable divans, chairs and heavily upholstered seats are placed about the lounge which leads directly to the balcony and loge sections by means of a short incline. Here also are located the ladies' dressing and retiring rooms, free telephone booths, a miniature conservatory with playing fountain and the managerial offices.

Modern to the last detail, the Coliseum is equipped with elaborate heating, ventilating and vacuum system. In this respect the house affords the innovation of a parking station for baby, carriage and all, if the parent wishes. A nurse is in charge.

Music of a worth-while character is one of the chief attractions in the programme outlined by Mr. Levin. In addition to a full string orchestra, the Coliseum has a Robert-Morton organ, installed by the American Photo Player Company. This instrument is the latest organ built by the Photo Player people for the reproduction of symphonic orchestral tones.

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 1, 1918.

ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING (PATHE) RUSSELL (DEC. 1)
(Six Parts).....NOV. 30
"Far below the regular William Russell standard."—M. P. News.

ANGEL CHILD (HODKINSON) CLIFFORD (SEPT. 9).....SEPT. 7
"Pleasing light entertainment in this picture."—M. P. News.

APPEARANCE OF EVIL, THE (WORLD) ELVIDGE (OCT. 7).OCT. 5
"Excellent suspense runs straight through."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average picture four days."

ATOM, THE (TRIANGLE) PAULINE STARKE (SEPT. 15)..SEPT. 21
"This is just an average subject."—M. P. News.

BATTLING JANE (PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH(OCT. 6).OCT. 19
"Story above average, plot lacks body; intelligent handling."—M. P. News."
Exhibitor Comment—"Just a fair attraction." "Very poor picture. Nothing to it." "Good picture and star is bound to become popular if cast right."
Consensus—"Fair picture with ordinary drawing powers."

BEANS (BLUEBIRD) EDITH ROBERTS (SEPT. 16).....SEPT. 14
"Swift moving comedy drama with fine suspense."——M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture but business was poor." "Just ordinary. Title kills drawing power."
Consensus—"Good picture with fine drawing power."

BEHIND THE LINES IN ITALY (KLEINE) (OCT. 7).....OCT. 5
(Six Parts)
"Interesting film and shows what Italians are doing in industrial way."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"On second and last week, average business; picture good educational, attracting big percentage of Italians."

BELLS, THE (PATHE) FRANK KEENAN (NOV. 17).....OCT. 5

"Attracted men and children but women were not interested. Good picture." "Some picture, Boys." "Mix is made if they give him productions like this. Broke house records." "On two-day run in good class suburban house the business much better second day."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with very strong drawing powers, sure to please."

MODERN LOVE (UNIVERSAL) MAE MURRAY (SEPT. 9).SEPT. 14
(Six Parts)
"A good picture that should entertain any kind of an audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Extra big business." "Fine picture. Average business."
Consensus—"Fine picture with good drawing power."

MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING (PATHE) FISHER (SEPT. 28).SEPT. 28
"Absurd, but joyfulness will please your audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture lacks punch. Good business first day, top notch second day—Saturday and Sunday—when public will patronize 'any old picture.' Fisher too old for these 'peaches and cream' holes. Her work in 'The Devil's Assistant' has not been equaled since. Better try another along those lines." "Good." "Good picture."
Consensus—"A light picture with just fair drawing qualities."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

MY COUSIN (ARTCRAFT) ENRICO CARUSO (NOV. 17)....DEC. 7
"Caruso is an instant success and the story is good."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Utterly impossible." "No drawing power at all. Very good picture." "Star not acceptable as motion picture actor to public." "Booked for a week, took it off after run four days. Caruso may be good for New York but not for such weak stories."
Consensus—Ordinary picture with just fair drawing powers."

MYSTERY GIRL, THE (PARAMOUNT) CLAYTON (DEC. 27).DEC. 7
"One for the imagination with lots of real entertainment."—M. P. News.

MYSTIC FACES (TRIANGLE) JACK ABBE (SEPT. 8).....SEPT. 14
"Ranks among best Triangles. Clean, wholesome, and suitable for all." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

NARROW PATH, THE (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (DEC. 15)..DEC. 7
"One of the 'wronged girls' kind with no appeal to emotions."—M. P. News.

NYMPH OF THE FOOTHILLS, A (VITA) LESLIE (SEPT. 9).SEPT. 14
"Well constructed melodrama that will appeal to all classes."—M. P. News.

ON THE JUMP (FOX) GEORGE WALSH (OCT. 6).....OCT. 19
(Six Parts)
"Clean picture with acrobatic stunts that thrill."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Extra big. A crackerjack to open up with after epidemic." "Star unusually good drawing card but fell down this time." "Pleased. Big business." "Average business." "Average."
Consensus—"A production of fast action and star that draws them in."

ONE WOMAN, THE (SELECT) (NOV. 16).....NOV. 30
(Six Parts)
"Production excellent; entertainment depends on politics."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Excellent cast. The theme of the story 'Free Love' will kill it for some exhibitors."

OUT OF A CLEAR SKY (PARAMOUNT) CLARK (SEPT. 15).OCT. 5
"This attraction is worth an extended engagement."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good." "Went good. Average business for three days." "Big business to average in four-day run." "The director had something else on his mind and the story was poor." "Average business seven days." "Good film and good star wasted in this production. 'Fatty' saved the day for us." "Good picture." "Clark a favorite, but picture not up to her usual standard." "Weak picture. Few more and no more Marguerite."

PALS FIRST (SCR. CLA.-METRO) LOCKWOOD (OCT. 13)..OCT. 5
"Best Lockwood offering in a long time. Everybody will like it."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A real knockout, biggest business we ever had and a classy picture." "One of the very best." "Very good. Will repeat."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with wonderful drawing power."

PECK'S BAD GIRL (GOLDWYN) NORMAND (SEPT. 9)....SEPT. 28
"Star appears in the kind of subject that exhibitors have demanded." M. P. News.
Consensus—"Excellent production with good drawing powers."

PERFECT LADY, A (GOLDWYN) KENNEDY (DEC. 8).....DEC. 14
"Star blends the tear and the smile delightfully."—M. P. News.

PRETENDER, THE (TRIANGLE) WM. DESMOND (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Star registers good in clean Western picture."—M. P. News.

PRISONERS OF THE PINES (HOD) KERRIGAN (SEPT. 16).SEPT. 14
"This is just a clean average picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Poor picture. Receipts dropped each day on a four-day run."

PRIVATE PEAT (ARTCRAFT) HAROLD R. PEAT (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Faithful treatment of a famous book should put this over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. Out of the ordinary." "Bad business. People care nothing for war pictures now." "Pleased but patrons were a little disappointed." "Patrons walked out on this."
Consensus—"Good production with good drawing powers."

PRODIGAL WIFE (SCREENCRAFT) BOLAND (DEC. 22)..DEC. 14
(Six Parts)
"Sex play considered remarkable by interviewer."—M. P. News.

PRUSSIAN CUR, THE (FOX) MIRIAM COOPER (SEPT. 1)..SEPT. 7
(Seven Parts)
"A good production that will please American audiences."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Admission increased from twenty-five to fifty cents. Turned them away afternoons and evenings." "Only fair propaganda picture. Party playing Kaiser and party playing Wilson very rotten. Worst character for Kaiser ever seen." "Good money getter under normal conditions. People still afraid of 'Flu.' Never heard more applause in house on any picture." "Poorly constructed. Lacks continuity." "Fairly good but didn't draw."
Consensus—"Good topical production with big drawing powers in most sections."

QUEEN OF HEARTS (FOX) VIRGINIA PEARSON (SEPT. 15).OCT. 5
"Murder gives basis for strong dramatic picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good program. Fair business." "Pearson is a dead one."

QUEEN OF THE SEA (FOX) KELLERMANN (SEPT. 1)...SEPT. 14
"Beauty—of form and nature—shown here aplenty."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Usual Kellermann stuff, same as her other two pictures. Fine photography, etc., that lets it out. Only average business." "What Foch did to Hindenburg we did to our opposition with 'Queen of the Sea.'" "Came good first day but did not hold up. Picture is a pretty thing. That's all."
Consensus—"Good production that draws big in most sections."

Gives You All Data on the Pictures

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

RAINBOW TRAIL, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM (OCT.13).OCT. 5
(Six Parts)
" Farnum scores again in Zane Grey sequel to ' Riders of the Purple Sage.' "—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Great picture, to great business." " Not as good as ' Purple Sage.' Over 1,000 feet of repeat scenes from ' Riders of the Purple Sage.' Advertising issued is very misleading. Farnum saves it." " Here is a real star in a real production." " Average business."
Consensus—" Excellent production with strong drawing powers."

RECKONING DAY, THE (TRIANGLE) BENNETT (NOV. 17).NOV. 2
" Snappy action to this tale of those familiar German spies."—M. P. News.

RETURN OF MARY, THE (METRO) ALLISON (SEPT. 23)..OCT. 12
" The quality of this program offering does not exceed average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Average business three days." " Pretty love story but May Allison will never make a star." " Very good." " Above average."
Consensus—" Just fair as a picture with just about average drawing powers."

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE (FOX) FARNUM (SEPT.1).SEPT. 21
(Seven Parts)
" This picture will surely appeal to those who like Western photoplays." —M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" One of Farnum's best." " Extra big four days." " Great. Extra big four days. Going to have a return engagement." " Big Bill's best. It has everything; story, star, director, photography and punch. Wonderful." " Well liked." " Opened average and closed extra big in four days' run. Appeals to young and old." " Farnum is at his best and picture more than pleased. It was a great picture." " Excellent picture. Big business two days." " A very fine picture."
Consensus—" A most excellent and unusual production with wonderful drawing powers."

ROAD TO FRANCE, THE (WORLD) BLACKWELL (Oct. 14).OCT. 12
(Seven Parts)
" Absurd melodrama but title should draw the crowds in."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Other than patriotic sentiment this picture has not much to recommend." " An ordinary melodrama with some extra good shipbuilding scenes. Would have been better in five reels. Business so-so." " Great, went over big, first show after ' Flu ' ban was lifted."
Consensus—" Just a fair picture with good drawing power in some sections."

ROMANCE OF TARZAN, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) ELMO LINCOLN (OCT. 13) .....NOV. 2
" Loads of action and thrills make this fitting sequel to ' Tarzan of the Apes.' "—M. P. News.

" Not a bad picture. It entertains under a handicap."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Average business."

SECRET STRINGS (METRO) OLIVE TELL (OCT. 7).....OCT. 26
" Interesting plot. A crook story that should not fail to please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" A very pleasing and intensely interesting picture." " Good picture. Star is new. Business is bad." " Good program picture."
Consensus—" Fine picture with good drawing powers."

SET FREE (BLUEBIRD) EDITH ROBERTS (DEC. 16)....NOV. 16
" Light romantic drama with lots of entertainment."—M. P. News.

SHE DEVIL, THE (FOX) THEDA BARA (DEC. 1).....NOV. 9
(Six Parts)
" This story is not suited to Bara's style."—M. P. News.

SHE HIRED A HUSBAND (BLUEBIRD) DEAN (DEC. 2)..NOV. 16
" Subject is not up to star's mark but should please generally."—M. P. News.

SHOULDER ARMS (FIRST NATIONAL) CHAPLIN (OCT. 20).NOV. 2
(Three Reels)
" Chaplin plus a timely subject. What more can you ask?"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Extra big business seven days." " Extra big business for one week." " Extra big business." " Extra big."
Consensus—" Great picture with tremendous drawing powers."

SILENT WOMAN, THE (METRO) EDITH STOREY (SEPT.2).SEPT. 14
" Star gets good opportunity in strong drama."—M. P. News.

FLASHBACKS

Individual Opinions on Earlier Releases Received During the Past Week

"The Vamp" (Paramount)—"Average business."

"We Can't Have Everything"—"Big to extra big business."

"The Savage Woman" (Clara Kimball Young)—"Star did remarkably good work but we don't think it's just the sort of play the public likes. Stick to 'sassiety' stuff, Clara."

"A Pair of Silk Stockings" (Select)—"Dandy picture and Constance Talmadge demonstrated she is one of the best comediennes on the screen."

"Petticoats and Politics" (Anita King)—"Only drew fair. Rain. And star not well known or played up here.

"Tempered Steel" (First National-Petrova)—"Average business."

"Empty Pockets" (First National)—"Average."

"Eyes of the World"—"Swell picture. Real production." "Real picture."

"On the Quiet" (Paramount)—"Rotten. Barrymore always a loser."

"Lawless Love" (Fox)—"Good picture to average business."

"The Girl from Bohemia" (Pathe)—"Castle draws well."

"The Source" (Paramount)—"Fairly good picture. Star well liked."

"True Blue" (Fox)—"Good Farnum picture. People seem to like his style of work."

"Money Mad" (Goldwyn)—"Fair picture to big business."

"Soul for Sale" (Jewel)—"Extra big business."

"The Vamp" (Paramount)—"Average business."

"The First Law" (Pathe)—"Castle draws but poor story. Certainly not worth a two-day run."

"Scandal Mongers" (Bluebird)—"Good, but re-issues should not be put over as new pictures."

"The Knife"—"Return engagement. Just satisfied."

"Up the Road With Sally"—"Star growing more popular every day. Picture Class A-1."

"Garden of Allah" (Selig-State Rights)—"Great picture. Wonderful."

"Blindfolded" (Paralta)—"Fair picture to average business."

"Hell Bent" (Universal)—"Good western feature. Five reels would have been just as good as six."

"THE ROAD THROUGH THE DARK"—SELECT

Moral Question Raised in Story That Looks Worthy

THE main object of this story is to show that, in order to save women and children from massacre, the heroine, a young French girl, delivers herself to a German Commander; later, taking advantage of her privileged position, she transmits to the Allies valuable information.

Owing to the nature of the theme and its manner of presentation, you can readily see that the spectator is placed in a rather tight corner; he has to do one of two things, either to sanction the heroine's conduct on patriotic grounds, or else condemn it and run the risk of being thought of as unpatriotic.

Worthy as the object of the story is, it will fail, I fear, to win universal sympathy on account of the moral question involved. It is true, in the past, such themes have been successfully embodied in pictures. Almost invariably, however, the heroine was shown as having been forced into such a predicament; while, in this case, it is put up for her to decide, her refusal, of course, meaning torture to innocent human beings.

Perhaps such incidents have occurred in real life during this war—no one may dispute that. And he is a heartless man who would condemn a woman for, under similar circumstances, taking the same action. But in pictures is different; everybody knows that the characters obey the author's bidding.

The logic of the story in many of the situations is not such that we would become exultant over it. —Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Directed by Edmund Mortimer.

THE STORY

Gabrielle Jardee, a French girl, has fallen in love with John Morgan, an American. Her father wishes her to marry a Frenchman, and, with her brother and sister, sends her away from Paris to break up the affair. They go to visit their aunt, Madame Le Coutier, in a little village on the Meuse.

The war comes. The village is invaded by the Germans. Gabrielle's brother, sister and aunt are shot by the drunken soldiers. She is offered shelter in the personal quarters of the Kommandant, Prince Karl of Streilitz. Prince Karl tells her that if she will give herself to him he will punish the rioters and save the town. To save the people of the town, Gabrielle becomes the French mistress of the German prince, scorned by all the villagers, for whom she has killed her soul to save.

In time Karl is transferred to the Intelligence Department in Berlin. He takes Gabrielle with him, at her request. One night he gives a formal banquet. Gabrielle excuses herself, searches his room, and confiscates some strategic papers. Karl learns of her duplicity and in the ensuing struggle she kills him. She escapes to France, where she gives valuable information to the council of Allied Intelligence who are meeting in Paris, and where she again meets John, who tells her he still loves her.

AD TALK

Clara Kimball Young, who will be seen at the ——— theatre, on ———, in "The Road Through the Dark," does not depart from her superb type of emotional acting in this picture. In fact, if possible, she is better.

In it she takes the part of a young French girl who falls in love with an American. In order to keep them from marrying, her father sends her to the home of her aunt, who lives in a little village on the Meuse. The first few months of the war, which comes soon after her removal to the home of her aunt, finds her a captive. She has become the companion of a German officer in order to save the lives of a townful of people. It is the girl's associations with the officer, and the events which follow, with her as a spy for France, that furnish the plot for the story. It is a thrilling tale, and one in which Miss Young appears to great advantage.

Miss Young's dark beauty and exquisite form are especially adapted for the role of the vivacious and beautiful French girl which she portrays. Her superb emotions carry you with her throughout the picture.

CATCH LINES

The absorbing tale of a French girl who became the mistress of a German prince to serve her native land.

Just how much would the preservation of your country's honor be worth to you? Gabrielle Jardee gave her most priceless possession to preserve the glorious name of France.

She gave herself to a German prince that she might the better serve France.

Clara Kimball Young is brilliantly emotional in the leading role, while two of the cleverest leading men on the screen, Jack Holt and Henry Woodward, are in her support.

Gabrielle Jardee's road led through the dark—through the blackest depths—but the end of her journey held a wonderful reward.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is a war picture, its story is so strong and wholly different from the average war picture—being personal in character—you may safely advertise it strongly. Try to get an idea of the story into your advertising that your patrons may know it is not the usual war stuff. It might be better, however, to forget about the fact that it is a war picture and merely advertise the star's name and title. Certainly Miss Young is a big drawing card, while there can be little doubt as to the effectiveness of the picture's name.

"THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR"—VITAGRAPH

Light One with Fine Photography and Good Scenes

"THE BELOVED IMPOSTOR" belongs to the light class of attractions, pleasing the esthetic senses, in which pretty and handsome faces and nice women's dresses abound, and in which fine photography and real scenic beauty are more or less the predominating features. Pleasure seekers who hunt for the more virile sort of photoplays, in which rapid action of plot and strong suspense must be the chief elements, may not find in it just what they want. It is better suited, however, for the more tender-hearted kind of audiences, who abhor fights and shootings and the like.

The heroine is introduced as a dainty looking young lady, admired by many young men. She loves none of them, however. Her aunt receives a telegram that the hero, known as a woman hater because his wife had deserted him, later being killed in an accident, is to visit her. The heroine enters a wager with one of her admirers that she will win him. The bet is accepted and she sets out to accomplish the task. In the end, she wins the bet and the hero for a husband.

The heroine portrays the role of a child successfully; but whether picture goers will be convinced that she actually fools the hero or not, it is another question.

THE CAST

Betty.....Gladys Leslie
Dick Mentor.....Huntley Gordon
Hugh.....Denton Vane

Gertrude.....Gwen Williams
By Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariani.
Directed by Joseph Gleason.

THE STORY

Betty lives with her Aunt Jessie and is having her first lawn party when she hears that Dick Mentor, a confirmed woman-hater, owing to the fact that his wife deserted him with their child and shortly afterwards died, is returning to civilization from his hunting trip in Africa. Betty has never encountered a woman-hater, in her life and she makes a wager—a kiss against a horse—with Hugh, an admirer, that she will win Dick's heart. And with the arrival of Dick she lays out her plan.

Instead of as a girl eighteen years old she appears as a little miss of twelve and by reason of her sweetness and naivette completely captivates the woman-hater. He resolves that some day he will make her love him. But Betty has already learned to love Dick, much to her consternation be it said, and Hugh being a wide awake young man, realizes it also. As a consequence he prepares to pay his bet and one day leads a horse up to her, bearing the words: "To Betty, for winning her bet and Dick Mentor," inscribed on its blanket. And it is on this very day that Betty has decided to tell Dick the truth about herself.

Dick, waiting for her, sees the horse and immediately realizes what has happened. He pours scorn on Betty when she appears before him attired as a girl of her own age and announces that she is going to pay a debt to him. With that, he mounts the horse and swings her to the saddle, galloping away to the house that he has not entered since his wife deserted him. But Betty's punishment is bitter but brief. Dick struggles against the love he has for the girl, but it is too great for him, and it finally triumphs, as it does in all good romances.

AD TALK

Masquerading as a girl of twelve summers, Betty, by her childish sympathy, wins the heart of Dick Mentor, embittered against all women since his wife left him with their baby years before. This remarkable masquerade is delightfully pictured in "The Beloved Impostor," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, which will be seen in the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. Gladys Leslie, Vitagraph's irresistible "Sunshine" star, has the role of Betty, who plays this game of hearts on a wager of a kiss against a thoroughbred horse.

Betty wins her way to this strong man's affection and trust as a child and in so doing, loses her woman's heart. She fears to tell Dick lest she lose him, but he finally learns the truth and the powerful climax is where Betty, white-faced and fearful, bows to the punishment he metes out to her.

The feature was directed by Joseph Gleason, and in the supporting cast are Huntley Gordon, Denton Vane, Mrs. Hurley, Frances Grant, and Gwen Williams.

"WILD HONEY"—DE LUXE

A Different Sort of Western with a Striking Star

FOR comparison's sake "Wild Honey" ranks considerably above "The Street of Seven Stars," one of Doris Kenyon's previous pictures. It presents a western melodrama of a sort not to be seen often. It features not the usual bad man or the usual romance, but a truly unusual clash of character between a vain girl of the dance halls and a minister who comes to a western town bent on reforming it.

Miss Kenyon's youth and beauty are particularly well offset in this character. She appears to fit the part admirably well and is constantly the center of attention.

The picture has been attractively produced and the director has well succeeded in bringing out the contrast of the two principal characters. The result is a picture that remains interesting from beginning to end. The story also has a number of original twists which give the film a distinctive flavor and serve to lift it considerably from the usual sort of western feature.

Miss Kenyon receives adequate support from a large cast headed by Frank Mills.—Length, 5,675 feet. —Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Doris Kenyon will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest De Luxe photoplay, "Wild Honey," an adaptation from the magazine story by Vingie E. Roe made by Louis Joseph Vance. Miss Kenyon scored distinctly in the first two pictures made by this, her own company, namely, "The Street of Seven Stars" and "The Inn of the Blue Moon," but it is more than likely, according to advance report, that "Wild Honey" will quite overshadow these former successes.

In this picture Miss Kenyon appears as a western dance hall girl—frivolous, vain, without thought of anything but the worldly. Into the roaring hell of the western camp comes a minister, bent on conquering new fields. He proves a fighting preacher and gains the respect of the camp little by little, but Wild Honey (Miss Kenyon) delights to smirk and smile at him, disregarding his position and his mission there. The clash of these two characters forms the basis of the photoplay and the story builds to a climax of real power when the girl at last confesses her real love for the man she formerly shamed in public places.

Miss Kenyon's rare beauty, her refreshing personality, fit her admirably well in this role. And never before, it may truthfully be said, has she shown such real dramatic ability as in this picture. The story is swift moving and in its essentials differs widely from the usual type of western photoplay on which audiences of today have been "fed up." A strong supporting cast headed by Frank Mills surrounds Miss Kenyon, while the direction is of a superior order throughout.

SUGGESTIONS

Taken from the standpoint of originality, "Wild Honey" is a picture that will offer you a number of advertising possibilities, chief of which is the fact that the film is based on a clash of character—a dance hall girl on the one hand and a minister on the other. Play this situation up big and you should attract patronage. It is an angle quite different from that provided you in the usual western pictures, so make the most of it.

Miss Kenyon is admirably well suited to portray the leading part of this feature. Both in appearance and actions she fits the role to a "t." You can spread yourself on Miss Kenyon, therefore. Let them know that she gives the best performance of her career before the camera in this picture and, another point, don't fail to mention her beauty. She is, without doubt, one of the prettiest girls on the screen today. Use her pictures as profusely as possible.

Louis Joseph Vance, who made the scenario of the Roe story, is a well-known author himself, so mention his name. Frank Mills, the leading man, has also done much work before the camera and should be featured if adequate returns would be guaranteed.

CATCH LINES

Doris Kenyon appears here in the third picture made by her own company—a western story of a sort that is "different."

The thrilling clash of two characters—on the one side a vain dance hall girl of the olden West—on the other a minister of the highest ideals—a clash that is dramatic from first to last.

Would it hurt a minister's career to marry an actress? See "Wild Honey" and learn for yourself.

Doris Kenyon is one of the most beautiful girls in pictures today. See her in "Wild Honey," in which her beauty is laid in a setting equally rare.

A strong cast supports the star headed by Frank Mills, one of the best actors in the profession.

Which would it be? The dance hall or the church? The Rev. Jim Brown took his life in his hands when he ventured into the western community that laughed at religion. But he won out.

THE STORY

In the prologue of the picture Pastor Holbrook, a clergyman in a New England town, resides with his wife. They are a couple well advanced in years and live together in perfect happiness. There come to them on an afternoon, a young clergyman and an actress, who is loathe to marry the man if by so doing she will ruin his career. And so Holbrook sits down and tells them the story.

It is laid in a western mining community. To this place comes Jim Brown, a clergyman, whose aim it is to reform the rough element that constitutes the village. It is a hard road that he has to travel. The saloon and dance hall does the biggest business of the place but gradually Jim begins to make an impression and not the least does this take effect on Wild Honey, a dancing girl of the saloon. She is loved by three other men of the town. They are all jealous of each other and jealous of the minister also. Wild Honey plays with him and later, her wrath roused against him by his constant admonition to reform her scarlet ways, she does her best to humiliate him on every occasion.

"GOODBYE, BILL"—PARAMOUNT

Laugh at the Kaiser's Expense; Film Padded Some

THE chief aim of this contribution is to make fun of the Kaiser and his system of frightfulness before and during the war, until the time when he had to run away to Holland to save his "Hide." A German-American professor, resident of Hoboken, N. J., invents a mustache-fixer which, when used, gives the face a terror inspiring form. When apprized of the fact, the Kaiser and the General Staff think that that is just the thing needed to help them terrorize the other nations and thus make them submit to their frighfulness. So the professor is invited to Germany to fix the mustaches of all the German soldiers. He goes, but takes his daughter, the heroine, along with him. The hero, her sweetheart, not being able to bear the separation, enlists in the U. S. army, and works his way to Berlin, where he captures the Kaiser and saves the heroine.

The Crown Prince also is given a prominent part in the story.

The quality of the picture does not exceed the average. The whole thing could have been told in two reels with more satisfactory results. In its present form, it will give much better satisfaction where the attendance is good.

THE STORY

In preparation of a world war, Kaiser Bill Hohenzollern "the nut" and his Junker crowd are launching their campaign of frightfulness. The Kaiser is worried because his mustache, despite the efforts of Herr Tonik, the court barber, refuses to stand up at the proper ferocious angle. In fact, he looks more like the owner of a delicatessen store than the conqueror of the world, and when he learns that Herr Dresser, of Hoboken, N. J., has invented a mustache-fixer, he sends for the man. So Dresser and his daughter Elsie, the latter a real American girl with a real American sweetheart—Teddy Swift, go to Berlin. Elsie doesn't want to go, but her father compels her to make the trip, leaving Teddy disconsolate. Herr Dresser's fixer does the business for the Kaiser's mustache and German frightfulness is on at once. But it doesn't scare anyone except the German people and as the war proceeds, the Kaiser is smashed everywhere. Teddy after many disappointments, joins the American army and gets to Berlin just in time to prevent Elsie's marriage to a Prussian by order of the Kaiser. Elsie is imprisoned in a factory and rescued by Teddy. The Americans then enter Berlin and relieve the Kaiser of his military trappings, medals, mustache—everything, and the love romance of Elsie and Teddy and the tragedy of German frightfulness reach their logical denouement. The entire story is a laugh at pretension, fraud and the silly Hun superman idea.

AD TALK

What the Kaiser is and has been all the time is a bully. Press a bully to the wall and he'll quit like a yellow dog. That is the history of all bullies and it never changes. The second John Emerson-Anita Loos Production for Paramount "Good-bye, Bill!" which will be shown at the ———— next ———— takes this simple truth and makes a peculiarly delicious satirical comedy of it. Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex are the stars.

There are, probably, incipient Kaisers in every town in the country, but they don't wear gold lace and spurs and they don't have a chance to get away with it.

Bill Hohenzollern shou'd have been born in Keokuk, Iowa, or on New York's east side or in the stockyards district of Chicago. Had that happened he would have had all the superman stuff taken out of him early and there never would have been a world war. Had he been born and obliged to live where real men work and live, he would have been called "Windy" Hohenzollern and had the life kidded out of him.

He sure gets the life kidded out of him in this photoplay. For a while he struts and we see how the Germans fell for it. Everybody thought he was as bad and dangerous as he said he was. He kept bluffing and bullying until suddenly he got into a place where he had to make good and then it was—good-bye, Bill!

SUGGESTIONS

You know the value of the John Emerson-Anita Loos productions. These co-producers have had much publicity. Editors of fan and daily papers have realized their ability and have commented upon it. Furthermore, due to their affiliation with Douglas Fairbanks, the public, too, knows much of them. So don't let your hankering to bill only stars walk away with your better judgment with respect to "Good-bye, Bill." Play up the Emerson-Loos combination.

On the other hand, the producers provide you with two good stars in this picture. Miss Mason has long been a favorite and the popularity of the team was well established in "Come on In," their first Paramount picture.

As for advertising "Good-bye, Bill," first forget all about your usual war picture. This is not one of them. It is a comical and satirical thrust at the weakness of the Kaiser and his aides. So in all advertisements bring out this point. A line like "Ridicule was responsible for the political death of Napoleon III. It is the most effective weapon of the writer. The Kaiser is ridiculed out of his uniforms in 'Good-bye, Bil.' See it and enjoy the best laugh of the season," would be appropriate. You might also have a story set up in large type (newspaper style) headed "Personal revelations regarding the ex-Kaiser by Herr Tonik, for ten years barber at the royal court." Then if you have a sense of comedy or if you can get hold of someone who has use beneath a short article supposedly written by a barber and make it as ridiculous as possible.

But in whatever way you advertise the feature always bring out its comedy. This, of course, is to safeguard your own business. The war is done and people want to forget, but if you show them something ridiculously humorous, such as "Good-bye, Bill," they're going to like it. If you handle it correctly you should make a real success with it.

CATCH LINES

A wonderful quartette. John Emerson and Anita Loos—producers, Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex—stars. They gave us "Come on In." See "Good-bye, Bill." It's a last farewell (?) to the Kaiser.

A rollicking, side-splitting satire in which all the "bunk" of the Hohenzollern dynasty is exposed to full view.

Yes, this is a Kaiser picture. Quite a confession to make. But here he is treated satirically and humorously, you will have to admit. Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex do wonderful team work.

The startling expose of Herr Tonik who for ten years shaved the Kaiser and never cut him—worse luck.

Herr Tonik, who relates the narrative of "Good-bye, Bill" after serving as the royal barber for the Kaiser and Willie, his son, for ten years, is the only man who came in personal contact with these persons. If the narrative appears slightly crazy to you Americans allow for the fact that Herr Tonik went nutty after the ten years.

Ridicule is one of the most effective weapons in the world. It is the writer's gas attack, the cartoonist's machine-gun. In "Good-bye, Bill," John Emerson and Anita Loos turn this weapon against the Kaiser to wonderfully humorous effect. He writes X in front of his title now.

"LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE"—PIONEER

They Don't Make Them More Touching Than This One

YOU have heard it said, I presume, that, when people are moved to tears by a picture, they get their money's worth. If this be true, then, with so tear-producing an offering as this one is, you must ask your patrons for some change back.

While looking at this picture, you will hardly be able to keep back the tears, however hard you may try. At any rate, not if you possess a tender heart. The story is so pathetic, it digs until it reaches your most deeply buried heart-strings and sets them to vibrating and yet, the feeling it leaves in you is not that of unhappiness, but of compassion.

America loves the memory of James Whitcomb Riley. This picture is based on his poem. At the opening, it shows the poet (himself) gathering little children around him to tell them the story of little Annie; then, the screen account begins:

Little Annie's mother dies and she is placed in an orphanage. When grown a little, her cruel uncle and her heartless aunt come and claim her. At their home, she becomes a drudge. There, she knows no joys like other little children; no kindness to sustain her aching heart; not until she meets her big-hearted Dave. Threatening that miserable wretch, the uncle, with bodily harm, he takes her away from him; then he places her with a kind-hearted Squire and his good wife.

War is declared. Her Dave is called to the colors and sent to France. In a fierce battle, he dies. Broken-hearted, Little Orphant Annie dies too.

The death of the child produces no distressing effect; it is rather tenderly pathetic. It will be a wise thing, however, to use a good, clean, high class comedy with it. Avoid the slap-stick; it would be out of place here.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Who is there not acquainted with the "Little Orphant Annie" that James Whitcomb Riley immortalized in verse? Who is there not well versed in her early life of drudgery and misery with her wicked aunt and uncle, her pretty experiences with Big Dave who arranged that she may have a happy home with the Goode family? And then the quaint little way in which she amused the children of the Goode's, her adopted brothers and sisters. Who is there that doesn't remember the day that Dave goes off to war and leaves Annie alone and disconsolate? And then the report of his wounds received in battle. This was too much for the little "orphant." And so she passes on to join her mother in another world. It is one of the Hoosier poet's greatest works and it makes ideal material for the motion picture camera.

Under the guiding hand of Gilson Willets, this poem was made into a scenario and transferred to the screen under the direction of Colin Campbell. The humor and the pathos that these two have brought out in the screen version are delightful. As a result "Little Orphant Annie" looms as one of the best balanced features seen in many a day. The management of the ———— theatre feels confident that its patrons will be present on one of the days ,————, of the showing for it is not often that a picture of the equal of "Little Orphant Annie" comes to the local theatre screens.

Coleen Moore makes a sweetly appealing figure of Annie. She puts all the pathos and reality into the role and gives to the srceen a lasting character. Tom Santschi gives a masterly characterization of Dave. This actor is still remembered for his work with William Farnum in "The Spoilers," and more recently in Goldwyn pictures with Geraldine Farrar. His work here adds more laurels to his name. Others who appear are Harry Lonsdale, Eugenie Besserer and little Ben Alexander who made such a hit as one of the French children in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World."

Other features which the management will present on the same bill with "Little Orphant Annie" are ————.

THE STORY

The children of the neighborhood gather at the home of James Whitcomb Riley to listen to one of the poet's famous stories. He tells them of "Little Orphant Annie," who, when but a slip of a girl entered an orphan's home, owing to the death from overwork of her mother. Annie is blessed with an imagination and often gathers other little unfortunates together and tells them stories about witches, elfs and goblins, always ending with the warning, "And the Goblins 'ell git yer ef yer don't watch out." Then one day Annie's uncle takes her from the home and the little girl's life of drudgery and misery begins. Both Uncle and Aunt mistreat her, beat her and make life miserable for her. Then one day she meets Dave, a neighboring farmer. He at once becomes her champion, defends her and threatens the Uncle with punishment unless he changes his tactics. Finally Dave arranges that Squire Goode and his wife take Annie into their home. Although blessed with many children of their own the Goodes feel that they have room for one more so Annie becomes a member of the family. Her life from then on is a happy one. She amused her little adopted brothers and sisters by telling her famous fairy stories, quite often bringing out the fact that her mother is in the "Land of Good People." Dave is called to war and the leave-taking is a heartache for Annie. When she is told that Dave has been wounded the shock is too much for her and within a short time she goes to join her mother. Then, having told his story James Whitcomb Riley sends the children scampering home, happy and contented.

SUGGESTIONS

The exhibitor who caters to a more or less well-read clientele should find this picture lucrative. The title and James Whitcomb Riley's name are the essentials to feature if you plan

"ONCE TO EVERY MAN"—FROHMAN

Starts with a Fight and Ends with One—With Many Punches in Between

IT is some time since the Frohman Amusement Corporation turned out "My Own United States," but it was worth the long wait to receive "Once to Every Man." Here the exhibitor is offered one of the best fighting pictures ever turned out. Not war stuff! By no means. One of those virile stories based on the element of struggle, a struggle in capitals, one of the surest fundamentals that a picture can have.

Personally we don't think the two fights in "Once to Every Man" have ever been equaled on the films. The first, a rough and tumble affair between a brute man and a young man, is one of the fiercest pictured. It stirs you and puts you in exactly the right frame of mind to travel alone with the young fellow on his fight through life. It is good building as well as good thrilling—this fight. As for the prize ring affair staged between Jack Sherrill and Eddie Kelley, here indeed is a ring-fight that looks like the best year's bout of a National A. C. It is real. The interest is magnificently sustained and there is a thrill in every round.

But "Once to Every Man" contains more than mere physical encounter. The battle of the young fellow against drink is the fight that runs straight through and it is an ever-interesting, appealing fight. —Release plans to be announced later.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

On ———— of ———— week, the management of the ———— theatre will present the latest picture produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation and entitled "Once to Every Man." Patrons will remember the former pictures turned out by the same company. Such sterling offers as "The Conquest of Canaan," "The Witching Hour" and "My Own United States" bore the Frohman Amusement brand. And "Once to Every Man" is a worthy successor to these meritorious productions. It is based on a story by Larry Evans, the well known magazine writer, a man who has earned the reputation of turning out none by the most virile and "real man" fiction. Certainly in "Once to Every Man" he never fails to live up to his reputation. Much credit for the picture is also due the scenario writer, Anthony Paul Kelly and the director, T. Hayes Hunter. These men have grasped the spirit of the original work and have succeeded in communicating it to the film remarkably well.

The picture tells the story of a young fellow of a lumber camp town, looked down upon and spurned by all his neighbors because his father died of drink. He himself has a terrific battle with the curse of his family. There is only one who gives him strength and hope to fight on—she is Dryad Anderson, a young girl who loves him. But even she misinterprets his actions in time and so Denny sets out for New York convinced that he cannot make good in his own home town. In New York he becomes a prize fighter and eventually in one of the most stirring climaxes ever recorded on the celluloid, knocks out the champion and returns to Dryad and the other townsfolk triumphant. The latter part of the picture introduces a wealth of comedy. The ways and means of the gentry who follow the prize ring were never more interestingly, humorously and intensely displayed than in "Once to Every Man." In fact the film offers all sorts of action, from fighting to humorous. Certainly one cannot ask for more than it contains.

Jack Sherrill is starred in the role of Denny, while Mable Withee is seen as Dryad. Each contributes a worthy performance.

THE STORY

Denny Boulton works in a lumber camp in the northern part of New York State. His father died of drink and Denny himself has a hard fight to resist the temptation to follow in his father's footsteps. The villagers of the camp town, however, offer him no encouragement. In fact they brand him as a drunken good-for-nothing. When one day Dave, the big timber boss gives him an unmerciful beating, his doom in his home town is sealed, for word passes around that Denny was drunk when he fought. There is only one person in the town, Dryad Anderson, a young girl, who has faith and hope in Denny. The two love each other and it is because of Dryad's affection for him that the boy refuses to give up the fight. But one night Denny is kicked in the stomach by a horse. Staggering into his hut he reaches for the whiskey demijohn, but falls with it to the floor. As he lies there Dryad enters and then even she loses faith.

In despair of ever making good in his home town Denny sets out for New York with a definite purpose in view. He goes to Hogarty's gymnasium and applies for a job as a fighter. Hogarty gives him a chance to show his stuff in the ring with Sutton, who packs an awful punch. And Denny stands up. In a few months he is heralded as the coming champion and matched to fight Jed the Red, the present title holder. Jed becomes rather nervous at Denny's marvelous display of power, so using a few underhand methods, he has his food doctored. As a result in the fight he finds his wind failing him and is hardly able to stand the blows of Jed. But when the old postmaster from his home town comes to the ringside and presents him with a bit of ribbon sent by Dryad he sails in and knocks out his opponent. He returns to the village a hero, particularly in Dryad's eyes, and he leaves a hero also, for he goes to fight for his country.

SUGGESTIONS

There are a number of ways in which you can bring out the strength of this production in order to substantiate any announcement that you make to the effect that it is a "special." The majority of patrons love a real fight. You can safely advertise the ring fight in "Once to Every Man" as one of the best, if not the best, that has ever been screened. We feel confident that you will agree with this opinion after seeing the picture yourself. But why not invite any fight men, or sporting editors and writers, that you may know in your town to see the picture at an advance showing? Get their opinions on the fight and quote them in your advertisements, both newspaper and lobby. Mention to these men that both Kid Broad and Eddie Kelley appear in the picture and see to it that the scenes were correct—they'll surely come, then. And with such endorsements you will surely attract a large patronage to the showing of "Once to Every Man."

Bring out in your advertising that the whole picture is a fight—a fight both mental and physical—the struggle of a young fellow to make good when all the world seemed against him. People like a virile story of this kind, and if you bring it out strong enough they will surely be attracted by it—attracted by the unusual. Also note the fact that the picture is based on a story by Larry Evans. He is one of the most popular magazine writers of the present day—his works have appeared in numerous publications and many of them have been adapted to the screen. So don't forget Larry by any means.

If you like special decorations for your lobby—drawn by an artist, you might have one fixed up representing Denny when he tries out with Sutton. Have Denny standing "groggy" and Sutton (a big fellow) looking on in amazement. Underneath use the subtitle, "What's holdin' this guy up?" For another a picture of the terrific fight in the first reel between Denny and the lumberjack, an idea of which you can glean from the stills, would be appropriate. One of these on either side of your lobby and you would have a display that would attract the attention of the passerby.

CATCH LINES

What is it that comes Once to Every Man? It's the Big Chance. The chance to conquer or fall. It comes once to every man and seldom comes twice. See how Denny Boulton, the mistreated, spurned son of a drunkard grasped his big chance!

If you like a fight—the fight of a young man to make good—the physical fight of the prize

Madge Evans in a Story of Childhood and Second Childhood

MADGE EVANS, several other children and three old men who like to hark back to their childhood days are the principal characters in this production which has an appeal directed, for the most part, to people of the same age as its dramatis personae.

Superlatives cannot do justice to its atmosphere of cleanliness, its prettiness and its occasional flashes of wholesome philosophy. The impossible grande dame who believes that with her gold she can buy happiness, the little girl who will only be happy when her grandfather is restored to her, the grandfather, a lovely old gentleman indeed, and his boyhood pal who has become a millionaire and who is also in search of happiness are characters that are always interesting, amusing, and sympathetic.

The locale of the picture is a sea coast village and the scenes are all very pretty. Tefft Johnson, who directed the production, has long been known as a man who can get the most from child players. In this picture he did not have much of a story to work with, but the little star appears to singular advantage under his direction. Let us hope that he is given further and ample opportunity to demonstrate his skill in his particular line in the near future.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 30.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Madge Evans, the clever child star of World Pictures, in a picture that really deserves her remarkable talents.

Directed by Tefft Johnson, the best director of children in the business. It was he who made those "Sunny Jim" pictures for Vitagraph, the pictures that established Bobby Connolly as a star.

Madge Evans in a charming "real" girl role, with Jack Drumier featured in her support.

Patty's dream of pirate riches comes true in a most unexpected manner.

John Harding searched for the latch string that "was always out." He found it where he least expected to find it, and not in the homes of the wealthy.

AD TALK

John Harding, who had spent his boyhood on the coast of Maine and who had gone away and made a fortune for himself, found in his old age that he was without relatives and without any friends that he could really believe liked him for himself alone and not for his money. So he conceived the idea of returning to the home of his boyhood and seeing if he could find true friendship there.

Harding's first efforts in this direction were sadly disappointing. What he first discovered led him to believe that there wasn't such a thing as real friendship anywhere. Then he went to the poor house, where one of his boyhood friends was the superintendent, and where another of his old-time pals had just recently become an inmate. And there he found a number of things that pleased him immensely, and brought him a peace and happiness he had not known in a long time.

The whole interesting, entertaining, unusual story is told in the new World Picture, "The Love Net," which on ———— will be shown at the ———— theatre. Charming Madge Evans is the star of this production, and Jack Drumier, who has appeared with so much success in a number of other World Pictures, is featured in the cast. This picture is easily one of the most pleasing and entertaining productions of the year. It is the sort of a picture that makes a deep impression on all who see it. It is the sort of a picture you will remember for a long time.

THE STORY

"Pirate" Patty Barnes, granddaughter of old Captain Amos Barnes, loves to play pirates with the boys of the seacoast town. Captain Barnes is by no means well off. Often he recalls the day when he, with Eben Cobb and John Harding, his boyhood playmates, used to paint rosy futures for themselves. Cobb is now in the poor farm. Harding is the only one who has made good, but his affluence is not known to the other men. When Captain Barnes hears of his son's death in France he feels that the last prop supporting him has been knocked away. Mrs. Gaythorne, a wealthy resident of the village, who believes that her money will bring her anything, seeks to adopt Patty, but she prefers to stay with her grandfather. Barnes, however, realizes that Patty will have a good home with Mrs. Gaythorne, and so early one morning steals away to the poor house.

Patty is taken in by the wealthy woman, but her lot is by no means a happy one, as she has none of the freedom that made her other days so full of happiness. Harding by this time has grown tired of a grasping world and seeks out his old mates to see what change time has wrought in them. He finds them the same good old hearts as before, and after a short stay at the poor farm, where he feigns abject poverty, he leaves the place a substantial check and departs. Patty gets a note from him, telling her to get Captain Barnes and join him on his yacht for a "pirate cruise." Instead Patty, after escaping, goes to sleep in Barnes' old boat. The old man comes down to put out to sea, intending to make a "last voyage" to nowhere. When the boat is about to sink he discovers Patty on board. The two wave frantically to the yacht and are rescued—to know poverty no more after that.

SUGGESTIONS

Let them know that this picture was directed by Tefft Johnson, who long since gained a name for himself as a children's director. His work is always marked by intelligence and taste. Feature Madge Evans and also Jack Drumier, who has played characters in a vast majority of World Pictures for the past year. You might play it for the children at special matinees, for there are many incidents in the five reels that will have a particular appeal to the little folks.

"THE SEA FLOWER"—BLUEBIRD

A Wild Romance of South Sea Isles

SOME Sea Flower! When I was a child, my grandmother used to tell me some pretty good stories—and she was some story teller!—but she never pulled anything on me to equal this one.

The picture opens somewhere in the South Seas. The first thing that strikes your eyes is the "beautiful" sight of a drunk. He is having a fuss with a native woman over the fact that, although the bottle was full before he took his regulation daylight nap, he now finds it empty.

From this point on, things commence to happen. Leaving the natives and their gin on the island, we go to San Francisco. Our purpose is to bring the hero, a U. S. Secret Service man, on the island, so that he can meet the heroine. He happens to be discovered eavesdropping on board of the ship by some German spies and is thrown overboard. The water being chilly, he swims ashore, is found by the heroine and dragged into a cave. She thus gets her book-knight, although somewhat with a heavy crop of beard. But lo! The very next day he comes out of the cave with a face smoother than I ever possessed. (Where in Heavens did he get the razor?)

To cut the story short, he goes back to America, gets some help, returns to the island, captures some Germans, saves the heroine and again goes back to America to round up the rest of the spies (I wonder whether it was a safety razor or a straight?)

In the end, it develops that the heroine is none other than the daughter of the Chief of the Secret Service, stolen from him when a baby. (It puzzles me to this day though—where did he get the razor?)

If you happen to cater to children, big ones and little ones, this is the picture to book. But beware! Don't tell them anything about the razor.—Released Dec. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

A romance laid in those garden spots of the southern Pacific, the South Sea Isles, and in the golden spot of the western coast, San Francisco.

How a girl of today was sold into marriage by a miserable ne'er-do-well.

A picture teeming with adventure and romance, laid in part in those adventurous spots of the southern Pacific, the South Sea Islands.

Juanita Hansen, the delightful heroine of "The Brass Bullet," in one of the most adorable characterizations of her career.

AD TALK

Juanita Hansen, the lovely actress who recently scored such a success in the serial "The Brass Bullet," and who has been seen in many comedies and dramas of the past, will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in the Bluebird photoplay, "The Sea Flower." Juanita is, in truth, one of the most adorable flowers to be found, whether one look on sea or land, and her handling of the role of the adopted daughter of the South Sea Islands in this picture is one of the best things that she has yet done in her exceedingly successful career before the camera lens.

She appears as Lurline, a white girl, supposedly daughter of "Brandy" Cain, a drunken old beach comber of the South Sea Isles. Fate, and a very kind fate at that, decrees that her path shall cross that of Truxton Darnley, government secret service operative, who is cast up in a boat on the island after German spies have discovered him peeking into their innermost secrets aboard an old tramp schooner. Love springs up between the two at first sight, as it does in all good romances, but their pretty affair is rudely interrupted when Darnley recalls the fact that he must be back in San Francisco within eight days in order to prevent the spies from carrying out a serious threat against the government of the United States.

How the romance is concluded, how Lurline finds her real father and how Darnley succeeds on his perilous mission against the spies are events which unite to form a climax of three-fold power, one which caps the story of "The Sea Flower" with a finale more thrilling even than the many events which transpire within the body of the picture itself.

THE STORY

Lurline, a beautiful white girl, daughter of "Brandy" Cain, beach comber and "Ne'er-do-well," grows up, imbued with all the poetry of the South Seas and the fairy tales she has gleaned from Father John, a missionary. In San Francisco, Von Linterman, a German agent, has been successfully smuggling ammunition and arms to a Hun raider in the Pacific. He has employed "The Scullion," a schooner owned by burly Dane Larson, for his purpose. Truxton Darnley, one of the cleverest operatives of the government, is trailing the band. He ships aboard the "Scullion" as a seaman and discovers the hold loaded with munitions. He learns that on the 30th, the National Munition Plant in San Francisco, is to be blown up by Von Linterman's men.

Darnley is detected spying and put adrift in a small boat. He is cast up on an island and found by Lurline. She secretes him in her cave. A romance develops, but is halted when Darnley realizes he has only eight days in which to get to San Francisco to foil the plotters. He bids farewell to Lurline, promising to return to her. That night, Lurline is sold into marriage by her supposed parent, to Larsen. The parent has really stolen Lurline in her infancy. At dawn, the "Scullion" is abreast of the steamer, bearing Darnley. Lurline dives overboard and is rescued. In San Francisco, Lurline makes her home with Mrs. Mercer, a friend to Darnley. Lurline is found by Larsen and forced to work at "The Elite" as a Kanaka dancer. President Jordan, of the National Plant, calls at the Mercer home and discovers that Lurline is his long lost daughter.

That night Jordan goes to the "Elite" and witnesses a raid by Darnley and his agents. Lurline is rescued and Jordan reveals that he is her father. Larsen is shot and killed in a desperate fracas with Darnley, and Von Linterman and Fowler are taken into custody. With the union of Lurline and Darnley, the girl's fairy book dreams come true.

Comedy Near the End Saves Lytell Picture

THE comedy element which occurs towards the end will, I believe, save this picture, because it furnishes enough amusement to satisfy, especially the star's friends.

The story, being illogical, fails to convince. It shows two young men in love with the heroine. The one is poor, while the other, rich. The heroine is in love with the hero, the poor one, but the mother favors the rich one.

The father of the girl has sunk all his money in a mining enterprise in Mexico. The revolution stops work on the mines, and they are about to be forfeited to the government, unless, according to the Mexican law, a certain amount of work is done.

In order to save the property, the two men agree to work the mine. After being there a short time, the rich young man gets so terror stricken from the bandits that he gives up further efforts, returns to the United States and gives out a report that the hero has been killed. He is about to marry the girl when the hero, having completed the work and secured title to the property, returns. After giving the villain a good beating for the false report, he marries the girl.

AD TALK

Bert Lytell, the young Metro star, who has risen to such prominence during his short career of a year before the camera, returns to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest comedy-drama entitled "Hitting the High Spots." It is interesting to note that Mr. Lytell is also the author of this picture. There are stars and stars but not many of them who venture to try their hands at scenario writing. But with the case of Mr. Lytell an exception is to be recorded. Not only has he tried, but he has succeeded, and proves himself every bit as good an author as an actor which, believe us, is saying something quite considerable.

"Hitting the High Spots" tells of an ambitious young engineer who undertook to develop oil wells in Mexico—oil wells that were constantly menaced by the insurrectos of the southern country who were in league with agents of Germany. How he succeeded in this perilous mission, only saved his life by a hair's breadth time and time again and how he finally returned to the United States just in time to prevent the girl he loved from being forced into a marriage with a man she loathed, makes one of the most interesting and exciting pictures ever thrown on the screen of the ——— theatre.

Mr. Lytell is supported by Eileen Percy, formerly leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks, by Winter Hall, Fred Goodwins, Gordon Griffith, Helen Dunbar and others. The picture was made under the direction of Charles Swickard and is without doubt the best piece of work ever turned out by this skilled director. Other pictures on the bill for the same day as "Hitting the High Spots" are ———.

THE STORY

Bob Durland, in love with Alice, the daughter of Randolph, president of the Balboa Oil Company, accepts the job of going to Tropico, Mexico, to work the corporation's oil wells there. The previous superintendent has been driven out by Mexican rebels who, in league with German agents, plan to secure the wells for the German government. Harold Blake, Bob's rival in love and more favored by Alice's mother because of his great wealth, accompanies Bob as his assistant because the other man dared him to. They arrive in Tropico, and likewise in trouble. The Mexicans are very ferocious, to say nothing of Von Holke, the leader of the Germans. Bob is warned to get out and stop working the wells but refuses to budge.

The work goes on and is finished on schedule time, making the corporation's hold on the land secure. Harold, however, deserts, and returning to the Randolphs, says that Bob has been killed by the Mexicans and that he himself only escaped after having slaughtered a great number of the enemy. Alice refuses to believe this story.

The Mexican rebels having gained the upper hand in the district, things start for Bob—really start this time. There follows a series of adventures of the most exciting sort during his various attempts to escape the Mexicans and Germans and his ultimate success is only accomplished after he has risked his life time and again. In the meantime Alice has come to the conclusion that Bob really must be dead and has consented to marry Harold in order to save her father's finances. But Bob arrives just in time to be the leading man at the wedding, to give Harold a sound thrashing and to make good the claim of the Balboa Company to the oil wells.

SUGGESTIONS

This is the type of story—the story of an adventure-loving, fearless young fellow—that the public seems to take to. Advertise it strongly. Use a little slang. You can drive home the character of the story if you "pack a wallop" in your ad copy, and a little well selected slang is by no means amiss. This certainly is the type of picture which justifies the use of it, which in passing is no knock to the picture.

You can also make much out of the fact that Bert Lytell, the star, is also author of the production. Such a coincidence doesn't happen very often. Here you have a chance to have special stories regarding the star written for your paper. You might also use a line in announcing the picture such as "By and Starring Bert Lytell." Don't forget that Eileen Percy was leading woman for Fairbanks in a number of features and that she gained quite a following while holding this enviable position. You might use her name below Lytell's in all advertising that you do.

CATCH LINES

Bert Lytell again in a fine, comedy-drama of thrilling adventure—written by none other than Bert Lytell!

In which one American engineer puts a roving band of Mexican greasers and German spies to rout—some job!

It's not every star who can write a photoplay to suit the director—and himself. But Bert Lytell did it in "Hitting the High Spots." He's both the star and the author—sort of hogging the whole show, isn't he?

A picture that goes along on all five (reels) and hits only the high spots of the road—and there aren't any low spots.

"AND A STILL SMALL VOICE"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Walthall Satisfactory in Drama Built on Old Lines

WHILE the story is not new or novel in theme, this is a very satisfactory dramatic production. Mr. Walthall appears in his familiar role of the young Southern gentleman, develops into an embezzler, and finally evolutes into a professional burglar of the Raffles type. Although the central heroic figure is an embezzler and crook, apparently with no great extenuating circumstances, and as such will probably not appeal to a great many; events follow one another in rapid sequence and hold the interest to the end.

Desiring to secure the wealth he feels is essential to permit him to freely woo the girl he loves, he is tempted to embezzle by the scapegrace son of his employer. The son uses the money to pay a gambling debt instead of investing it in a certain stock and when the theft is detected the star assumes all the blame instead of only his share in order to save disgrace from visiting the girl he loves, who has just eloped with the same scheming son.

Later they are all in New York, where Walthall, now grown affluent through a series of successful burglaries, gave his first love a check for $30,000 to save her stock-gambling husband. This is soon frittered away and her husband, the renegade son of his former employer, is shot and killed while appropriating the contents of a safe. Sitting alone in her apartment the young widow finds that she really loves Walthall and prays for him, basing her prayer on a passage of Scripture referring to "the still small voice."

He is evidently reached and swayed through the telepathy or efficiency of this prayer and refrains from stealing from a safe which he had already opened. He enlists in the army and before going "over there" he promises the girl that he will redeem himself and return to her.

A few hundred more feet of film showing him as returned (now that the war is over) would have made a more appealing finish. Fritzie Brunette is the girl in the case, and although she has a hard part, she registers well in all necessary expressions. The settings are all in keeping, the cast is good, and the photography is all that could be desired.—Length, 6 reels.—Tom Hamlin.

AD TALK

Henry Walthall, whose wonderful performance as the Little Colonel in Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" still stands as the most delightful characterization ever given to the screen, will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week in his latest picture, "And a Still Small Voice." Strangely enough, Mr. Walthall again takes the role of a southern gentleman in this feature, although a gentleman of the present day.

As Clay Randolph he gives a remarkable characterization of this gentleman of the South, a man with whom honor comes before all else. But because he sees that the girl he loves admires another man and because he knows that this man has embezzled funds, he himself takes the blame that no stain may fall on her name. Subsequently he goes to New York, where, with the shadow of a prison term ever haunting him, he becomes a gentleman crook.

And to New York also comes the girl and the man, now married. He turns out to be worthless and it is not long before Mary discovers this. But Randolph again comes to their aid. How the story ends, how Randolph finally gives heed to the Still Small Voice of Conscience and gives up his career of crime in order to serve his country, puts a thrilling climax on this tale of unrequited love and sacrifice.

Mr. Walthall is supported by an exceptional cast which includes Fritzi Brunette, George Fisher and Joseph J. Dowling.

THE STORY

In a prosperous southern town, Clay Randolph has grown up honoring the traditions of his forefathers whose honesty was never questioned. Mary Singleton, the daughter of one of his father's best friends is admired by him as well as by Richard Dunlap, the banker's son. Dunlap, however, has become a heavy gambler and when the payment of his debts become pressing he approaches Randolph with a scheme for making a fortune on the investment of a large amount of money in copper. Randolph resists the temptation until Dunlap visits him at the bank. When the theft is discovered Dunlap denies the guilt. In the meantime Richard and Mary have eloped and when Randolph discovers their marriage he assumes all guilt of the crime. His disgrace compels him to leave the town.

Dunlap, indolent and lazy, is made to shift for himself and with an inheritance from his mother he goes to New York to play in Wall Street. He soon finds that he cannot cope with the big game, but it appears to him to be the only means at his command to secure money. Randolph, also stationed in New York, has become a gentleman crook. Welcomed in the best homes in the city, his operations are made very easy. Dunlap, desperately in need of money, accepts the invitation of Steele to a week-end party. Randolph is also present at this party. Dunlap endeavors to make a loan from Steele, but is not successful, so requests his wife to approach him. Steele attempts to compromise Mrs. Dunlap by making it appear that she has stolen a famous diamond which he owns. Randolph, aware of his scheme, frustrates it by placing the diamond in the safe and himself loans Mary the money Dunlap is in need of.

This money soon goes the way of the rest and Dunlap again wants Mary to ask Randolph for another loan. Although Clay's funds are exhausted he promises to get the money for her. When he advises her that he is going to steal it she pours her young heart out in prayer that he might not do it. The efficacy of her prayer is demonstrated when Randolph, about to take the money from the club safe, feels the "Still Small Voice of Conscience." He goes away, leaving the safe open. Dunlap, seeing his chance, attempts to take the money and is shot. In his process of redemption, Randolph joins the army and Mary promises to wait his return.

CATCH LINES

Henry Walthall appears as a southern gentleman forced to turn outlaw and later gentleman crook to save the name of the girl he loves—a truly absorbing tale.

Henry Walthall, hero of "The Birth of a Nation," in a story of love and sacrifice that is full of unexpected turns and surprises.

Henry Walthall supported by an exceptional cast including Fritzi Brunette, George Fisher and Joseph J. Dowling.

As a southern gentleman Randolph held honor of name and family above all else. But circumstances forced him to become a Raffles that the name of the girl he loved might not be smirched.

How the Still Small Voice of Conscience worked the reformation of a gentleman burglar.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally, Henry Walthall is the strong card in connection with this production. Play his name up with reference to his great performance in "The Birth of a Nation." His work has not been as noteworthy in later pictures, so concentrate on the Griffith picture.

Then, also, you have an exciting crook story to advertise, and as the public has always showed itself ready to accept this sort of picture, don't fail to bring out the fact. Hint at the story in your advertisements. This is always a good way to awaken interest in a picture. Tell the tale up to some exciting point and then stop. This type of advertising is employed by publishers of books and is considered one of the most effective methods. If you have not been in the habit of doing it, try it on this picture for it offers you the proper chance.

Outdoor Scenery Saves This One—Plot Built on Revenge

BARRING the beautiful outdoor scenery, one can hardly find one other single point in this picture to praise.

To begin with, the story is unsympathetic. It is based on revenge—the villain wrongs the hero's sister. The hero goes through life seeking the villain to take revenge upon him; secondly, it is illogical, and thirdly, it introduces situations that are anything but pleasing to critical audiences.

The story introduces the hero as a French Canadian, seeking gold in the creeks of the Canadian forests. Once he saves the life of a prospector whose foot is caught in a trap. He takes him into his cabin and doctors him, eventually making him half partner to his claims. As this man is a crook, he works against the hero on the quiet. He even attempts to alienate the affections of the hero's newly made wife, the daughter of a poor prospector who has just died.

The crook allies himself with the villain, the Bully of that section of the country, and schemes to rob the hero of his mining claims.

When informed by a girl dancer that the villain is the man who had wronged his sister, the hero rushes to find him. A struggle ensues, but convenient lightning kills the villain.—Length, 6 reels—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Mitchell Lewis, the only male star of Select Pictures Corporation, will appear in his first picture of that company's at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It is entitled "Code of the Yukon" and is one of those virile Alaskan stories that fairly teem with strong interest from beginning to end. Mr. Lewis will be remembered for his masterly characterization of 'Poleon Doret in the picturization of Rex Beach's "The Barrier." It is said that in "Code of the Yukon" he has a role, in appealing qualities, quite similar to his first great part. At any rate suffice it that in the part of Jean Dubois, the miner, he creates a character distinctly human and one which touches the heart string time and again.

That the picture was written by Anthony Paul Kelly is yet further proof that it promises something extraordinary to ——— patrons. Mr. Kelly started in writing photoplays many years ago when he was in his late teens—and not so late either. Today he ranks at the very top of his art. His work has gained for him such a reputation that he is constantly sought after by a variety of producing companies. And inasmuch as he is also author of "Three Faces East," one of the few successful war plays of this season, it can be seen that he is a man of no average accomplishments.

The story is laid in Alaska and tells of the trials of Jean Dubois, whose mine is stolen from him by a crooked gang. How he retrieves it and, when seeking revenge for his sister who has been wronged, suddenly learns that there is a higher power than mere man's, makes engrossing entertainment. Tom Santschi as the heavy, heads a particularly good supporting cast.

THE STORY

Jean Dubois, a French Canadian prospector, has discovered a gold mine. Jean is quietly storing away what dust he is able to wash each day in the hope that he will soon have enough to leave the Northwoods on a long journey. He is anxious to start on his hunt for the man who wronged his sister. This is his main object in life.

Suddenly his calm is broken. A horde of gold seekers come into his part of the land. A village soon springs up. "Faro" Telford, a renegade gambler, whom Jean had befriended, is the cause. He has informed his friends that Jean has discovered a gold mine. A gang of mining crooks try to steal the mine. They persuade his wife to leave him. She runs away with one of the members of the gang. Jean is heart-broken but decides to leave the village and devote all his energy to discovering the man who wronged his sister.

Just as he is about to leave the village a girl who is in the employ of Cregan, the leader of the gang of crooks, and who is in love with Jean, informs him that she knows the man who harmed his sister. She tells him that it is Cregan, the same man who has ruined her life. Eventually Cregan and Jean meet. Just as Jean is about to crush his life out a Higher Power intervenes and Cregan is punished in God's way.

Jean's wife returns to him and convinces him that she has not really done anything wrong. He forgives her and sunshine again enters his life.

CATCH LINES

Mitchell Lewis, hero of "The Barrier" and "The Bar Sinister" in another powerful characterization—that of a French-Canadian miner of Alaska.

Written by Anthony Paul Kelly, author of "My Own United States," "The Bar Sinister" and other elaborate photoplays, as well as the stage production, "Three Faces East."

Mitchell Lewis follows up his big hit as the 'Poleon Doret of "The Barrier" by a wonderfully moving and human performance as Jean Dubois in "Code of the Yukon."

The story of a man who harbored a revenge until he realized that there was a greater power than man's.

Mitchell Lewis is a star who does not pose to show a pretty profile or patent leather hair. He is the strong, virile man of the great outdoors—an actor able to interpret a human character in a human way.

"STRING BEANS"—PARAMOUNT

Ray Fans Will Welcome This Interesting One

"STRING BEANS" will please the majority of Ray fans, as it possesses some human element and good action of plot, while the suspense is well maintained. The story, on the other hand, will hold their interest to the close.

The role given the star is that of a country boy. It is the sort that he has most successfully portrayed in the past, making himself popular. In this instance, he is introduced also as a successful young poet. Due to his mistreatment he receives in the hands of his father, he runs away from home, goes to a little town and obtains a position with the town newspaper. He meets her and falls in love with her. Although she is the mayor's daughter, she reciprocates.

Once he succeeds in rescuing her father from the dangerous attack of a man who later proves to be a crook. During the attack, his sweetheart calls the editor to the assistance. This brings a reconcilliation between the mayor and the editor, who have been bitter enemies. In the end, the hero gets the girl.

The situation showing the hero trying to make a speech in order to spoil the plans of the crook for a string bean factory is highly comical, because of his failure to utter a word.

The picture is clean and should entertain fairly well.—Released Dec. 22.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Jean Morris.....Jane Novak
Zachary Bartrum.....John P. Lockney
Kendall Reeves.....Donald MacDonald
Lott Morris.....Al Filson
Joe Farley.....Otto Hoffman

By Julien Josephson
Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.
Photographed by Chester Lyons.

CATCH LINES

Charles Ray, creator of the only human "hick" character that the screen has ever known, gives another splendid performance in this, his latest Paramount picture.

String Beans? Sure you can, which leads us to remark that two crooks attempt to string the inhabitants of a country town with a fake bean canning establishment in this picture—but they fail ingloriously because of the activities of Charles Ray.

Charles Ray goes back to his farmer boy part in "String Beans." He hasn't an equal in portraying such a role.

And you can't blame Charlie for falling in love, either—not when Jane Novak is the girl.

AD TALK

Toby Watkins is the all-around drudge on his uncle's farm—a twenty-acre patch of black mud entirely surrounded by mortgages. This is the opening sentence from Julien Josephson's scenario, "String Beans," which serves to introduce Charles Ray in his next Paramount picture which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ————. In highly condensed form it presents a vivid picture of the story's opening scenes.

Toby Watkins is the sort of country boy, brave, humorous and thoroughly human, that all Charles Ray's admirers like to see him portray. It is the sort of character that has made the Ray pictures sure-fire offerings from the exhibitor's point of view. But Toby Watkins is no ordinary boy. He is imaginative and somewhat dreamy, and every night when his day's work is done he goes to his room and takes out a book that he has bought by mail, "What Every Young Poet Ought to Know." For Toby is ambitious to be a writer.

The scenes of the story change to a country newspaper office where Toby goes in search of opportunity. This part of the story is developed with realism and charm by the author, Julien Josephson, who was formerly a country editor himself, and who writes of that life with delightful sympathy.

It is stated, that Ray's handling of the role of Toby Watkins will rank as one of the best screen portraits. Excellent support is provided by Jane Novak, John P. Lockney, Donald MacDonald, Al Filson and Otto Hoffman. Victor Schertzinger directed and Chester Lyons was the photographer.

THE STORY

Toby Watkins is a young farmer whose penchant for writing poems rouses the ire of his narrow-minded uncle, the result being that he quits the farm and accepts a position as subscription solicitor on the Sawbert Weekly Clarion. He meets and loves Jean Morris, daughter of the mayor of Sawbert, and she returns his love. Kendall Reeves, a crook known to the police as Harry Morgan, comes to Sawbert to work a fake bean cannery scheme and Toby, at the request of Zachary Bartrum, editor of the Clarion, attends a mass meeting to speak in opposition to the project. When Toby sees Jean Morris in the audience, his courage deserts him and he flees ignominiously from the hall. He overhears Reeves talking to a former pal, who is now employed on the Clarion, and the man's criminal character is revealed. Reeves learns that exposure is inevitable and he seeks to force Mayor Morris to pay him five thousand dollars for a majority interest in the fake cannery, and then decamp. Toby goes to the Morris home and finds Jean struggling with Reeves. He rescues her and after a desperate battle, masters the crook. Bartrum and Morris, who long have been enemies, are reconciled and through them the love affair of Toby and Jean reaches a happy denouement.

SUGGESTIONS

You have Charles Ray back in a farmer boy role in this production, and such being the case you have little else to worry about, inasmuch as he goes through the transition that fans love to see him go through—from boob to hero. Play Ray's name up big and announce the fact that the type of role he plays is of the sort that made him famous. The title also offers you a number of chances to play on words in your advertising and also for the decoration of your lobby with either special drawings or material accessories.

"IRISH EYES"—TRIANGLE

Opinion May Vary in Regard to This One as Entertainment

AS a production, "Irish Eyes" may be considered above the average. The action of plot is fairly speedy and the interest is held well. As an entertainment, however, opinion will vary. Those of picture goers who are not critical may find no fault with it. The critical ones, on the other hand, may revolt at the idea of having a brother act as a villain against his own brother.

The story introduces the heroine as a young orphan girl. Her father is killed over a card game by being struck on the head with a bottle by one of the participants. A stranger, who happens to be a kind-hearted lord, takes her under his protection. Eventually they fall in love. The lord's brother, however, a young dissolute, is fascinated with the girl. By foul means and lies he tries to cause an estrangement between them, so that he may make her his own mistress. But he does not succeed.

The picture could be improved upon by cutting out some of the close ups showing blood running from the face of the heroine's father. The death-bed scene, showing the coffin and two candles burning on each side of it, will hardly prove entertaining to a picture goer. It could be eliminated without injuring the story.

The picture is a little suggestive.—Released Dec. 15.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Pauline Starke, the charming young Triangle star, in a tale of old Ireland.

An innocent little Irish lass attempts to win the man she loves by imitating the ways of a vampire! But she wasn't a very good actress, so she won him anyway!

Pauline Starke, the young actress who scored such personal successes in "Until They Get Me" and "Alias Mary Brown," is seen to even greater advantage in "Irish Eyes," her latest production.

Pegeen thought that to win the man she loved she must practice the ways of a siren. Her efforts are both amusing and pathetic as pictured in Pauline Starke's latest Triangle picture, "Irish Eyes."

Written by Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, two of the best known authors of the screen.

AD TALK

Catherine Carr and Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, both writers with many successful photoplays to their credit, were the joint authors of "Irish Eyes," the Triangle play to be presented at ———— theatre, on ———— nights of ———— week, with Pauline Starke in the star role.

Director William Dowlan, who produced this picture, selected Miss Starke for the featured role, for he anticipated that she would make an admirable little Irish girl. And it was much to Miss Starke's joy, for she was called upon to pass through some very strenuous moments during the screening of this play.

In the story she plays the role of Pegeen, a poor little neglected stepchild in an Irish fishing village, who meets Sir Arthur Ormsby and is helped by him to escape from her brutal guardian.

Gradually she becomes the bright and happy influence in his life on his big Irish estate. Like the primitive child that she is, she cannot control herself when she finds another woman apparently making love to her new guardian. But with rare understanding for the little waif whose narrow life has cramped her outlook, Sir Arthur gradually convinces her of his good intentions and all ends happily.

THE STORY

Pegeen lives with her father, O'Barry, and her stepmother, Moll, in a fisherman's shack off the coast of Ireland. Her father is kind to her when he is at home and sober, but Moll is wicked and Pegeen hates her.

Becoming enraged at the way Moll treats Pegeen, her father leaves his wife, taking his daughter with him, and promising to take her along on his next fishing trip. But O'Barry is killed in a drunken brawl.

Moll tries to take Pegeen back, but she runs away to the rocks on the seashore and hides. While she is crying for her father, Sir Arthur Ormsby, cruising along the coast in his yacht, finds her. He hears her story and decides to help the beautiful little waif. He takes her to his estate along with her blind friend, Jerry, his parrot and dog.

When Sir Arthur's brother Guy visits the castle to obtain money and to escape from Kitty Price, a chorus girl, he meets Pegeen and falls in love with her. But she loves her benefactor, Sir Arthur.

Kitty has followed Guy to the little village and it becomes necessary for Arthur to visit her in his attempt to prevent her from annoying his brother.

Guy, to kill Pegeen's love for his brother, takes her to the inn where she sees Kitty and Arthur together. Arthur is unable to understand her anger when Pegeen confronts them. Like a primitive child, she springs upon Kitty. Then she runs from the room. In her flight she is overtaken by Arthur. She learns that his visit was for his brother's welfare, that Arthur really thought Pegeen was in love with Guy. But when Pegeen realizes that the man she loves is innocent, she acknowledges her love for him and they find happiness.

"DANGER—GO SLOW"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Heart Interest and Suspense Plentiful in This One

PLENTY of heart interest and suspense are the predominating elements in this attraction. They more than make up for the slowness of plot-action after the first reel.

It has been often stated in these reviews that crook plays have a more or less wide appeal. The element of mystery as well as that of danger connected with such subjects seem to possess pleasing qualities. Being a crook play, "Danger—Go Slow" should entertain a great number of picture goers.

Immediately after the unfolding of the preliminary titles, the combination of a safe is flashed on the screen. This strongly suggests the nature of the picture, thus making a more forceful impression upon the spectator than could all the explanations by subtitles or otherwise.

The heroine's sticking to the mother of the hero and helping her, eventually becoming the cause of her boy's home-coming, will win your sympathy. The scene showing the heroine, who had come East for the purpose of inducing the hero, just out of jail, to quit that life and go home with her to his mother, is very touching. It will dig deeply.

The picture is not free from faults. Although the heroine rides from New York to a Western direction only two days, she is shown among Eucalyptus trees and the finest orange orchards in the United States.

It is a clean offering.—Released Dec. 9.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a good title to work with in this picture. The prominent display of it in theatre and newspaper advertising will, no doubt, attract considerable attention. AD TALK

Mae Murray, who has starred in a number of very successful Universal Special attractions, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture, entitled "Danger—Go Slow." The story for this production was prepared by Robert Leonard and Miss Murray and directed by Mr. Leonard. Here, for once, was perfect harmony secured between author, scenario writer, star and director! The story of "Danger—Go Slow" is a fascinating crook tale in which Miss Murray appears first as housekeeper for a gang of operatives of the underworld. Their haunt is raided and Muggsy (Miss Murray) is obliged to hop a freight train. She alights in a country town.

Here she takes shelter with a kindly old woman, generally known as Aunt Sarah. It is not long before Muggsy discovers that the man she loves, Jimmy, a member of the gang who has been caught by the police, is Aunt Sarah's son. So she determines to serve the old lady until the boy's term of one year has expired. This she does, and cleverly. So cleverly, in fact, that it would be a shame to relate the manner in detail on these pages. Suffice it to say that the body of "Danger—Go Slow" is filled with surprises and that its dramatic crises are many.

Miss Murray is seen to attractive advantage in the principal role while her support includes a number of well known Universal players. Other pictures on the bill for the same day will be ———.

THE STORY

Muggsy Mulane is the housekeeper for a band of safe-crackers and on occasions is called upon to help in operations. Finally "Jimmy the Eel," the newest member of the band, takes her part and demands that she be given a fair share of the loot. That starts a quarrel and in the midst of it the police come. All escape but Jimmy, Muggsy making her way to a freight train. After a long journey she is left in a country town.

Night comes and she is attracted to the home of Aunt Sarah. There Muggsy is befriended, and it is only after she has seen a picture of Aunt Sarah's son and has recognized that it is none other than her champion, Jimmy, that she reveals that she is a girl. She admits that she knows the son and explains that he is a "police judge" in New York.

But Jimmy has refused to "squeal" on his companions and Muggsy determines to repay his loyalty and the goodness of Aunt Sarah by caring for the old lady's interest. Judge Cotton, the richest and meanest man in town, has a mortgage on her home and when the interest comes due Muggsy tries to help out. And she does when the judge tries to kiss her in his office and she tells him that the town gossip is just outside and that she is going to reveal all unless he gives her $300, the amount of the interest. The hypocrite comes across.

All is not well, however, for "Bud," the second richest man in town, editor of the local paper and quite the town "sport," overhears, and to throw him off the track Muggsy tells him that she has really come to Cottonville as a representative of the oil company that is willing to pay big money for twenty acres Aunt Sarah owns. And Bud's greed for money causes him to rush to Aunt Sarah to offer her $10,000 for the property, much to her astonishment. Then Muggsy slips the money from the clock where the old lady has hidden it and settles up the mortgage. The end of Jimmy's year in prison comes and Muggsy is waiting to take him home to his mother, and eventually we see that she is to be his bride. And everything works out all right for everyone except the judge, because the oil company really does want the land and the property she has left makes Aunt Sarah rich, while Bud cleans up for himself.

CATCH LINES

An epic of a country village and the "sweetest girl."

A story for the heart, with a laugh and a thrill.

A girl burglar becomes the village belle and hearts are her easy prey.

She was only a debutante safe-cracker in the city, but in Cottonville she queened them all and won them all and had all that her heart desired, for what she sought was to bring happiness to others. And she'll bring the sunshine of happiness to you.

You'll laugh with "Muggsy," and still sob a little with her, but you will see in the end that she was just the rightest sort of a sweet little girl.

SUGGESTIONS

Cash-in on the record made by Mitchell Lewis in "The Barrier" and "The Bar Sinister," in showing this production. Advertise him as the 'Poleon Doret of the former picture, as this was one of Rex Beach's stories and 'Poleon was the important character. Moreover, Mr. Beach has just written another book playing up this character to still greater advantage. As his works have a wide circulation, be sure then, to mention this former appearance of Lewis'. Use one of the star cuts in your advertising also, as this will serve to distinguish him from the "matinee" type of leading man.

Anthony Paul Kelly, the author, is one of the best known photoplaywrights of the day and he has become more well known during the last season, from his play, "Three Faces East," which is having extensive runs in various of the big cities in the country. As many people have seen it, and doubtless not a few from your locality, advertise his name and the name of the play.

"THE MAN OF BRONZE"—WORLD

Another Lewis Stone Picture Presenting an Appealing Story

THE producers have relied almost wholly on the fundamental note of heart interest that is struck time and again in the story presented here rather than on action dramatic or physical. Happily their judgment served them in good stead in this instance for the romance of John Adams, westerner, and Mary Lawton, a childhood sweetheart whom he sends to the city to study art, is full of appealing moments in which the two leads appear to advantage.

In particular does Lewis Stone, the star, seem unusually effective in the many scenes in which he makes his bid for the sympathies of the audience. As the lonely man, deserted by all save his dog, he holds the center of attention constantly by reason of his poise and sureness of expression. And the dog, by the by, is another implement employed by the director to strike one of the "heart strings."

The western scenes, taken in the real arid land of the west, present a background full of atmosphere for the story. While this story is particularly coincidental at times, those who will enjoy it for its qualities of human interest will more than likely excuse it for its only partially apparent constructive shortcomings.—Length, 5 reels.—Dec. 9.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Lewis Stone, whose first World picture, "Inside the Lines," instantly established him as a star of the first magnitude, makes his appearance in "The Man of Bronze," as a strong-minded cattleman of the West.

John Adams was deserted by all save his dog. The sympathetic animal stood by through thick and thin and thereby proved that the humans who turned against him were false.

A romance that is interrupted by misunderstanding—foolishness—frailty. One of those stories that is so human it's real. See it and enjoy a real treat.

AD TALK

The Western rancher had furnished the money needed to send his sweetheart to the East, where she could pursue her study of art, and then followed her to bring her home. When he came to her boarding house in New York City and knocked on her door it was some minutes before the door was opened. When his sweetheart did open the door and he held out his arms to her, she did not rush to him, as he had expected. And then he made a discovery—a most distressing discovery, and one that made him leave the room quickly and take the first train back home. And when he did get home, he immediately set fire to the house he had so laboriously constructed for his wife.

The story of this rancher's discovery and of what followed the burning of the home is entertainingly told in the new World picture, "The Man of Bronze," starring Lewis S. Stone, which on ———— will be shown at the ———— theatre.

Lewis S. Stone is seen in the role of the rancher, while Marguerite Clayton appears in the part of his sweetheart. Both of these film favorites give memorable characterizations.

"The Man of Bronze" is an exceedingly interesting picture. It has been elaborately staged and many of the outdoor scenes are very unusual. Altogether it is pleasing from start to finish and will furnish you delightful entertainment. See it.

THE STORY

John Adams, an Arizona cattle man, is in love with Mary Lawton, a girl who has a desire to study art. She is so anxious to go to New York to take up her studies that Adams at last gives her father his savings that he may send her. Mary is overjoyed and promises to marry Adams on her return. He looks forward to her homecoming with enthusiasm, builds a new home for her and furnishes it with great glee. Men representing an oil company discover a vein on Adams' land and offer him five hundred dollars for an option on it. This he accepts and with the money, decides to visit Mary in New York.

Mary has changed somewhat since her departure from the West. Though reluctant to do so she gradually drifts in with a fast set of art students and it is while she is entertaining a number of these friends that Adams makes his appearance. He realizes right away that a change has come over her, and when he discovers that she is trying to hide her guests from him he leaves her home without a word and returns to the West. There he discovers that Mary's father has died. His only friend now is his dog. In a rage he burns down the new home which he had taken such pains to build.

In the city, Mary comes to her senses, leaves her fast companions and gets the job of governess to the daughter of an oil magnate. The oil brokers of the West attempt to cheat Adams of his land. The magnate is summoned to help. At the same time Mary returns West, hearing of her father's death. The magnate tells her that he will not molest Adams if she will consent to a marriage with him. This, Mary agrees to do out of her love for Adams. But the magnate is only playing a little trick and the lovers, united once more, find themselves unmolested.

SUGGESTIONS

There is a good title to advertise in connection with this production, as "The Man of Bronze" seems singularly appropriate for a western picture. This is not, however, the usual type of western, as it presents a story of a much interrupted romance that has real heart appeal. Make your advertising appeal through a good display of the title, the star's name, together with the fact that he did such good work in "Inside the Lines," a previous World picture.

"ONCE TO EVERY MAN"

ring—then you're going to like "Once to Every Man"—it's got more punch in it than half a dozen average features combined!

"What's holdin' him up?" asked the amazed Sutton as Denny Boulton from the north woods took blow after blow from the famous pugilist and never fell. Yes, what was holdin' him up? Grit, a grimness of purpose, the burning desire to make good, to grasp the opportunity that only comes "Once to Every Man."

"THE CHALLENGE ACCEPTED"—HODKINSON

Reviewer Sees Nothing to Coax Laugh or Cause Tear

ALTHOUGH there is nothing in this that will coax a laugh or cause a tear, and no swift action that could possibly thrill any of the blase picture fans, it is a clean little home spun drama based on the draft law.

The small but efficient cast moves like clockwork and the simple story pursues the even tenor of its way through five reels of celluloid to an abrupt ending, leaving nothing to be remembered.

Photography and laboratory work on this are excellent and the three locations, so often repeated, show scenery which compares favorably with our best scenic travelogues. But the story is so very slight and the sharp propaganda edge planned has been dulled in its possible effect as a human appeal by the fact that it arrives twelve months too late to develop any keen interest.

One glaring inconsistency is shown when the men who own the whiskey-still try to avoid the draft by leaving this logical secret hiding place to occupy an open point near a public road. Another impossible occurrence is where the director evidently tried to inject a little punch in the picture and showed a dozen mountaineers, generally recognized as sharpshooters, fire shotguns and rifles at each other across a few yards of space with no casualties. The old tobacco-spitting character did get shot in the wrist and showed the red grease paint to prove it. But a moment afterwards he is seen manhandling with apparent ease and careless abandon a 160 pound desperado with the same hand.

As a fair feature program offering this will do nicely.—Length, 5 reels.—Distributed for Hodkinson service by Pathe Exchanges.—Tom Hamlin.

AD TALK

A picture of war time—not the Kaiser type of picture—but one dealing with the making of Americans in the training camps will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week when "The Challenge Accepted" is presented for the first time in this city. It shows the transition undergone by a lad from the mountains of North Carolina, a young chap who hardly knew there was a war in Europe until the Draft Act went into effect. And when he receives his call and is ordered to report to camp he resents it. Why should he give up his personal liberties to fight in a quarrel about which he knew nothing? So reasoned Steve Carey. And he went away to camp with revolt smouldering in his bosom.

How Steve was made into a real soldier and how he came to understand the meaning of the colossal struggle that was shaking the world makes a photoplay that the management of the ———— theatre feels confident that all its patrons will enjoy. Interwoven between the character study of the boy there is a pretty love story and not a little drama that sustains the whole five reels and makes every scene interesting.

The company journeyed to Camp Dix, at Wrightstown, N. J., one of the largest camps in the East, for the making of some of the scenes of the picture. It is interesting to note now that they only got out in time to avoid being quarantined because of the influenza epidemic! These scenes of Dix show many entertaining details in the rookies' lives.

Zeena Keefe is starred in "The Challenge Accepted," while the part of the young man is played by Chester Barnett, one of the best known juvenile leads in pictures.

THE STORY

The town of Sparhook, N. C., secreted in the Blue Ridge Mountains, is not much concerned over the war until the Selective Draft goes into effect. Then it wakes up and wonders what it is all about. More particularly does Steve Carey, a rough mountaineer, come to the realization that the draft is interfering with his personal life. He resents it. Sally Haston, his sweetheart, the daughter of the village postmaster and keeper of the general store, urges him to accept his call as a man and to go forth and do his country's bidding. And Steve goes.

But he doesn't get along well in camp. Strangers irritate him, as he has lived all his life among friends. Billy Murphy, another soldier, becomes his mortal enemy. Billy enjoys the pastime of "kidding" Steve. Steve retorts with his fists and is as a consequence sent to the guardhouse. When Sally comes to see him with a basket of goodies for his delectation she is stung to the quick at seeing him paying the penalty for his misdeeds.

Steve is finally released from his imprisonment and, when Billy Murphy makes a slighting remark about Sally, he sneaks away from camp under cover of the falling darkness and makes his way to Sparhook. He goes straight to Sally, whose patriotism is thoroughly aroused over his desertion. The mountain folk must not be thought cowards by the world! She impresses upon him the necessity of returning immediately and rides with him to camp, but they are too late to get in before taps. The captain takes Steve in charge and Sally is sent back home to cry over Billy Murphy's unkind remark that Steve would be shot for desertion. But the captain knew what Steve most needed, and, summoning Murphy, arouses their latent patriotism by recounting some of the horrors committed by the enemy. From that time forth Steve and Billy are not only enthusiastic soldiers, but good friends.

Time passes and Steve prepares to leave for France. On leave he arrives in Sparhook to find the whole town searching the hills for James Grogan, who is hiding to evade his call in the draft. Sally, who the day before had accidentally stumbled on the hiding-place of James and his pals, has acted as leader for the posse. Steve, who has come to aid in the search, comes up from behind and the two engage in a fight, in which Steve is the victor. The posse starts for the village with the prisoners, leaving Steve, who had at last accepted the challenge, to say good-bye to Sally.

SUGGESTIONS

While this is a picture of war time—in that its principal male character undergoes a change from a thoughtless attitude toward the war to one of real patriotism—it is not the usual war picture in the accepted sense of the word. Advertise the picture for what it really is. "The story of a young mountaineer who went to a training camp with a grudge and came out with a purpose" would be a good line to use in any advertising that you do.

Make sure that you mention the fact that the picture is a drama. The synopsis might suggest the idea that the five reels contained merely a series of scenes concerning the soldier's life at a training camp. Bring out the fact that there is a considerable drama in the picture as well.

Zeena Keefe and Chester Barnett are the stars you have to feature.

CATCH LINES

A dramatic offering showing the making of an American at one of the large army camps—not just a topical—a character study and a romance—with interesting scenes of camp life as backgrounds to the action.

Steve Carey knew little or nothing about the war—and cared less. He paid no attention to it until one day it paid attention to him. He was called in the draft. Steve resented it. Why should a war in Europe call him from his carefree life in the mountains of North Carolina. But he went. His girl saw to that. And it wasn't long before Steve discovered what the world was fighting for.

"The Lightning Raider"

(Pathe Serial—First Three Episodes)

WITHOUT a doubt it is our personal opinion that "The Lightning Raider," featuring Pearl White, is the best serial that Pathe has ever turned out, of course judging by the content and promise of the first three episodes. And this, in passing, is giving the serial the highest recommendation possible. Just recollect a few of the former Pathe successes in this line!

The authors of this, Bertram Milhauser and George Seitz, have taken a simple struggle between two factions for a mysterious ebony block for the basis of the photoplay. The mysterious character is done away with, therefore giving cause for thanks. But the fight over this little piece of ebony is one of the most sustaining little wars that has ever been put into a serial. On the one side there is The Lightning Raider, struggling to regain it for one Thomas Babbington North, who promised his dying father that he would guard it with his life. On the other side there is Wu Fang, a wily Chinaman, leader of a notorious band of denizens of the underworld.

The endeavors of each side to procure and retain this block form the action of the first three episodes of the serial and will probably form the nucleus of the action for all the remaining numbers. And if the authors can keep up the excellent pace set for themselves in these opening chapters Pathe may well sit back and claim that it has produced the best serial of the day and of the past day. The scenarios of Milhauser and the direction of Seitz are also highly commendable. There is not a foot of wasted film. Each scene has its place. And the interplay between the two opposing factions is clever and sustaining to the last degree.

Pearl White presents a stunning appearance in the title part and plays her role in her very best style. Warner Oland appears in a wonderful makeup as Wu Fang, and Henry Gsell as the hero is possessed of a nice personality and a sincerity of purpose i everything he undertakes that will soon stamp him as a popula serial hero.

There are thrills in the first three episodes—excellent ones, an they come at the correct moment—at the end of each installmen But it is not the thrills that make "The Lightning Raider" th fine piece of work it is. It is not any one element, or an one personality connected with the production. This excellen serial is the result of years of specialized work by a company Pathe, that has always lead the field in serial production. An the accumulative result of these years of specialization is "Th Lightning Raider."—Peter Milne.

Tom Mix-Selig Two-Reel Dramas

(Controlled by Exclusive Features, Inc., for State Right Distribution)

Two subjects of William N. Selig's two-reel western dramas featuring Tom Mix, were shown for review in the projection room of Exclusive Features, Inc., and it is amazing to recall just how much story, punch and action were crowded into these two-reelers some four or more years ago.

An idea that many exhibitors may appreciate is that they appear under their original titles and are therefore not misleading in any way. Another thing in their favor is that the styles in western costumes have not changed as in society dramas, and consequently the settings and atmosphere can be considered as topical as if they had been produced today.

"Twisted Trails" is the first subject and shows the young ranchman (Mix) campaigning to oust the rustlers, who are aided by a crooked sheriff. Much shooting and daring riding is shown in a quick moving drama, which carries the human appeal through its romance when the young ranchman marries the girl he loves only to discover that she is his own sister. The old housekeeper then tells the secret of the changed babies, which shows that they are not related at all, and thus provides the happy ending.

These two-reel western dramas could acceptably fit in on almost any program, but would be particularly appropriate with a five-reel comedy or light comedy feature.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Price of Victory"

(British War Films. Arrow Film Corp. 7 reels)

We like to give credit where it belongs. Do you remember what Admiral Sims, in a spirit of chivalry, said to our boys in passing through England on their way to the front? "Don't stick out your chests and say we've done it all. Remember that the British and the French have been fighting for four years."

Since then the British cannot be made to talk about themselves. Let us do it for them. This set of pictures has been brought over for the purpose of giving a fraction of an idea what England and her colonies have done in this war, how much the Union Jack has suffered.

In booking these pictures don't have it in your mind that you are doing it as a charity or that you ought to book them as a matter of patriotic duty; they are worth every bit other pictures are. Your patrons will be treated to some real stuff—actual battle scenes. The Hindu cavalry, in battle and at play, is worth seeing. The "Over the Top" scene of the Hindu infantry, brandishing their famous daggers, the ones that planted terror in the brave (?) heart of the Germans, is another scene that your patrons would like to see. The Scotch with their kilts and other Britishers are also shown at war and at play.

These pictures have been taken by Captain H. D. Girtwood, a Canadian in the British Army, at the risk of his life. Length, seven reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Coast Units Again Move Forward

ALTHOUGH production work at Universal City is going forward with six units at work, there is little news to be gleaned at the big plant, for the reason that all organizations have been on subjects for several weeks. This week saw the serial company directed by J. P. McGowan begin work on the military serial "The Fifth Ace" which will star Marie Walcamp. Hope Loring is the author of this continuity.

The company under the direction of Douglas Gerrard will within a few days finish the filming of "Sealed Orders" or "The Sentimental Burglar," the making of which was started more than two months ago. Within two days after the first scenes were taken, ten members of the company including Director Douglas Gerrard, were taken ill with influenza. All have now recovered with the exception of Edward Cochran, who had been especially engaged for a type role in this picture. The subject is the first of a series of crook pictures in which William Sherr is featured with Fritzi Brunette.

The Star Comedy organization of Lyons and Moran have added a new scenario writer in the person of Tom Geraghty, who with J. Grubb Alexander will prepare scripts for this company.

William Pigott, formerly staff writer of the American at Santa Barbara, has been added to the Universal organization now conducted under the management of Eliot Clawson.

The new Universal City Laboratories, built under the direction of John M. Nicholaus, are now completed, and occupy a building 60 x 100 feet. They have a capacity of 40,000 feet of negative, and 50,000 feet of positive daily.

Metro Uses New Stages

The new Metro studio stages are to be christened with production work on December 9, when the present plant of the Metro will be turned over almost entirely to the organization making Nazimova productions. This will be just fifteen days from the time that the ground was turned for the new plant. The work of building the dressing rooms, mammoth carpenter shop and electrical departments has been progressing very satisfactorily, and foundation is now laid for the new administration building.

But one organization is now at work, that under the direction of George D. Baker who has May Allison as star. Mr. Baker adapted the magazine story, "Peggy Does Her Darndest," and is now filming this. Robert Ellis, who has been leading man at principal coast theatres for the past two years, and played opposite Miss Allison in her last production, is continuing as leading man in this film. Another important player is Augustus Phillips.

Gaby Deslys, Starred in Pathe's "Infatuation"

Mme. Nazimova will begin work on December 9 under the direction of Albert Capellani in the Chinese story, "The Red Lantern." Nazimova will take the part of an Eurasian girl, and the play hinges upon the battle between the two classes. Charles Bryant, who has appeared opposite Nazimova in many subjects, will continue as her leading man. The actress with Mr. Bryant arrived in Los Angeles December 3.

Bert Lytell has returned to the Metro studio after being mustered out of the training station. He attended Hollywood officers training camp for seven months where he rose to the office of lieutenant. He then qualified in an examination in Los Angeles and was sent to Waco, Texas, after he had made all arrangements for the welfare of Mrs. Lytell.

National Makes Progress

Very satisfactory progress is being made on the building of the National Film Corporation studios in Hollywood, and the company will within the next two weeks move in their new office building which is being built on Lodi street. The new office building is very complete, and will have elaborate quarters for President William Parsons, Vice-President Isadore Bernstein, Secretary William Le Plante, who is attorney for the company as well as A. W. Aaronson, manager of Henry B. Walthall.

Arrangements have been completed for an around the world tour to be made by William Parsons, and complete producing organization, which will leave Los Angeles early in 1919. It is planned to make a comedy in each different country visited amid conditions as they exist, and thus combine comedy with scenic subjects. Plans provide that laboratory equipment will be taken so that all film may be developed the day it is taken, and the rushes shown the following morning, thus making possible the retaking of any scenes regardless of where the company is working.

This combining of scenic wonders of the world with comedy is an innovation for the screen, and prior to the departure Mr. Parsons plans that his entire route shall be made for the trip and all places of interest so indexed that the most prominent as well as the out of the way places may be visited and scenes secured.

Milton Sinaberg, member of the National Film Corporation scenario staff, who has been writing comedies for William Parsons Goldwyn release, died Sunday, December 1, of influenza-pneumonia. Sinaberg has been associated with several coast companies, and was to be wed January 1 to Miss Bernstein, daughter of Isadore Bernstein at the home of President William Parsons of the National.

Goldfish Goes to Coast

Executives of the Goldwyn studios have been advised of the coming of Samuel Goldfish, president of the company, who is now scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles on Saturday, December 14. He will be accompanied West by S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York. Mr. Goldfish, it is understood, will spend several weeks on the coast while the trip of Mr. Rothapfel is more in the nature of a pleasure one, and he will be here but a short time. Norbert Lusk, who has been a member of the Goldwyn publicity staff at the New York office for some time, has been sent to the Coast and is now organizing a publicity department at the studio which will be conducted in connection with the eastern publicity department of the company. There will probably not be any additional producing activities started at the Goldwyn plant until the arrival of Mr. Goldfish, but preparations are going forward for the making of subjects here.

Madge Kennedy will be here within a few days, and by that time it is expected Reginald Barker will be at work on a Rex Beach subject; the Tom Moore organization will be at work, and very probably Mae Marsh will be able to resume her work.

The entire technical staff has been at work for several weeks, as has also the scenario organization in charge of J. G. Hawks, and the preliminary work of preparing for intensive production has been taken care of.

Jose Arrives on Coast

Edward Jose, who established a reputation as a director when he produced a number of subjects for Pathe, and who gained much fame when he appeared in "The Fool There Was" with Theda Bara, a William Fox picture, has arrived at the Lasky studios to direct a Salvation Army picture.

Bryant Washburn's latest picture, "Venice in the East," will be finished this week. He will begin work on a new subject next week, it is announced, which is yet unnamed. Playing with him in "Venice in the East" were Margery Wilson and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Ethel Clayton is in the middle of "Private Pettigrew's Girl," under the direction of George Melford. It is expected the production will be completed late next month.

The Lasky Home Guards, now known as the Fifty-first Company, California Reserves, held their weekly drill Wednesday night. Captain Milton Hoffman and Captain Henry Woodward were in command. The company is now expecting a "demobilization" order any day.

Peggy Hyland Begins One

Peggy Hyland this week began work on a new picture entitled "The Haunted Heart," with Harry Millarde as director. It is a crook play, in which the sister of the heroine and the sister's husband take prominent parts. The complete cast of the production has not been announced.

Ed Le Saint, director for Tom Mix, was stricken this week with the influenza. He is not critically ill.

Madelaine Traverse will begin work on a new William Fox production next week, the title of which has not been made public. It has not been determined who will direct the picture, neither has her leading man been selected, it was announced at the Fox studios this week.

Henry Lehrman this week signed Charley Parrott and Reggie Morris as new Sunshine comedy directors.

Bessie Love, Vitagraph star, was this week stricken with influenza, but it is announced from the studios that she will doubtless be able to resume work next week. David Smith, her director, arranged to film a number of scenes in which the star does not appear, and thus production of the picture continued almost uninterruptedly.

Joe Ryan, who is playing the heavy in William Duncan's serial, "A Man of Might," is recovering from an attack of influenza.

Earl Williams will this week complete his latest vehicle, "The Aviator's Honeymoon," establishing a record in production, it is claimed. His leading lady is Grace Darmond.

The William Duncan Company returned this week from San Francisco, where a number of scenes in Duncan's serial, "A Man of Might," were filmed. Clara Holloway and Antonio Moreno are completing the final episodes in "The Iron Test," another Vitagraph serial, and this week a number of scenes were taken in an underground mine in Southern California.

Hampton Production Completed

The Jesse D. Hampton production, "The End of the Game," by F. McGrew Willis and G. E. Jenks, has been completed, and this company is taking a short vacation while a new story is being prepared. Mr. Hampton was the director of this story which stars J. Warren Kerrigan, and a very peculiar feature concerning it is that practically every part except that of the lead and leading woman, is more or less in the nature of a heavy. The different roles were taken by Walter Perry, Jack Richardson, George Fields, Bert Apling and Joe Franz. The juvenile role was taken by Alfred Whitman, and the ingenue by Elinor Field. The next story to be filmed will be "Uncharted Channels," story and continuity of which is by Kenneth B. Clark.

The second Hampton Company producing for Robertson-Cole and affiliated Mutual are working on "Life's a Funny Proposition." William Desmond is the star of this, and the direction is by Thomas N. Heffron. Louise Lovely takes the role opposite Desmond, and a very important person in the cast is the seven months' old Ernest Marion. Others playing in this picture are Jay Balesco, John de Vall, Vera Doria, Lillian Sylvester, Aggie Herring and John Steppling. The story and continuity for this production was written by William Parker who is staff author of the Hampton organization.

Ince Works on New One

It was announced at the Ince studios this week that Victor Schertzinger, who wrote "The Nine O'Clock Town" for Charles Ray, is working on a new feature story for Dorothy Dalton, whom he is now directing.

Among the stars who will begin new plays in Thomas H. Ince's palatial studios at Culver City, now almost completed and which from the exterior resemble the popular conception of an old colonial, or Southern mansion, will be be Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett.

Thomas H. Ince has arranged to film thousands of Los Angeles people next Sunday at Lincoln Park, the scenes to become a part of a government picture in which the lads over there will be given an opportunity to see the "folks from home." A special stand has been erected in the park for the battery of cameras.

Reg. Barker got busy at the Goldwyn lot, or at least he had his coat off this week.

Monte Katterjohn is going down and give Broadway a treat. He plans to stay several days.

Dorothy Dalton is becoming proficient (that's a good word) in the art of fairy story telling, so a P. A. tells us.

Bill Desmond has a baby girl for his leading woman, and his biggest problem is how he's going to put over the love-making scene.

Mister E. D. Hammons was in town this week, and being accosted by a HOOKUM representative, he advised he was here on business.

It was rumored this week that Jack Kerrigan is again dissatisfied with his starring position, which seems to be a habit with Jack.

Douglas Gerrard, whose full name would fill a book, grew a full beard during his recent Flu illness, and his mustache still clings to him.

Frank Keenan's in town, and hung up his shingle at the Brunton studios. It reads: "Frank Keenan Productions, Inc." Welcome to our city.

Millard K. Webb, familiarly known as the best dressed assistant director in the business, is going east to be assistant director to Chet Withey.

Bill Sherr, juvenile crook actor, is sleuthing about to discover who it is that wears out the Gideon Bible in his suite at the Alexandria Hotel.

Doug. Fairbanks is airing the moth ball smell out of his dinner jacket preparatory to appearing on the stage at the opening of the New California Theatre.

Joy note: Bill Parsons has added an electric player Chickering grand piano to the collection of phonographs and musical instruments in his home, "Laughing Hall."

This has been a gay and festive week for many of our set. Everyone is overjoyed that the Flu ban was lifted, and they all went to see themselves flicker and flicker and flit on the silver screens.

Charley Chaplin is said to have considered making another scene this week for a fillum. Sid Chaplin being a very efficient general manager, sees to it that a new scene is made each week, or at least some weeks.

Bill Parker reports his full recovery from the Flu incognito. He claims to have written three good stories, and from other sources we learn they came to him while he had a fever hovering around one hundred and five.

Bert Lennon's home from New York, and reports a quiet time with not a single attempt to take his pocket book. He made a memo of the height of every building that he counted, and gives a graphic description of what the Bowery looks like today.

Henry Walthall and bride have arrived in our town, and some of the papers have been mean enough to say that Hank is not legally wed, simply because he did not wait a year after a certain court proceeding in Chicago, but slipped right off to Indiana and said "I do."

Diplomatic relations between Rupert Julian and Wid Gunning have been called off. Rupe is said to have sent a stinging telegram in which he said something about black and mail, and then chewed his English mustache. Rupe claims he makes "critic proof" pictures, which we claim is a new one.

San Francisco makes the claim that every location in Los Angeles has been shot and re-shot, but from a "dick" at the Alexandria Hotel, we learn there are a half dozen marble columns that have never had a camera pointed at them, and at least a half dozen more that have had one side shot.

It is hinted Tom Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan will write a story for the screen that will rival Hugo's "93," or "Toilers of the Sea," for on a recent Sunday they were out on the briny in Tom's yacht when that horrible wind storm came along that laid everything flat at many of the studios. They report the wind blew, and blew and blew and there were wild waves.

Now that the Flu is over, many at the Metro studio have been affected by the gasoline germ. New cars were purchased by almost everyone in sight. Albert Capellani, Edwin Carew, Viola Dana and May Allison, Cadillac; Fred Warren a Buick and Finis Fox a Nash. Next we'll hear about Max Karger and Joe Ingle rolling about in a Rolls-Royce.

"The Birth of a Race," Opens at Blackstone Theatre, Chicago

"THE Birth of a Race," long looked for, had its premier Sunday, December 1 at the Blackstone Theatre in Chicago.

A report from Chicago reads: "It is a splendid production from every angle. Bigness is its key-note. It is a spectacular film telling of the world's history from Noah down to the present, and held together with an allegorical thread. The results are most desirable, artistically, and from a pictorial point of view the numerous scenes are as delightful as beautiful etchings.

"It blends the ancient with the modern in exquisite photography, in a soft blue tint, which is most pleasing.

"There is good acting all the way through the production, and the director has handled the mob and battle scenes very smoothly. The staging and costuming are excellent and show that a great deal of time and thought and money were expended.

"The orchestra of thirty musicians is under the direction of Joseph Breil, who wrote the music for the picture, and who is also the composer of the music for 'Birth of a Nation' and 'Intolerance.'"

Dubuque Church Capitulates to Motion Pictures

A REPORT to Motion Picture News this week from Dubuque, Ia., reads as follows:

"Within the last few years the opposition to motion pictures has almost entirely been swept away. Priests, ministers and other public speakers gradually recognized the worth of pictures and the good they can do, and began to promote instead of oppose the motion picture. The cinema's popularity has increased enormously and at the present time Dubuque is considered a big motion picture center.

"One of the last churches to come over to the side of the picture was St. John's Lutheran Church. On December 1 the pastor, Rev. S. Salzman, announced that every Friday throughout the winter, pictures would be shown at the church. These are a series of three-reel motion pictures depicting all the phases of the activities of the Lutheran church and are noted for their entertaining as well as educating qualities. They are produced under the capable direction of K. M. Scoville and are said to be veritable 'sermons in celluloid.'

"With the showing of motion pictures in a church noted for its severity, all opposition to the cinema in Dubuque will surely die down."

Green Bay Quarantines Homes and Buildings

AFTER finding in two experiments that no real good was accomplished toward stamping out influenza in Green Bay, Wis., by closing motion picture houses, theatres, churches and amusement places, the City Council enacted an ordinance providing for a strict quarantine over all homes, buildings and premises inhabited by persons ill with influenza. The ordinance went into effect Tuesday, December 3, and by December 7 the effect in reducing the number of new cases of the dangerous contagious disease had become apparent to the health authorities. The number of new cases of influenza dropped from 24 and 30 on December 2 and 3 to 5 on December 6.

With the adoption of the quarantine ordinance, the City Council lifted the ban which closed picture houses and other public places for a period of one week. The closing order was the second since the influenza epidemic broke out here in September. The new method of handling the situation precludes any possibility of future orders shutting up picture houses and other amusement places, and that fact is gratifying to the owners of houses who suffered financial loss when their houses were dark. The constant worry of the theatre owners and managers that they might be cut out of a revenue at any time under the old method of closing public places in an attempt to curb the epidemic is no longer with the owners and managers.

There is a valuable lesson for the health authorities throughout the country in the experience of Green Bay in handling the influenza epidemic. There is ample proof to convince any fair-minded person that the quarantine method is the only efficient way to curb the spread of influenza. It has been proven here that closing amusement places does not accomplish the desired results, whereas quarantining families of persons ill with the disease does accomplish the desired results, and accomplishes them quickly.

November Proves Successful in Dubuque

NOVEMBER was a very successful month for Dubuque moving picture exhibitors. This was due in part to the quarantine in October, for people attended the theatres more than ever after their enforced absence. Another reason was that the pictures shown were of a high standard; good, clean comedies, strong dramas, clever comedy dramas and but a few of the so-called "unhappy ending pictures." (Dubuque exhibitors are showing fewer and fewer of these latter pictures, for not only do they make the patrons dissatisfied, but they take away from the popularity and reputation of a theatre.)

Elgin Items of Interest

MARY PICKFORD in "How Could You, Jean?" played to three good houses at the Grand Thanksgiving afternoon and evening. The management provided for two special matinee performances, one at 2 o'clock, the other at 4 o'clock. The picture made a tremendous hit with all who saw it and stirred fans to renewed appreciation of and love for "America's Sweetheart."

JACK PICKFORD in "Mile-a-Minute Kendall" was at the Grand the first two days of the week of Thanksgiving. The picture was very well liked. Attendance was good. In the late week the Grand showed Elsie Ferguson in Ibsen's "A Doll's House." Women patrons seemed particularly pleased with Miss Ferguson's acting, but disappointed in costumes, settings and other details so attractive to the average woman theatre-goer.

ELGIN managers are sons of gloom. They have been, in fact, ever since the "flu" closed houses in early October. While they were permitted to re-open after three weeks, the epidemic has increased in the city and surrounding towns since, and it is their belief that newspapers are making reports of cases too conspicuous. As a consequence, they are grumbling at the papers and one manager even went so far as to cut his advertising out of the one of two papers which most stressed influenza items.

FOR the week following Thanksgiving the Grand announced the following pictures: For Monday and Tuesday, December 2 and 3, Clara Kimball Young in "The Savage Woman"; for Tuesday and Wednesday, December 4 and 5, Constance Talmadge in "A Pair of Silk Stockings"; for Friday and Saturday, December 6 and 7, "America's Answer."

"ROARING LIONS ON THE MIDNIGHT EXPRESS" led the Friday evening comedy bill at the Star the first week in December. With it were shown Chester Conklin in "Dizzy Heights and Daring Hearts," and an episode in the thriller, "The Fight for Millions." Other showings at the Star in that week were: Herbert Rawlinson and Gladys Leslie in "The Mating," Charlie Chaplin in "The Rival Mashers," Corinne Griffith in "Miss Ambition," "Capers and Crooks," Charles Clary in "The Blindness of Divorce," the Mack Sennett comedy, "Her Blighted Love," William Farnum in "True Blue," the comedy, "No Place Like Jail," and Alice Joyce in "Everybody's Girl."

AN episode in "The Bull's Eye" serial, Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty the Masher," an O. Henry story, "The Bird of Bagdad," and latest edition of the Animated Weekly made up the Monday "Kwantity Kwality Kombination" at the Temple theatre the first December week. Other showings of the week were announced to be: William S. Hart and Margery Wilson in "The Primal Lure," Gail Kane in "The Dare Devil," the Strand comedy, "Keep Smiling," Priscilla Dean, Herbert Rawlinso and all-star cast in "Kiss or Kill," Lyons and Moran comed "Please Hit Me," Rosemary Thebe in "Love's Pay Day," Off cial War Review Carmel Myers in "All Night," Monroe Sali bury in "Hugon, the Mighty," and the comedy, "Look! Who here."

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" was the feature bi at the Orpheum the week of December 2. It was shown Wed nesday and Thursday. Other pictures of the week were: Kitt Gordon in "Merely Players," May Allison in "The Return Mary," Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie," and Lewes Stone in "Inside the Lines."

Film Flashes from Flint

FLINT'S big Victory parade on Thanksgiving Day, in whic about 12,000 marchers took part, was filmed by Jake Bake cameraman for the Metropolitan Company at Detroit, for th Palace theatre, where a week's run of the picture will be give About 500 feet of splendid close-ups of the marchers were s cured by Mr. Baker.

O. L. ELSLER, who has been managing the Majestic theatr playing stock since last September, has resigned to go t Akron, Ohio, where he becomes general manager of the Hip podrome Arcade Company, which is erecting a building wit two theatres, one for pictures and the other for vaudevill and also containing 117 stores. The construction of the Akro building was held up by the war, but Mr. Elsler says it wi proceed now with an outlay of $1,000,000 instead of $700,00 originally called for.

MANAGER C. EDGAR MOMAND of the Garden theatr sure picked a winner in "Vive la France," with Dorothy Da ton, for the last half of the week beginning Thanksgiving Da With the populace all stirred up over a big Victory parade an demonstration Thanksgiving Day, Manager Momand "sprung the picture, and his house was packed all Thanksgiving afte noon and evening with crowds who showed their patriotic en thusiasm. The picture did good business for the remaining the engagement.

SOME excellent publicity has been secured by Manage Charles Garfield of the Orpheum for his showing of "Th Woman the Germans Shot," which is to be shown here soo through the fact that Mrs. Basil Clark, formerly a resident Belgium during the early part of the war, has spoken he several times about the horror of Edith Cavell's death. Mr Clark in making appeals for the various Liberty loans and othe war funds here referred many times to Mrs. Cavell and Mar ager Garfield dug up some of these speeches to use for pub licity. He staged a heavy advertising campaign on this e cellent foundation and is expecting big results.

They Say in Chicago That—

M. C. HUGHES, manager of the Metro program, Chicago office, has closed a contract with the Virginia Theatre, this city, for all their stuff, the Virginia having gone into pictures.

THE Gold Theatre, on Twelfth Street, has rendered a bill to Cress E. Smith, manager of the Metro Chicago offices, for a new door to replace the one damaged by the crowds during the fourth day showing of "Eye for Eye." Harry Miller of the Rose Theatre, has likewise put in a claim for a new brass rail, the loss of which he blames on the same picture.

HARRY REAVER, for the past two years connected with the Metro Cleveland office, is now working the Indiana territory out of the Chicago office of Screen Classic Productions.

A MOST enjoyable dinner was given in the Crystal Room of the Blackstone Hotel, Thursday, December 5, by the Goldwyn Chicago office in honor of Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Co. and Samuel Rothapfel, the director of New York's Rialto and Rivoli theatres. The luncheon was attended by Chicago's elite of filmdom. Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Rothapfel were introduced by Nathan Ascher of the Ascher Bros. organization and delivered straight from the shoulder addresses on the two angles of the business—that of the producer and of the exhibitor. Ike Van Runkle, manager of the Chicago Goldwyn office is to be congratulated upon the manner in which he handled a most enjoyable affair.

E. C. BOSTIC, of Milwaukee, has been in Chicago, spending some time with the various exchanges.

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of the Famous Players, spent a few days in Chicago recently.

MAX LEVY, of the Chicago Metro office, is in training for the rush of business he expects to close on in the new picture—"Wilson or the Kaiser?"

IT is reported on the best of authority that while the Chicago Board of Censors were viewing the Goldwyn production of "A Perfect Lady," featuring Madge Kennedy, they were unanimous in expressing themselves that the picture was one of the cleanest that had been seen in a long time and would make a big hit.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager of the Chicago Universal office, says that the serial, "The Lure of the Circus," featuring Eddie Polo is proving itself one of their strongest drawing cards. It is being run in two hundred houses in the city of Chicago. In the case of a number of the theatres, this is the first serial that they have booked since the "Adventures of Kathlyn," and they all report big business.

AARON J. JONES gave a birthday luncheon at the Illinois Athletic Club to seventeen of his associates last Saturday.

THE Virginia theatre, Chicago, will be re-opened under the management of E. W. Rustishauer, owner of the New Wonderland theatre, Chicago.

H. F. BRINK, who was manager of the Sherry, Chicago office, has been appointed manager Kansas City of the Film Clearing House.

JOE LYON is now booker for the Sherry Service and Geo. Kleine System Pictures at the General Film Chicago office.

C. W. BUNN, manager of the United Picture Theatres Co., Chicago office is on its way home from New York where he has been arranging matters in regard to several of their forthcoming releases.

ANITA STEWART, one of the best known photoplay stars is one of the latest contributors to the Chicago "Herald and Examiner" Christmas Fund, having just forwarded them her check for $250. Miss Stewart is said to be one of the biggest hearted women in her profession and believes in those less fortunate than herself getting some of the joys of life.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

LIEUTENANT HARRIS HICKOX, once owner of the Vogue theatre in this city, returned from a years' service in France on December 2. Hickox was stationed in the Rheims sector most of the time and saw considerable action. He was in Paris on November 11, the day the armistice was signed, and tells a fine account of the great celebration. Looks the picture of health and says army life is great, but was glad to get home.

THE ROYAL THEATRE has installed a new Minusa Gold Fibre screen.

BARNEY ROSENTHAL, manager of the Universal exchange at St. Louis, accompanied by Maurice Engel, advertising manager for the same company, and M. J. Goldbaum, special representative, were in the city putting on "Crashing Through to Berlin." This picture played two days at the Royal theatre and moved to the Empress for one day. Business was only fair at the Royal, as the theatre has had a run of war films and the public was "off" them temporarily.

MR. LEBALDT, musical director of the Majestic theatre, died November 28 of pneumonia.

W. K. SINES, publicity manager for the Princess theatre, is down with a severe cold which threatens to develop into the "flu." It is hoped W. K. does not become seriously ill. Catherine Calvert had three big days at the Princess in "Marriage" on November 24, 25 and 26. Milton Sills in "Sins of Ambition" followed on the 27th and 28th, and G. M. Anderson staged a comeback to Springfield on the 29th and 30th with "Red Blood and Yellow." Business was satisfactory throughout the week.

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALKS was given at the Chatterton on Thanksgiving Day. The subject was "Paris in 1918." Business was only fair. The pictures were highly interesting.

THE GAIETY THEATRE had one of the best weeks in a long time with "The Squaw Man" and Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week." "The Squaw Man" played the first four days of the week of November 24-30, and "Thirty a Week" was on for three days, starting Thanksgiving Day. Moore has rapidly become a great favorite since joining with Goldwyn and he packs the Gaiety every time he comes. "Mongrels," a very surprising and highly amusing Fox, was also on the bill and gave great satisfaction.

THE VAUDETTE took Pauline Fredericks' "A Daughter of the Old South" off after the second day and replaced it with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Americano." For the last three days of the week of November 28 Manager Watts had Vivian Martin in "Mirandy Smiles," a very good picture.

THE VAUDETTE has contracted for Burton Holmes' Travel Pictures and Bray Pictographs. The first one was shown for four days, starting December 1.

EVELYN NESBIT did very well at the Lyric on November 28, 29 and 30. While the picture was not a world-beater, it gave general satisfaction. One of the surprising features of the crowds was the large number of old folks and very young ones who attended the theatre.

THE LYRIC had two good days with the Lee children in "Tell That to the Marines" on November 24 and 25. Ethel Barrymore did not fare so well in "Our Mrs. McChesney," a fine picture. Why she did not draw is one of the mysteries of the film business.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD had three big days at the Princess with "Pals First," his last Metro production. Lockwood was always a great favorite in this city and motion picture fans sincerely regret his untimely death. "Pals First" gave great satisfaction, in fact it was one of the best pictures of the current season.

ETHEL CLAYTON in "Womens' Weapons" delighted the Vaudette crowd for four days, starting December 2. The picture was the sort that appealed to men and women, and the children in the cast pleased both young and old. "Fatty" Arbuckle in one of his Sennett re-issues, "Fatty's Hoodoo Day," was also on the bill. For the last half of the same week Manager Watts has Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Range."

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE," D. W. Griffiths' newest Artcraft picture, featuring Lillian Gish and Robert Harron, played four days at the Gaiety starting December 2 and did big business the first two days. The engagement promises to be one of the big successes of the year. "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Sheriff" was also on the bill, and the little colored boy and the comedian's dog made the audiences roar. The last half of the week of December 1-7 the Gaiety will have Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36."

NAZIMOVA comes to the Princess in "Eye for Eye" on December 8. The engagement will be for three days.

TOM MIX scored heavily at the Lyric with "Fame and Fortune" on December 2 and 3; Alice Joyce in "Everybody's Girl," a Vitagraph play, was booked on December 4 and 5, and on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 5, 6 and 7, Manager Loper has William Farnum in "Riders of the Purple Sage."

BEN ROVIN is doing great at the Amuse-U. Ben is playing much of the Fox output now, taking Victory, Standard and Excel productions and Fox Sunshine comedies. Ben always has his eye out for something good for his folks, and the business he is doing is proof positive that he knows what his patrons want.

REPORTS from the North End Circle are that business has fallen off since the influenza epidemic.

LOUIS KERASOTES had a funny thing happen to him lately. Louis booked "The Iron Test" and was all set for the first episode. Imagine his surprise when the second chapter arrived instead. He had to put it on, as he had nothing else, and got away with it. There wasn't a single patron came out and thought anything was wrong. As things stand now, Louis says, "What's the use of running the first one? I can't do it now that I have run the second one."

"WHY AMERICA WILL WIN" was changed to "Why America Won" at the Royal by Gus Kerasotes, which had a three-day run starting Thanksgiving Day. Business was bad all three days, and Gus wished he had something else in place of the picture he had. "They don't want war," is what Gus says now.

THE CAPITOL is going along nicely, playing good shows and doing fine business. Manager Maisel always plays to capacity on Sundays. On Monday, December 2, he had "The Auction Block"; Tuesday, "False Ambition," with Alma Rubens, and on Wednesday, Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country."

THE second of the Newman Traveltalks comes to the Chatterton on Tuesday, December 3. The subject will be "Wartime France."

They Say in Chicago—

ANDREW KARZAS, owner of the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, is at West Baden, Indiana, for his health.

JOHN COLEMAN, of the Joy theatre, Mount Carmel, Ill., is visiting in Chicago, looking over the new releases.

THE latest reports received by the exchanges in Chicago show that the "Flu" has closed the following theatres until about January first: Illinois—Streator; Lincoln; Highland; Seaton; Prophetstown; Monmouth; West Union; Collinsville; Savanna; Neponset; LaSalle. Indiana—LaPorte; Gary; Michigan City; Logansport; Richmond.

CHRIS WHALAN, manager of the George Kleine System, working at the General Film Chicago office, claims that he is kept so busy that he has barely enough time to eat.

RALPH BRADFORD, manager of the Triangle, Chicago office, claims that their batting average was 100 per cent with the four houses closed on the second round of the "Flu." Premier, Oak, Liberty and American; they were all Mr. Bradford's customers.

MANAGER MILOSLOWSKEY, former owner of the Palace and Family theatres of Des Moines, Iowa, which he sold to the Blank Interest, is now making Chicago his headquarters before leaving for the Coast.

ACCORDING to Doctor Robertson of the Health Department, some of the theatre owners must have forgotten about the prevention order issued when they were allowed to reopen. He says although the Influenza has been checked it is not over. Some of the theatre owners have thrown aside all precautions. They have been again notified to observe the rules or their places will be closed again immediately.

CHARLES J. STEWART, the owner of the Pala Royal on West Madison street, has been appointed manager of the Madison Square theatre, succeeding Sidney Smith.

HARRY MILLER, manager of the Rose, Boston and Alcazar, located in Chicago's loop, and owner of the Acme theatre, is now booking the pictures for Ward Miller, formerly outfielder of the Chicago Cubs, who has taken over the Princess theatre in Dixon, Ill.

AL NORMAL, one of the oldest film salesmen in Chicago, has decided that the time has arrived to pull up stakes and make California his future home.

GRADUALLY the time draws near for the opening of the new Randolph theatre, which Jones, Lincoln & Schaefer are erecting on Randolph street between State and Dearborn. The steel and brick construction portion of the playhouse is finished and the interior finishers busily engaged making it one of the most beautiful picture theatres in the country. It was not the object of Jones, Linick & Schaefer to erect a massive theatre with large seating capacity and built solely for the purpose of seeing how many people could be crushed together to view one picture. The Randolph was built for the sole purpose of presenting the finest motion pictures manufactured to a capacity attendance of not more than eleven hundred. While in New York last week, Aaron J. Jones arranged to secure pre-release service for the Randolph. Mr. Jones also announced that the theatre will be managed by Louis J. Jones, until recently manager of the Studebaker theatre, and that he will have as his assistant manager Walter H. Moore, who has been assistant manager of the Orpheum theatre for several years. Ralph T. Kettering, publicity director for Jones, Linick & Schaefer announces that the Randolph theatre will open its doors Christmas day.

R. C. CROPPER of the Beehive Exchange, Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis, is enthusiastic over the satisfaction being given by "Topics of the Day," the news reel compiled by the Literary Digest. Mr. Cropper says that the recent review by the Motion Picture News has been a wonderful help, and that his bookings are most satisfactory.

PETER J. SCHAEFER has been bitten by the twentieth century bug. Formerly it was Aaron J. Jones who made wild dashes between Chicago and New York on this peer of all trains. Now Peter Schaefer has taken over the run, while Aaron Jones is resting up. He arrived in Chicago last Saturday, left on the Century Tuesday and is expected home Monday of this week. Upon his next trip East, which is scheduled for December 10, Peter J. Schaefer has arranged to take Emil Mayer, his general auditor. Looks like finances are becoming an important factor with the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Motion Picture Industry.

SAMUEL I. LEVIN, general manager for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, celebrated Thanksgiving Day twenty-four hours in advance by gathering together a flock of feminine pulchritude as stenographers, etc., in the office of Jones, Linick & Schaefer and dined and wined them at the Hamilton Club.

Gathered In Green Bay

MABEL NORMAND, the Goldwyn star, was screened in "A Perfect 36" at the Colonial theatre December 6-7. She delighted her audience. The picture is replete with amusing scenes.

"THE VELVET HAND," a Blue Bird film, was shown December 5 at the Royal theatre.

THE Orpheum theatre produced Lyman Howe's pictures of the "Flying Marines," and a scenery in Mexico and Africa December 3 and 4.

ROY STEWART played in "The Fly God" December 3-4 at the Royal theatre. The production is a Triangle.

MANAGER H. K. TIMM announced that the Griffith production, "The Great Love," will come to the Orpheum theatre soon.

"THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN," starring Grace Valentine, was presented in the Colonial theatre December 3-4-5. It is a George Kleine production and proved an adaptable film for re-opening the picture house after a shut-down of a week because of the influenza epidemic.

JULIAN ELTINGE, Paramount star, was presented in "The Widow's Might," in the Orpheum theatre December 5-6-7-8. She proved popular with the audiences.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE played in the Select film, "Good Night, Paul," at the Grand theatre December 5-6-7-8.

"THE TRUE SOUL WOMAN," a Universal special, was shown December 6-7 at the Royal theatre. Priscilla Dean was in the leading role.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," the Griffith picture, will play a return engagement at the Orpheum theatre December 10-11-12.

"THE HOUSE OF MIRTH," an adaptation of the novel, was shown at the Dreamland theatre in Dubuque Friday and Saturday, November 29 and 30. That the producers of this photoplay were wise in retaining the original name of the book, could be plainly seen by the way the lovers of Mrs. Wharton flocked to the theatre. The stars of the play, Katherine Harris Barrymore, Lottie Briscoe, Henry Kolker and Joseph Kilgour, were all well cast and admirably suited to the roles they portrayed.

JACK LIVINGSTON in "Who Is to Blame?" was the star at the Liberty theatre on Friday, November 29. On Saturday Ann Luther was presented in "Her Moment," a tense, gripping drama, full of interest from beginning to end.

"THE ROSE OF THE WORLD," with the star, Elsie Ferguson, played at the Family theatre on Saturday, November 30. Never before was the talented Artcraft player cast to better advantage—her role seemed to be especially created for her. Wyndham Standing, too, had a most pleasing role. The picture drew as all Miss Ferguson's pictures draw—good.

PAULINE FREDERICK played at the Princess theatre Friday and Saturday, November 29 and 30, in the celebrated "La Tosca." Miss Frederick's acting in this photoplay could truly be termed wonderful.

"THE TEMPLE OF DUSK" with Sessue Hayakawa, was presented at the Grand on Friday, November 29. The popular Japanese player again scored a big hit with Grand patrons. He is very well liked, not only by fans of this theatre, but by theatre-goers all over the city, due, no doubt, to his acting and plays which are so different from the usual style of features one sees.

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES," with Jane and Katherine Lee, shown at the Dreamland theatre Sunday, December 1, certainly broke the record as a crowd getter. From the opening hour, at 1:30 o'clock, until closing time, every performance was very well attended. In the afternoon, from 2 to 4 o'clock, the people had packed the lobby and were standing out on the sidewalk; the same was true in the evening between the hours of seven and nine.

THE Liberty presented a William Fox production, "The Bird of Prey," with Gladys Brockwell, on Sunday, December 1. Miss Brockwell is truly an artist of no mean ability, and Liberty patrons are at last recognizing her worth. For a time Miss Brockwell did not have suitable plays; of late they have been better, and her drawing power is increasing. According to the manager, Mr. Wilber, the Liberty did more than an average business.

ENID BENNETT, the star of the "Biggest Show on Earth," which drew so well here last month, was presented at the Princess theatre Sunday, December 1, in "The Vamp." Miss Bennett was as pleasing as ever in this picture, and she had the advantage of having a capable leading man.

DOROTHY DALTON played at the Family theatre Sunday, December 1, in "Love Letters," an interesting, quite original photoplay. As usual Miss Dalton drew a good house.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, one of the screen's most charming comediennes, played at the Princess theatre Monday and Tuesday, December 2 and 3, in "The Lesson." Miss Talmadge was supported by a good cast, headed by Tom Moore, who is a splendid drawing power himself. Every one who saw this play pronounced it to be first rate.

FOR the past year or so Dubuque exhibitors have been running Harold Lloyd comedies as fillers. People seemed to like them from the start, and within the last few months their popularity has increased in a surprising manner. One exhibitor left out a Lloyd comedy one week and such a howl went up from his patrons that he quickly put them back on the bill. Film fans like Lloyd's comedies because, while a bit on the slapstick order, they have a good story, are full of laughs, and the players look like human beings, which cannot be said of the actors in some comedies. The Liberty and Majestic show his comedies the most.

FRANCIS FORD in "Berlin via America," was presented at the Grand on Monday, December 2. This was Ford's first appearance in Dubuque since his serial days, when he starred with Grace Cunard, and all his old friends turned out to greet him.

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Secret of the Storm Country," was the attraction at the Family theatre Tuesday, December 3. Miss Talmadge has been a favorite at the Family ever since her first Select picture, "Panthea." Family patrons liked "The Secret of the Storm Country" very much, as well they might, for it is one of Miss Talmadge's best vehicles. Niles Welsh also came in for quite a bit of praise for his fine work in the role of Frederick Graves.

A. H. BENNETT, proprietor of the Nemo theatre at Earlville, Ia., is showing an episode of the "House of Hate," with Pearl White and Antonio Moreno, every Saturday, to big houses. Pathe News and a reel of comedy are shown in conjunction with this serial.

THE Belknap theatre at Hopkinton, Ia., have a Paramount pictures night every Wednesday. All the famous Paramount and Artcraft stars, Marguerite Clark, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, etc., will be shown. On Wednesday evening, November 27, Mary Pickford was shown in "A Romance of the Redwoods."

THE Palace theatre at Waverly started off the month of December in a fine manner by showing "Prunella," with Marguerite Clark. The picture was held over for Monday. On Tuesday and Wednesday "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," was shown to packed houses.

DURING the week of November 24 the most popular pictures shown at the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Ia., were "A Modern Musketeer," with Douglas Fairbanks, "Jules of the Strong Heart," with George Beban, and "Social Quicksands," with Francis Bushman. During the week of December 1 "Back to the Woods," with Mabel Normand," and "Scandal," with Constance Talmadge, were the best attended plays.

ON Thanksgiving Day the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., presented Constance Talmadge in that screamingly funny comedy-drama, "Good Night, Paul." On Friday and Saturday Madge Kennedy was featured in "The Danger Game." Both of these features have a good drawing power.

WILLIAM S. HART played at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., Friday, November 29, in "The Square Deal Man." On Saturday Alice Brady was presented in "The Ordeal of Rosetta."

THE Cozy theatre at Dyersville had one of the most wonderful motion pictures of the day, "Tarzan of the Apes," for its Thanksgiving Day program. This picture drew unusually well.

Dubuque Theatres Have Good Thanksgiving Bills

ON Thanksgiving Day every Dubuque moving picture theatre had an excellent bill. Every show was good and the houses they drew were better.

The Princess had, perhaps, the most popular star that day. Mabel Normand is a great favorite here and her play "Back to the Woods" was very well attended and met with instant approval.

Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" made quite a hit at the Family theatre that day. Miss Marsh's plays are always good, but "The Cinderella Man" was undoubtedly one of the best plays in which she has appeared this year.

"Miss Innocence" with June Caprice was well received at the Dreamland theatre.

What Racine Is Doing

"AMERICA'S ANSWER," the second United States official war picture, was seen at the Bijou theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, December 9, 10 and 11.

The picture is assembled from 30,000 feet of film taken by the U. S. Signal Corps, A. E. F., by order of General Pershing and under the direction of the General Staff. It is exhibited by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information through the World Film Corporation.

The management of the Bijou is advertising extensively, having the hearty co-operation of the local newspapers, in this production. A tent has been erected on the main square in the city which is literally covered with posters. A 24-sheet ad adorns the front of the post-office, while the spirit of the city as well as the movie fans seems to cluster around this great production.

THE RIALTO played "Eye for Eye," staring Nazimova, before one of the biggest crowds that ever turned out to see a picture. For the two days that this production was shown the 1,400 seats at the Rialto were filled every minute of the evening. Both nights crowds were actually turned away. Many of the patrons, unable to witness the evening performance, turned out for the matinee performance in large numbers.

C. M. DeLORENZO, special representative of the Metro Pictures, which corporation is putting on this production, visited the local theatre for the purpose of seeing how this picture was drawing. Inasmuch as many of the movie lovers were unable to see this play, a return engagement has been booked for the Palace December 17 and 18.

THE admission price at the Rialto has been reduced from 20 to 15 cents again and a noticeable change has already taken effect on the populace. The theatre has such productions as "The Hell Cat," featuring Geraldine Farrar, and "Branding Broadway," starring William S. Hart, booked for this week.

THE PALACE has been doing a fairly good business since the reopening after the influenza epidemic. Next week the management will play Harold Lockwood in "Pals First," and "Arizona," featuring Douglas Fairbanks.

MR. BLOOMBERG, who heretofore was associated with Mr. Norman at the Rex, has left that theatre to take up the position of manager of the Rialto and Palace, which was left open when Mr. Lammereaux resigned. Before going to the Rex Mr. Blumberg was manager of the Palace, and his returning to that theatre marked a general surprise with the movie fans of this city.

Late News of Fond du Lac

THE war pictures should be re-edited before they are sent out these days, according to Manager Ainsworth of the Orpheum. "When the text tells what our Sammies are going to do to the Huns it starts a snicker for the picture fan knows it isn't up to date. It has already been done to the Huns," he declares.

CHARLEY CHAPLIN in "Shoulder Arms" at the Orpheum for the three days beginning Thanksgiving Day did as well as could be expected under present conditions.

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum declares that while his S R O sign suffered no injury during the three days run of Norma Talmadge in "Her Only Way," business was fairly good.

MRS. CHARLEY CHAPLIN'S first appearance in Fond du Lac since her marriage day occurred Thursday December 12, when "Borrowed Clothes" was put on for a three days run.

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum has booked the Select Pictures for the coming year. These include the two Talmadge sisters—Norma and Constance, both great favorites in Fond du Lac and the Mitchell Lewis productions.

PICTURES dealing with modern society have the pull these days, according to Manager Smith of the Bijou. At any event that is what the box office is showing, he declares, and he proposes to be guided by the hunch it has given him.

MANAGER VOLLERT of the Idea finds business improving at that theatre but still below normal.

"THE war pictures have run their course so far as Fond du Lac is concerned," declared Manager F. R. Smith of the Bijou theatre, to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "I don't thing the theatre or the subject has anything to do with it The war is over and the people are turning to pleasanter things. It so happened recently that each of the three Fond du Lac theatres was running a war picture, and a good one, at one and the same time. Here at the Bijou we had 'Italy's Flaming Front,' the Orpheum had 'Over the Top' while at the Henry Boyle Griffith's 'Hearts of the World' was showing. Did any of us do any business? Well hardly.

"I've made up my mind to this. There are to be no more war pictures for me. Of course those we have booked will be put on, but we don't book any more war pictures on the strength oof the demand for them—for there isn't any demand."

MANAGER SMITH of the Bijou has booked another of the Cecil DeMille pictures. "Old Wives for New" made a real hit. As a result Bijou patrons are soon to have an opportunity to see "We Can't Have Everything."

BUSINESS at the Fond du Lac moving picture houses is still way below normal. As a result the managers are depressed and are wondering when luck will turn. While the flu situation is better rather than worse, the public is nervous on the subject and moving picture fans are staying at home.

What Detroit Is Doing

M. W. McGEE has not, as yet, announced his new connection. The managing director of the Majestic theatre, Detroit, whose resignation to take effect on the first of the year was turned in several days ago, says that he is considering several offers but has not made up his mind. Mr. McGee was with the Majestic not only from the opening date of this successful playhouse but he supervised the actual building five months before the opening. He is one of the very few managers who studies each picture and gives it a production in keeping with it.

WHILE many sections of the state suffered from the "flu" epidemic and theatres by the score were closed in one city—Adrian—a theatre manager proved himself fully equal to meet the situation. He is Elwyn M. Simons, proprietor of the New Family theatre. It seems that the local board of health became alarmed over the "flu" and a smallpox epidemic and it was practically decided to close the theatres at a formal meeting. Mr. Simons heard of it, engaged two lawyers and demanded a hearing. Mr. Simons admitted that conditions were serious but declared that unless the 10-cent and basement bargain stores were closed with the theatres, he would get out an injunction. There was a spirited argument but Simons won out and the theatres have remained open.

DETROIT has a new and decidedly high-class residential theatre in the De Luxe, which was opened last Wednesday evening. It is located in the East End close to the Indian Village, an exclusive residential suburb.

THE DE LUXE is built in hippodrome design, much after the style of the Majestic, with long inclines and an unbroken rise of seats from the orchestra pit to the real wall. There are 1,600 seats, including boxes and the building is fire-proof in every respect. Arthur J. Moeller is the manager of the house. The opening attraction was Constance Talmadge in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots."

THE DE LUXE plays only Paramount and Select features. There are three performances daily at 2, 7 and 9 p. m. and prices are 15 and 20 cents. A 10-piece orchestra and a big organ provide the music.

NINE prints of "Shoulder Arms" are now being employed for the latest Chaplin film. Seven of these prints will be used in Detroit for several weeks. After running at the Madison for two weeks, where it broke the house record, it was shown for a week each and simultaneously, in the Regent, Orpheum and Colonial theatres.

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager for William Fox, visited Detroit last Saturday to take up with John H. Kunsky the leasing of the Washington theatre, Detroit. The Fox interests hold a lease dating from September 1, 1919. They are willing to pay Mr. Kunsky if they can take possession earlier but no terms were arrived at.

BEFORE "The Lure of the Circus" was released more than 100 theatres in Detroit and the state had booked it at rentals aggregating more than $14,000, the Universal office reports.

EVERY Broadway Strand program is numbered and each week seven pairs of tickets are given to the holders of lucky numbers.

THE FARNUM THEATRE, 2016 Jos Campau avenue, Detroit, has been sold to Louis Schlussel by the Schram Amusement Co.

ONE of the finest theatres in the state is the Regent at Battle Creek, operated by Lipp and Cross, which had its formal opening on Thanksgiving Day. It seats more than 1,000 persons and is said to be as beautiful and well appointed as any house of its size in the country.

What Milwaukee Is Doing

SOME of the big men of the country spent December 6 in Milwaukee, the guests of forty local exhibitors. A luncheon was served at the Hotel Wisconsin in honor of the out of town guests, including Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; S. L. Rothapfel, formerly manager of the Tom Saxe interests in Milwaukee, now manager of two motion picture palaces in New York, and Nathan Ascher, Chicago, owner of sixteen theatres. Mayor Dan Hoan, Milwaukee, presided at the luncheon and Frank Cook, manager of the Princess theatre, was toastmaster.

THE MERRILL THEATRE has signed a year's contract for the exclusive showing of Mabel Normand features.

MABEL NORMAND will return to the Merrill theatre for three days in "Mickey," the play that attracted so much attention that hundreds of requests came to repeat the engagement.

FANS are continuing to gather at the New Strand, that has become so popular, owing to the succession of stars appearing on the screens weekly. William Farnum in the "Rainbow Trail," sequel to the "Riders of the Purple Sage," will be seen at the New Strand until the end of the week.

"THE GREATEST THING IN LIFE," directed by David Griffith, predicted by many to be his most appealing picture, has had a most successful week at the Alhambra.

FANS who admire William S. Hart are flocking to see him in the "Border Wireless," showing at the Princess this week.

BILLIE QUIRK, former Vitagraph and Universal movie star, is the soloist at the Alhambra theatre this week.

IN connection with the Mary Pickford feature, appearing at the Alhambra theatre for the coming week, beginning Sunday, December 9, the prize octet of the Fifth Regiment band, Great Lakes Naval Station, will give a special musical program Friday afternoon and evening for the benefit of the Blue Bird Club, an organization for the entertainment of soldiers and sailors. The hostesses of the Blue Bird Club will attend the Friday afternoon and evening pictures.

EVERY precaution against the "flu" is being observed by all theatre managers throughout the city.

Flint Motion Picture Theatre Damaged by Fire

FIRE of undetermined origin which started in a closet used for janitor's supplies did damage estimated at $5,000 in the Palace theatre (vaudeville and pictures), Flint, Mich., Monday, December 3. The fire was discovered about 5 a. m. by a man who was passing and saw clouds of smoke belching from the building. An alarm brought several fire companies. The fireproof construction of the building had kept the flames checked to a portion of the foyer opposite which they started and the firemen by a judicious use of water prevented a loss that might have run well up into the thousands. The only loss was from what little fire there was in the foyer which burned a hole 20 feet square and from smoke which darkened the decorations. Except for the fact that out-of-town insurance adjusters were called for by local agents, who demanded the theatre be kept closed until an adjustment was made, the theatre could have gone on with its matinee as usual Monday afternoon. It was said the theatre would be closed only a short time, not to exceed a week.

The Palace is one of three theatres owned in Flint by W. S. Butterfield of Battle Creek.

Katterjohn Gives Enlightening Views on Presenting a Story

THE opinions of Monte M. Katterjohn on any of the various phases of motion picture production are always of interest and the fresh viewpoint which he brings to bear on the problems of the industry is invariably productive of valuable, constructive criticism. Indeed, it is his enthusiastic radicalism and his keen analytical grasp of the essentials of entertainment which have been largely instrumental in elevating him from the position of author to that of a producer in his own right, as the active production head of Katterjohn Films.

For this reason it is interesting to note that Mr. Katterjohn lays particular stress upon a point which has been largely overlooked by producers of motion pictures, but which might conceivably have a very decided effect upon the screen quality of a given photoplay.

"It will be admitted," says Mr. Katterjohn, "that while the story is of paramount importance in any motion picture, the manner and spirit of the production deserves every consideration. Those who are associated with the making of the play must all be thoroughly in the spirit of the story if the completed production is to show its value to the fullest extent.

"Not only must the players feel that their acts and emotions are actually those of the characters being portrayed, but the director himself must approach the filming of the story in the same spirit that actuated the author in creating it. A full understanding of the author's frame of mind must extend to the cutting room as well to insure an accurate reflection of his ideas, and the inclusion of just those scenes and bits of business which perfectly carry out the spirit of the story.

"This quality has a decided effect on the minds of theatregoers and has much to do with the reception accorded a picture. Get your audience into the spirit of the story in the first two hundred feet of film and their attention and sympathy from that point is assured. They feel and live and laugh and cry with the characters of the story, looking upon life through the eyes of those characters rather than through their own.

"But the antagonistic mind in any important stage of the picture's development may so alter the feeling and spirit of the story that its value is lost upon the spectator, with the subsequent result of a poor box-office attraction.

"Enthusiastic minds which sympathize with the trend of the story are worth their weight in gold at the box office which fact producers seem to have overlooked until very recently, and even now their numbers are too few."

Pettijohn Outlines Affiliated Plans to San Francisco Film Circles

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel of the Affiliated, has been visiting the Pacific Coast on business and stopped over in San Francisco on November 2 to meet with representative exhibitors and outline the plans of both the Affiliated and the United Booking Corporation. Among those present at the meeting, which was held in the office of the Mutual Film Corporation, 177 Golden Gate avenue, were: Eugene Roth of the California theatre; Howard J. Sheehan and George Mann of the Rialto; C. W. Midgeley of the American, Oakland, and the Alameda, Alameda; James Beatty of the Liberty, Fresno, and Liberty, San Jose; Charles Goddard of the Goddard, Sacramento; Louis Greenfield of the New Mission, New Fillmore, and Progress, San Francisco; Charles Frohman of the Queen, San Francisco; Frank Levy of the Royal and Polk, San Francisco; L. E. Lund of the Broadway, Oakland; Aaron Goldberg of the Apollo and Peerless, San Francisco; S. H. Levin of the Coliseum and Elite, San Francisco; L. Leven of the Regent, San Mateo; Joe Bauer of the Wigwam, San Francisco. The meeting was held at 10 o'clock in the morning and lasted several hours. It was devoted exclusively to the discussion of plans, and one of the remarkable features of the meeting was that all of the out-of-town exhibitors came to San Francisco especially to meet Mr. Pettijohn and hear what he had to say.

After the meeting Mr. Pettijohn expressed his pleasure in being in San Francisco. This is his first visit to the Coast and his main regret was that he could not stay longer. However, he expressed the hope that he would be able to return at an early date, when he might have an opportunity to see more of the sights in this section of the country. Notwithstanding his brief stay, he stated that all the impressions he had gathered from reports had been more than confirmed. He found that the men in the industry fully lived up to their reputation as live wires, up to the minute in all respects and in every respect the very highest type of business men. The theatres he visited, both in the downtown and the resident districts, he found far above the average of other cities. However, he added with a smile, these things did not astonish him as it merely confirmed the reports of the city which he had previously gathered.

The only matter which did really astonish Mr. Pettijohn was the perfect weather which prevailed during his brief stay. "It's more like spring than winter," he remarked as he inhaled a deep breath of ozone after the meeting.

Hugh Fay Is One of the Central Figures in a Forthcoming Henry Lehrman-William Fox Sunshine Comedy that Is Expected to "Knock 'Em Off the Seats"

Lehrman Adds Fourth Company at Hollywood

HENRY LEHRMAN, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, has added a fourth company to his personnel at his studios in Hollywood, California, to meet the ever-increasing demand for Sunshine Comedies since this brand of pictures were first presented by the Fox Film Corporation.

When, over a year ago, Henry Lehrman sold his interests in L-Ko to start producing Sunshine Comedies, he was considered one of the foremost producers of comedies in the industry. The larger, more modern studios which he erected for his Sunshine Comedies allowed him much wider scope than he had before, and surrounded by a staff of exceptional directors and comedians, most of whom were already familiar with Mr. Lehrman's methods, his productions soon became known as second to none in the comic interpretation and superb mounting.

During the past year the demand for Sunshine Comedies has been steadily increasing until, in many instances, Fox exchanges have reached the point where they cannot supply the demand, it is claimed.

To make comedies of the proportions which Mr. Lehrman has been making requires much more time than the average comedy. In order to release one production every other week, three companies have been working unceasingly. But now Mr. Lehrman has decided to build comedies of still greater magnitude, and to allow time for their production has added another company to his personnel, making four companies in place of three. Mack Swain and Gertrude Selby are still working under the direction of Fred Fishback, who joined the Lehrman forces a few months ago. Lloyd ("Ham") Hamilton will still work under the direction of Jack White, but has a new leading lady in Virginia Rappe, who was recently engaged by Mr. Lehrman after having successfully appeared in a number of Metro features.

Jack Blystone, who is a Lehrman product, having been associated with Mr. Lehrman for a number of years, has resigned the general supervision of L-Ko comedies to become a member of the staff of directors at the Sunshine studios, and in future will have charge of the productions in which Billie Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Betty Carpenter will appear.

The fourth company will be directed by Reggie Morris and Charles Parrett, with Jack Cooper, Leo White and Ethel Teare appearing in the leading roles.

Lasky Guards Resume Activities

THE LOS ANGELES HEALTH DEPARTMENT having been removed, the drills of the 51st Company, Military Reserve of California, formerly known as the Lasky Guards, will be resumed at Hollywood. The boys are getting restive and are anxious to execute their evolutions once again.

The minstrel show planned by the Lasky folk was again put into rehearsal last week and again Kenneth McGaffey is sending up loud and energetic demands for his four milk-white horses to be used in his act with Jack Mulhall. If the steeds are unobtainable a quartet of goats may be substituted.

Meanwhile Mr. McGaffey has distinguished himself by appearing in C. B. De Mille's picture as a "wayfarer." He swears it is not as a hobo and insists that it is a heavy acting part which required much careful study and rehearsal on his part. He admits there is now good and sufficient reason for designating this an all-star cast.

Roscoe Arbuckle and his genial manager, Lou Anger, are still away, somewhere in the South, resting and vacationing, and, in the case of the former, putting on weight.

Lila Lee is expected back sometime this month. Her smiling and cheery presence has been sadly missed.

Vivian Martin starts work in about two weeks, it is announced. Meantime the little star is at home enjoying a vacation after some strenuous work during the past summer.

Fred Kley emulated Milton E. Hoffman the other day and went out before breakfast to shoot quail. He got three, but declares that he shot many more which were lost in the brush. "If I only had had a dog," he sighs.

Bennie Zeidman, since returning from New York, declared there is no reason for him to alter his earnest conviction that the industry is still in its infancy, although he has some doubts about the surface having been scratched.

Influenza Lid Clamped Down on Butte

THE influenza lid was clamped on Butte with a bang November 30, all non-essential lines of business being ordered closed by the county board of health. Thus the city is closed tighter than ever and the length of the probable closedown is indefinite.

On the previous day a modified closing order was adopted, the theaters, cabarets, churches and dance halls being affected. This lead to a storm of protest from those interests and the following day the health officials decided to "go the limit."

The drastic action of the county board resulted in a tempest centered at the city hall. Mayor Maloney called a special meeting of the city council and by a vote of six to five the city officials decided that people within the corporate limits need pay no attention to the county board's orders, claiming that the board exceeded its jurisdiction when attempting to regulate affairs within the city limits. The city health board passed resolutions permitting business houses, including theaters and all amusements to run wide open, but stipulated the wearing of gauze masks. Saloons and other places reopened. The chief of police was instructed to make no arrests. However the county officials ordered the sheriff's office to make arrests and both sides appealed to the governor, with the threat of calling out the soldiers.

A truce was finally declared and the city, not admitting the county board's jurisdiction, finally acquiesced and agreed to permit the regulations to be enforced until the state board of health meeting scheduled for Wednesday, December 4, gives the final word.

The show business was badly demoralized by the constant agitation and under such conditions the theatre men prefer to remain closed. In fact the sentiment seems to be that no premature reopening is desired. About 50 new cases a day and 10 deaths appear to be the average in Butte at present. It is confidently expected that two weeks will bring about sufficient improvement to permit resumption of "business as usual."

Missoula theatres closed also and Helena is still closed. Other large Montana towns are open at this time.

What They Do in Seattle

THE influenza cases have not entirely disappeared in the Northwest, and while 70 per cent of the towns are open only 50 per cent of the picture houses opened, as in some cases the people were averse to going to them. The "flu" revisited some of the cities in a light form. This caused the closing of the houses for a couple of days in Everett, Great Falls, Lynden and other places. Since the influenza cases in Seattle and the larger cities were instantly checked by quarantining of the family, drastic measures were not necessary.

THE STAR THEATRE, Bellingham, was recently purchased by Mr. Quimby from Mr. Arnold.

THE PARALTA AGENCY is now occupying offices together with the Pathe agency.

H. G. ROSEBAUM of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently returned from a swing around a section of his territory.

A. J. KENNEDY, publicity manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the Northwest, has recently been praised for the excellent quality of work he has produced. Many a moving picture owner has been helped by his advice.

F. M. BROCKELL of St. Louis has assumed temporary charge of the Northwest Goldwyn exchange since Mr. Hill has resigned to devote all his time to private interests. A permanent manager will soon be installed.

J. M. DUNN, formerly connected with the Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, is now booker and assistant manager of the General Exchange office in Seattle.

A. M. HOGLE has taken a spin to Spokane for the Vitagraph. His reports show that business is picking up with great force.

R. STONE has been appointed shipping clerk for the General's Seattle office.

THE LIBERTY, Seattle, has recently made great hits with the following films produced by the General Film Company: "Tobin's Palm," "Rambles in Asphasia," "Allied Heroes in Switzerland" and "O. Henry and Birmingham Travels."

MESSRS. W. C. GOWEN AND CODE have hit the trail for the General, the Kleine System and the Sherry productions.

MANAGER W. A. MEAD of the Universal exchange in Seattle announces that he has employed a cameraman to be stationed in Seattle who will take pictures which will be shown on the "International News" film. This film will now carry 300 feet of Pacific Coast news on each screen which will be shown three times a week at each house. Consequently these weeklies are now 100 per cent weeklies.

EDDIE POLO, now bing featured in the Universal's "Lure of the Circus," will appear in person at any house which will display this film.

FRANK COFFINBERRY, formerly manager of the Orpheum in Portland, is in Seattle representing the Government in the Division of Films, Bureau of Public Information.

THE NORM THEATRE, Monmouth, is open for an occasional show.

BEN SMITH, manager of the theatre in Brewster, Wash., has closed his place and moved out of town.

THE WHEATON, Weiser, Idaho, has been closed.

A FIRE in the Liberty, Salt Lake, recently was fought and extinguished without any of the thousand people in the audience realizing anything was wrong. The fire was in the operator's booth. No serious damage was done.

ALEX PANTAGES is contemplating building a show house in Salt Lake City.

THE WILKES THEATRE will soon be opened in Salt Lake.

THE EDISON THEATRE management will soon build a new theatre in New Westminster, Wash.

THE AMERICAN THEATRE, recently completed at Sunnyside, has had its formal opening and proceeded in full blast after the "flu" ban was lifted. It seats 700 and was erected at a cost of approximately $20,000.

MANAGER BOSWORTH of the motion picture theatre in Ketchikan and Manager Spickert of the Palace, Juneau, Alaska, were recent visitors on Seattle's Film Row.

TARKINGTON BAKER, in charge of the new Universal publicity service, has been touring the Pacific Coast. Mr. Baker is studying the needs of the different territories. He has installed a newspaper service campaign which will be found very comprehensive.

Partial Closing Protested in Butte

RESOLUTIONS were passed by the theatre men of Butte at a meeting held Thursday evening, November 28, protesting against a partial closing of the city on account of the influenza epidemic. Such action was characterized as "class legislation" by some of the exhibitors present.

The "Committee of Three Hundred" presented the resolutions to the County Board of Health and the resultant action was to close all non-essential places of business. Banks, drug stores, food stores, coal houses, laundries, garages and but a few other enterprises were permitted to remain open. Those signing the resolution were the following: E. W. Keeler, People Hip; W. H. Belmond, Empress; H. W. Berry, Liberty; Frank T. Bailey, American, and William Woolfall, Harrison Avenue theatre.

The resolutions follow:

"Whereas, The county board of health did, on this 28th day of November, 1918, enact an order closing all theatres of this city for an indefinite period; and

"Whereas, Since the 10th day of October, when the first closing order went into effect, the influenza has increased, demonstrating the fallacy of a partial closing order; and

"Whereas, Since the 10th day of October nothing of any consequence has been done towards stamping out the influenza epidemic; and

"Whereas, Crowds are permitted to assemble in stores, parks, cafeterias, cafes, street cars and other places; and

"Whereas, The excuse given out by the health department for closing the theatres was that the influenza was distributed by personal contact of one person with another; and

"Whereas, We believe that if the public are permitted and encouraged to congregate in all places other than theatres and places of amusement, the value of the order first mentioned is made nil; and

"Whereas, We believe that the closing of all places of business, worship, education, amusement and other places where people congregate will quickly stamp out the epidemic, save many lives and restore our city to normal conditions; and

"Whereas, We are emphatically opposed to our health board unjustly discriminating against the theatres and other places of amusement of our city.

"Now, Therefore, First in the interest of humanity and second in the interest of fair play, equity and justice, we, the undersigned citizens and theatre managers of the city of Butte, do hereby petition to at once have the city of Butte and the county of Silver Bow enact an emergency ordinance providing for the closing of all places of business, worship, education, amusement and other places where people congregate, except drug stores, grocery stores and meat markets, with a regulation limiting the number of persons to congregate therein at any one time, and all such places be patrolled by members of the military, city police or members of the sheriff's office."

We wish to thank the many friends in the trade for their kind expressions of sympathy in our recent bereavement, and for the beautiful floral offerings.

All the News of Portland

A. H. McDONALD of the Rex theatre of Eugene, Oregon, was in town recently booking Mildred Harris in "For Husbands Only," with which he reopened his theatre. "I am going into every newspaper in the country," he said, for he grabbed immediately the advertising possibilities in the name of Mildred Harris as the newly-married Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

J. C. UGLOW, manager of the Orpheum theatre of Dallas, Oregon, was in Portland more than a week ago. He booked "Crashing Through to Berlin" as the feature that is hitting the psychological moment just right at this time. Mr. Uglow has been strong for the news reels from the Universal also, for his clientele is one that follows eagerly every bit of news from the boys across the pond, for they have lots of them over there in the army.

F. C. WESKIL, manager of the Bungalow, North Powder, is circulating that district making a canvas of the moving picture shows. He was in Portland the other day picking up the best shows he could find. "The Kaiser" will be shown in North Powder, and after it will follow "The Geezer of Berlin," "How Charlie Captured the Kaiser," and the big drama of the war, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

CHARLEY SCHRAM of the Grand theatre of Oregon City is showing two Jewel features in succession. The first was "A Soul for Sale" and the second "Crashing Through to Berlin."

AN innovation was introduced at the Globe theatre last week with the appearance of the Countess of Kingston three nights speaking in the interest of the Shamrock Fund for Disabled Irish Soldiers. Some pictures, the property of the Countess, were shown, including picture of the Blarney stone and the kissing of that stone. During intermission pretty Irish colleens sold shamrocks.

THE LATIN QUARTER, where real Bohemianism is reputed to hold sway, would welcome as its own the five girl ushers at the Majestic theatre, for the quintet of smiling maids now appear in the niftiest of artists' costumes. White trousers, black smocks, flowing ties and jaunty black caps that slouch most becomingly comprise their novel habiliments. After a day or so, when they blushed for the masculinity of their apparel, the girls became accustomed to the surprised and admiring glances of the Majestic patrons and are now accepting their tributes with perfect equanimity.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

UPON the return of Albert Hyneke, his brother, William Hyneke, has resigned the management of the Judith theatre at Lewistown. The retiring manager has several good offers but is as yet undecided as to which to accept. "Bill" made good during his tenure and had to contend with probably the most serious obstacles that the exhibitor has yet been called upon to grapple with. This condition was general over the entire country. Decreased attendance due to so many theatre-goers being called into the army, heavy war taxes and the "flu" shutdown were threefold problems to be overcome.

GEORGE BOURKE of the Universal has been spending several days in eastern Montana looking after bookings. He reports nearly all the big houses in the state now open, although a second shutdown has come in Butte and Missoula. Helena is still closed.

THE influenza situation in Great Falls is reported to be "shaky" with chances for a second shutdown.

NOVEMBER 30 the lid went on again in Butte. The closing presentation at the American was Norma Talmadge in "The Only Way."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was welcomed by the faithful at the Rialto for the closing bill. He appeared in "Come On In." An added attraction, in addition to the usual comedy, was "With Burton Holmes to the South Seas of Fiji." The animated news review rounded out a nifty program at Manager Ralph Ruffner's amusement emporium.

A COMMITTEE of Three Hundred appeared before the Board of Health of Silver Bow County Friday to protest against the "discriminatory" action taken the previous day when orders were issued closing only theatres, schools and churches. "All or none" was their motto and so the following day resolutions were passed closing all non-essential places of business in Butte and the county. The committee represented not only the theatre managers, but every branch of labor connected therewith.

MADGE KENNEDY in "The Service Star" and Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires" starred at the Ansonia and Orpheum respectively for the closing programs.

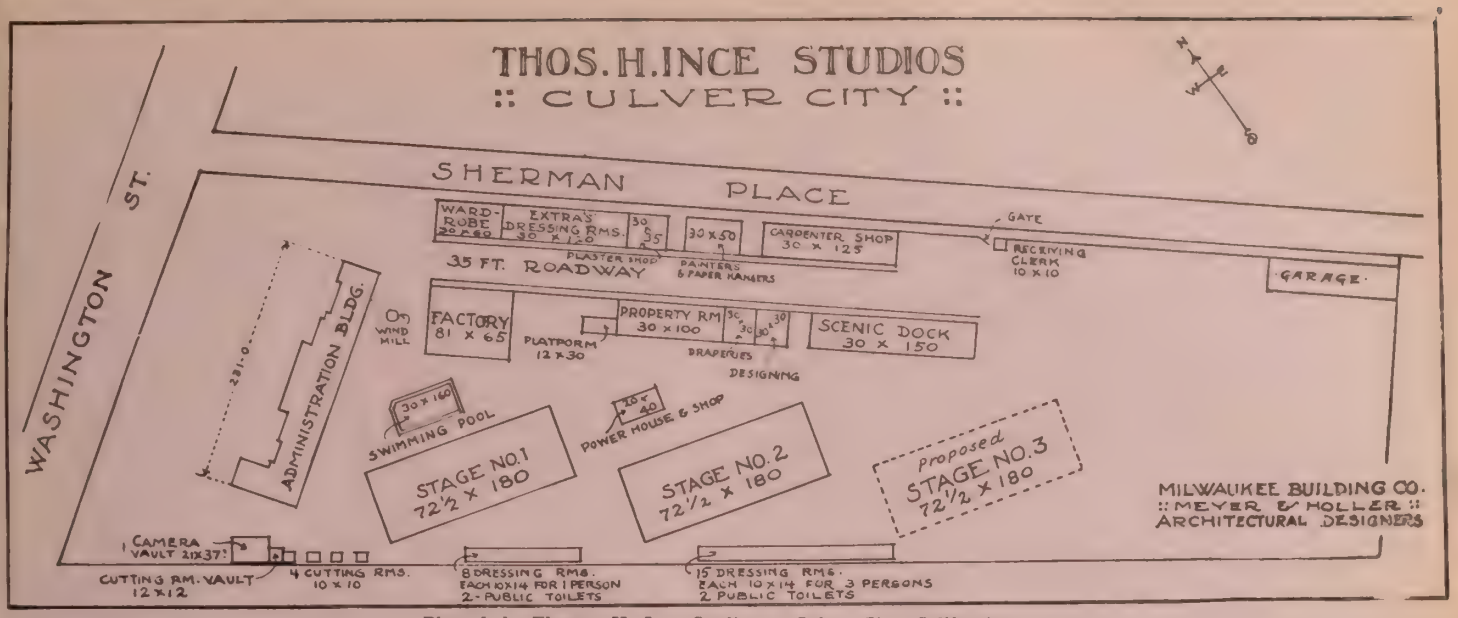
WITH reports from the state Board of Health at Helena not at all favorable as regards the influenza situation in Montana road men for the various film companies have but little to do in this territory.

"OVER THE TOP" is still playing in the smaller towns of the state to good business. Manager Moore of the Harlowton theatre packed 'em in on Thanksgiving day at 50 cents a throw. It pleased.

Spokane Bars Children Below Age of Twelv

ALL children below the age of 12 years in Spokane, Wash., are ordered by the board of health to keep away from motion picture shows.

So rapid was the spread of influenza among the school children in Spokane after the six weeks' closing ban was lifted November 18, when schools resumed activities, that the board of education last week decided to close the schools indefinitely and enforce a drastic quarantine on pictures so far as children are concerned.



Plot of the Thomas H. Ince Studios at Culver City, California

Spokane News Condensed

THE countenance of her soldier son, now dead, smiling as he partook of doughnuts at a Salvation Army hut back of the lines in France greeted his mother Mrs. Caroline Hansen of Spokane, from the Liberty theatre screen Thanksgiving eve. The unusual experience was reported by William Houck, manager of the Liberty. Mrs. Hansen remained in the theatre all evening after recognizing her dead son when he appeared in the war scenes of the Pathe weekly, witnessing the picture numerous times. Manager Houck presented Mrs. Hansen with a section of the film and she will have it enlarged.

"FOOL'S GOLD," the only product of the Washington Motion Picture corporation of Spokane, will be sold for a sum not less than $70,000, according to the New York agent, who has undertaken to prepare it for the market. Of this amount $21,473 will be left for distribution among the stockholders after all the debts are paid, according to F. K. McBroom, receiver for the company. The picture has been viewed by Reginald Warde, one of the leading agents of New York, who readily agreed to undertake the sale of the picture. He was enthusiastic over it, according to Mr.. McBroom. The picture as shown in New York ran about 8,000 feet. It will be cut down to 6,500 feet by Mr. Warde, who will write a prologue and insert new titles throughout the picture.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN and "The Hun Within" were counter attractions offered by the Liberty, playing to packed houses the first of the week. Charlie was greeted with gales of laughter in the three-reel comedy, "Shoulder Arms."

THE Clemmer presented a Pickford film, little Mary starring in "Johanna Enlists."

PEGGY HYLAND in "Marriages are Made," and Margarita Fisher in "The Mantle of Charity" were the two programs at the Class A.

MARY MILES WINTER opened the week at the Casino with "Rosemary Climbs the Heights" and Olive Tell in a new Metro picture, "Secret Strings" was the offering the latter part of the week.

Los Angeles Items

RALPH PROCTOR has been made western division manager for Pathe, with offices in Los Angeles. He was formerly in the Middle Western territory. He arrived in Los Angeles last week and immediately gave out an optimistic interview on big business that must be enjoyed by the film industry with the end of the war. He will have under his jurisdiction the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Salt Lake, Spokane and Denver offices.

W. MARKUS, owner of four leading theatres in Santa Barbara, was killed last week in an automobile accident. He had a large number of friends in Los Angeles. The theatres he controlled were the Palace, Mission, Portola and the Opera House.

G. R. SIRWELL, manager of the W. W. Hodkinson offices now established in the Pathe offices, left this week for a visit to a number of Southern California towns, where he will call on exhibitors in an effort to place contracts for Hodkinson releases.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

HARRY D. NAUGLE, late Western division manager of Vitagraph, who died November 23 at Omaha of influenza, was buried in Los Angeles at the Forest Lawn Cemetery November 29. The Los Angeles Vitagraph offices were draped in mourning and were closed all day. The day following the funeral W. H. Hepburn, branch manager of Vitagraph, sent the following letter to every branch manager in Mr. Naugle's territory: "In the beautiful sunshine of one of our most perfect Southern California days, amid a profusion of exquisite flowers—all so expressive of his character—our beloved friend and esteemed business associate, Harry D. Naugle, was laid to rest yesterday afternoon, Friday, November 29, at 3 p. m." A copy of the letter was also forwarded to the home offices of Vitagraph in New York.

BERNARD FISH and Harvey Gausman, road representatives of the Goldwyn exchange, Los Angeles, left for Southern California and Arizona points in an endeavor to crowd three months of business into one month, according to announcement by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

A PRIVATE preview of Geraldine Farrar's new picture, "The Hell Cat," was given by the Goldwyn exchange. Only a few exhibitors were present, owing to the ban on public gatherings, but those in attendance pronounced the picture one of the best productions in which Miss Farrar has appeared.

MANAGER JO RICKART of the Rickart and Nace, of Phoenix, Ariz., was in Los Angeles last week and signed the Goldwyn Star series for his new theatre, which will open soon in Phoenix. He predicted big business for the entire Arizona territory as soon as the influenza scare has blown over.

THE Los Angeles unit of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, comprising eleven Western states, which will handle all productions released by the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, was organized in Los Angeles, Friday, November 29. The directors are C. D. Barlow of Salt Lake; J. H. Siler, president of the Gale theatre, Whittier, Cal., and Frank A. McDonald, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles. Mr. Siler is president of the corporation. The corporation, being thus affiliated with the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, will do its releasing through the Mutual exchanges. Mr. Barlow came to Los Angeles in company with C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week that Miller's theatre on Main street will be called the Ray's Garden theatre hereafter. It opened Monday with William Farnum's "The Rainbow Trail." When the theatre closed at the beginning of the influenza ban it was playing "Riders of the Purple Sage," a William Farnum production.

AMONG some of the towns in California that closed because of influenza, reopened, and then closed again and are still closed this week are Pomona, Pasadena and San Diego.

J. L. MERRICK, Pacific coast supervisor for the Mutual exchanges, arrived in Los Angeles last week for an indefinite stay. He has just made a tour of Pacific coast Mutual exchanges and he predicts an excellent business following the closing period on account of influenza.

C. R. PATTON, branch manager of Mutual, was back in his office this week after a few days' illness. Yes, he was a victim of influenza.

HARRY LUSTIG, western district representative of Metro, left this week for Denver and Salt Lake, where he will visit Metro exchanges in those cities.

"PALS FIRST," starring Harold Lockwood, will be shown at Clune's Broadway theatre two weeks after the reopening of that house, it was announced this week by Branch Manager Lamb of the Metro exchange.

AMONG prominent Metro people arriving on the Pacific coast this week were Maxwell Karger, director general, and Viola Dana, Metro star. It is announced that Nazimova will come to Los Angeles soon, and other stars planning to work on the Pacific coast this winter are Emmy Wehlan and Hale Hamilton.

T. E. HANCOCK, branch manager of the World exchange, was ill with a severe cold last week. He denied having the influenza.

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, announced Monday that the Superba and Symphony theatres reopened with Universal productions on their programs. Monroe Salisbury in "Hugon the Mighty" was at the Superba, and the Symphony opened with Dorothy Phillips in "Talk of the Town."

THE new California theatre has signed with Universal for Hearst's International News Service, according to Branch Manager David Bershon of the Universal exchange. Grauman's theatre has signed for Hearst's International News Service, also, together with News Serial and the Screen Telegram, Mr. Bershon said.

LAST week four theatres in San Bernardino were playing simultaneously Universal subjects, according to information furnished the Universal exchange by Manager Knapp of the Temple theatre. He said it was the first time in the history of motion pictures in San Bernardino that all theatres were at the same time playing pictures produced by the same company. "For Husbands Only" was at the Opera House. At the Temple was a program consisting of "The Brazen Beauty," a Bluebird production, together with Universal News Reels and a Lyons and Moran comedy. "The Two Souled Woman" was at the Strand, and the program at the Isis consisted of a Universal serial and two Universal westerns.

D. B. LEDERMAN, assistant to the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, was a visitor at the Los Angeles Universal exchange last week. He expects to be in Los Angeles indefinitely, it is said.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS," one of the government war films, will have its premier in Los Angeles at the Alhambra theatre within a short time, according to announcement this week by Louis Hyman, branch manager of the All Star Features Distributing corporation. The picture will have a run of three weeks. Mr. Hyman predicts a record run for the subject.

NICK STEELE, formerly district manager for the William L. Sherry Service, is now affiliated with the All Star Features Distributing corporation.

WORD was received in Los Angeles this week that Sol Lesser, head of the All Star Features Distributing corporation, left San Francisco last week for New York, where he expects to purchase releasing rights of a number of feature productions.

J. A. QUINN, former booker for Kleine, has been placed in charge of the booking department in the General Film offices, succeeding William Schoen, who has been given a road position.

MISS EDNA ESCHER, who was bookkeeper for General Film from 1911 to 1916, and then four years in the same position with Paramount, returned to the General Film offices this week to the position formerly held by her. Miss Irma Paulson, General Film stenographer, is also back again.

In and Around Denver

BUSINESS in this territory shows but small improvement. Out of approximately three hundred houses in territory tributary to Denver, thirty are open for business, while the balance are closed on account of the influenza epidemic. Unless conditions change very materially, two of the big houses on Curtis street may close temporarily next week. In Denver the health authorities have rescinded the order requiring that masks be worn by the public, including theatre patrons. There is a small decrease in the number of new cases and the number of deaths in Denver and also in other cities in the Rocky Mountain section.

E. P. BRIGGS, Denver representative of the American Film Company, is visiting principal New Mexico points. Two American pictures are showing on Curtis street beginning Sunday, December 8. William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry" is on for a week's run at the America, and "Money Isn't Everything," starring Margarita Fisher, is at the Strand for four days.

MANAGER BARTELS announces that W. W. Hodkinson is putting into effect a plan dividing Denver territory into four sections, an arrangement that will give their patrons much better service. Holders of contracts in Western Kansas will hereafter be served by the Kansas City office of Pathe; those in Montana by the Spokane office, and Utah and Idaho by Salt Lake. The Denver headquarters retain the distribution to points in Colorado, Western Nebraska, Wyoming and New Mexico. Hodkinson representatives at the above named Pathe exchanges will give each account their personal attention.

L. A. QUILL of Pittsburg, who arrived a few days ago to take charge of the local Fox exchange, is much pleased with his new surroundings. He is particularly impressed with Denver's Great White Way, which, he says, undoubtedly surpasses any pictures theatres section in the United States.

TWO additions to the Fox sales force are noted since his arrival. F. W. Norman, who left a few months ago to join the Goldwyn road roster, has returned to his first love, and H. L. Hartman, well known to the trade in the Northwest, has arrived from Minneapolis, where he was recently located.

THE INTERNATIONAL AMUSEMENT COMPANY has completed the new Liberty theatre at Leadville, which will open as soon as the "flu" ban is lifted.

MR. AND MRS. W. E. McGUIRE and Ed Anderson were recent visitors on Film Row. Mr. McGuire owns the Gem theatre at Silverton and Mr. Anderson is the owner of the Grand at Pueblo.

COLORADO SPRINGS is still closed, but J. E. Tompkins, owner of the Liberty, added to his popularity a few days ago when he gave a free private showing of "The Hell Cat," featuring Geraldine Farrar, to several hundred disbanded student soldiers of Colorado College. The boys extended to Mr. Tompkins a vote of thankful appreciation.

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel for Affiliated Distributors and the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributors Corporation of New York City, met the leading exhibitors of Denver this week at the Rivoli and explained the working plans of the Independent Sales Corporation. He was accompanied by J. S. Barlow, representative of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Salt Lake City, who will handle their full product in Salt Lake territory and take care of Affiliated and Mutual interests. Mr. Pettijohn expressed himself as well pleased with his visit in Denver.

J. L. MERRICK, Western Coast supervisor for Exhibitors' Mutual, spent several days here the past week perfecting plans for the distribution of the new Mutual, Affiliated, Robinson-Cole products. He left here for Portland.

R. W. DAVIS of the Palace theatre at Trinidad is in Denver arranging a new service line-up.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been received here of the death of W. T. Mason, formerly located here with the First National. He was a victim of influenza a few days ago at San Francisco. He leaves a wife and five children.

HUGH RENNIE has resigned as local representative of the Film Clearing House to become the manager for Exhibitors' Mutual at Cincinnati. He is succeeded by L. E. Schaeffer, former manager for George Kleine System.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA in "The Temple of Dusk" is showing at the Strand, on Curtis street.

Looks for One to Star In

DOUGLAS MACLEAN, who has recenly been supporting such feminine stars as Mary Pickford, Enid Bennett and Dorothy Gish, is said to be casting his eye about for a good starring vehicle of his own.

San Francisco News Condensed

SINCE Major M. J. Cohen has had charge of the San Francisco office of the General Film Company, Inc., he has been readjusting his working forces. To take care of the General and the George Kleine System he now has a staff of twenty-two persons. He says that he is looking for a wonderful season of success. Business has opened up in fine shape since restrictions have been removed and this indicates continued success for the future.

BEN LIEDMAN, impresario of the Richmond district, San Francisco, controlling the Lincoln and Fischer theatres, is planning to take a number of film managers on a duck hunt in the near future. Mr. Liedman announces that he recently purchased a large Seebury Smith unified pipe organ from the G. H. Leatherby Company and is now having it installed in the Lincoln theatre.

IT is reported that Fred C. Wescher, booker for the Metro Pictures Corporation, was married Sunday, December 1. Mr. Wescher declined to confirm or deny the report.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., has severed his connection with that company and is now with the Select Pictures Corporation. Mr. Cory says it is like getting home again, as he was long with the World, when that company handled Norma Talmadge, Alice Brady and Clara Kimball Young. To be able to book these stars again is somewhat of a coincidence, he says, and it gives him that fireside feeling which a man has when he is home again.

F. A. WAGNER, Vitagraph manager of the Salt Lake office, passed through San Francisco this week on his way home from Los Angeles, where he had gone to attend the funeral of the late Western District Manager H. D. Naugle, who died in Omaha of pneumonia November 23.

FRANCIS PATRICK SHANLEY, proprietor of the Continental Hotels of San Francisco and Los Angeles, and one of the best-known hotel men in the West to the profession and industry alike, met with an accident while driving from Los Angeles to this city in his car recently. In a bad strip of road his machine was upset and Shanley had two ribs badly broken. He is now in the Fairmont Hospital, San Francisco.

R. A. BRACKETT, who has been covering the San Joaquin Valley for the Select, has joined the selling force of the same corporation in Seattle.

THE PEERLESS FILM SERVICE, INC., has outgrown its quarters at 100 Golden Gate avenue and is moving to enlarged quarters at 94 Golden Gate, where the Sunset Exchange recently held forth. Mr. E. H. Emmick, president of the company, says that the move was made necessary on account of the rapidly growing demand on the services of the exchange.

EDWARD B. LOWMAN, formerly chief booker for the San Francisco office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and who had enlisted in the service of the Knights of Columbus, has been honorably discharged from service and returned to his old desk with the company.

WALLACE REID, the star, has been making a personal appearance at both the Imperial and California theatres, where pictures are being run in which he took part. The personal appearance of movie stars is becoming popular in San Francisco and it seems likely that the plan will be greatly extended.

ROBERT C. POOR, the 250-pound star salesman for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in San Francisco, claims to have received an offer to double for Marguerite Clark. He claims that he is double her size, but that otherwise the resemblance is remarkable. He is now working on a plan that by means of throwing certain lights on one portion of a picture which is in process of being made that particular portion can be magnified or diminished in size. As soon as he has it perfected he feels sure he will be able to take the petite Marguerite's parts in her own inimitable way.

M. H. LEWIS, manager of the local office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been home for several days with what is reported to be a slight attack of la grippe.

ADOLPH H. MAYER, the motion picture photographer, who made the film of the famous Mooney trial and subsequent developments of the case, is just back from a two years' trip of the entire country. He calls his picture "The Frame-Up System in the San Francisco Bomb Trials" and plans to bring it up to date with additional features of the case which have recently developed. The Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Company developed and printed the original films for him and will do the same work on those which Mr. Mayer is about to make.

"Hearts of Love," by Edward Lansing Cowles of the San Francisco Chronicle, which stars Edna Mayo and will be released through the General Film Company, will be given its first preview next week to a group of representatives of the press.

A TELEGRAM was received from general headquarters of the General Film Company on Monday at the local headquarters announcing the release of the "Peace Celebration at Paris." The picture, according to the telegram, shows the King and Queen of Great Britain congratulating American soldiers. Within ten minutes of the receipt of the telegram the film was booked for the Orpheum, beginning Sunday, December 8. The local exchange is banking that special delivery stamps will bring the film through by parcel post in time for the opening date.

THE ALL STARS FEATURES DISTRIBUTORS, INC., announces that "Under Four Flags" will make its first appearance on this coast at the Rialto theatre, beginning December 8. The Rialto is planning some special advertising stunts in its publicity campaign. Nearly every day of the week will be set aside as a special Army, Navy, Marine Corps or some other kind of a day. For instance, December 11 will be Marine Corps Day and the marine band will be brought to the city for the occasion and a detachment of marines will give a patriotic demonstration. A special preview for the French troops now in San Francisco, numbering about 500, has been arranged and another for the patients at the Letterman Hospital.

LEON ZELINSKY, road man for the Universal, is just back from a sales trip through the Sacramento Valley. He was so successful on this trip that he sets out immediately for a visit to the region surrounding Santa Rosa.

LEON HYSLOP, formerly with the Triangle, has joined the sales force of the Universal.

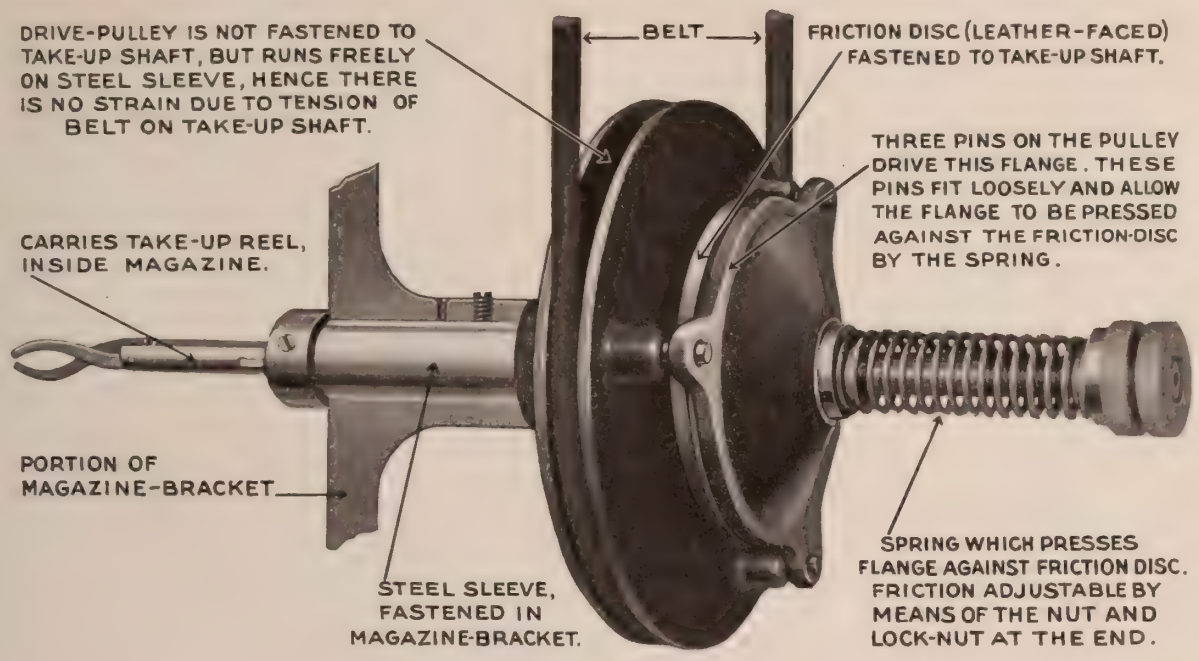
D. J. CHATKIN, Coast representative of the Film Clearing House, is just back from a trip to Seattle and expects soon to be settled in the offices formerly occupied by the George Kleine System.

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION, 177 Golden Gate avenue, took advantage of the recent shutdown of business to completely renovate and remodel its headquarters. Partitions were torn out and not only was much better light secured but everything is now open and above board in accordance with the policy of the company. The appearance of the office is improved at least 100 per cent.

B. T. SKINNER, former shipping clerk with the local Vitagraph, writes that he is now provo sergeant in the city of Augusta, Ga., and that he expects to be shortly discharged from the army. The local company announces that his old position is waiting for him on his arrival.

Simplex

There are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft



DRIVE-PULLEY IS NOT FASTENED TO TAKE-UP SHAFT, BUT RUNS FREELY ON STEEL SLEEVE, HENCE THERE IS NO STRAIN DUE TO TENSION OF BELT ON TAKE-UP SHAFT.
BELT
FRICTION DISC (LEATHER-FACED) FASTENED TO TAKE-UP SHAFT.
THREE PINS ON THE PULLEY DRIVE THIS FLANGE. THESE PINS FIT LOOSELY AND ALLOW THE FLANGE TO BE PRESSED AGAINST THE FRICTION-DISC BY THE SPRING.
CARRIES TAKE-UP REEL, INSIDE MAGAZINE.
PORTION OF MAGAZINE-BRACKET
STEEL SLEEVE, FASTENED IN MAGAZINE-BRACKET.
SPRING WHICH PRESSES FLANGE AGAINST FRICTION DISC. FRICTION ADJUSTABLE BY MEANS OF THE NUT AND LOCK-NUT AT THE END.

There's no need of telling the Operator that the Take-up Shaft is a mighty important part of a Projector.

It absolutely must not fail him; and to be proof against going back on him it must be designed right in the first place.

Now, there are two ways of designing a Take-up Shaft.

One way is to design it wrong, to have the belt pull sideways on the shaft, cramping it in its bearings, and then to try to overcome the difficulty by introducing ball bearings.

The other way is to design it correct in principle, like the Simplex Take-up Shaft here illustrated.

When you read the explanations you will quickly see that the belt-pull doesn't come on the shaft at all; so there's no cramping or friction to try to reduce by "anti-friction" bearings.

And, as you know, the probability of any piece of mechanism going wrong increases directly as the number of parts it contains. So being extremely simple as well as free from blunders in design, the Simplex Take-up Shaft is dependable in the highest degree.

The Simplex wins because it is correct both in principle and in construction

MADE TO ORDER FOR FAIRBANKS

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS aboard a broncho dashes up to the ranch house and yells to a bunch of cow punchers, "Come on quick, we're going to fight!"

"Fight who?"

"Who, hell! What difference does it make? Come on!"

And away they go—a thunder of hoofs and a dust cloud, Douglas Fairbanks and his very own army.

That's a scene from "Arizona," a scene typical of this great stage success now produced in the big out-doors where the story belongs.

As a play it was a box office winner, As a moving picture, with Douglas Fairbanks as "Lieut. Denton"—say what a business you'll do!

Louisa M. Alcott's Famous Story "WOMEN"

HOW MUCH INFLUENCE HAVE WOMEN UPON YOUR BOX OFFICE?

IF you don't please the women, young and old, you don't prosper. Right?

Louisa M. Alcott's novel, "Little Women," is the story that has been read by more women than any other book ever published.

When William A. Brady made it into a play it was a tremendous success. If it played in your city you know that.

Now it is a moving picture. It's appeal to women drew big business to the Strand Theatre in New York City in the midst of the influenza epidemic.

It has been tested and has made good, as a book, as a play and now as a moving picture.

Special exploitation—advertising and direct by mail circularization—is helping to build new patronage for the exhibitor who shows "Little Women."

Paramount-Flagg Comedies

They Speak Right Up

WHEN James Montgomery Flagg starts making fun of folks, the newspapers say things like this:

"We went over to the Strand and saw the best bit of satire, without any exception, that we ever have seen on the screen. James Montgomery Flagg did it, and he calls it 'Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan.' It is worth at least the price of admission, even if you sit in the loges."—New York Tribune.

"Yesterday's Strand audience did nothing less than howl at the Flagg humor in 'Hick Manhattan.'"—New York Evening Mail.

"'Tell That to the Marines,' a comedy by James Montgomery Flagg, is bright, as most of Mr. Flagg's works are, and well calculated to delight the public."—New York Times.

And then the "unfortunate" fellow started out to try to spend it! Lord, he'd give the page-boys in the hotel a ten-spot every time he saw one—and you bet he saw them, for they took care to be present!

Which "Ad" Do You Like Best?

THE one showing Wallace Reid in the restaurant? The small one up in the left hand corner?

You probably will admit they all interest you and make you want to see the picture. They'll interest your patrons, too, and help you bring crowds to see this newest and perhaps funniest Wallace Reid picture.

Hundreds of exhibitors are using the ready-made "ads" we're furnishing. It's only one of the ways in which we help you make more money on Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Holiday Greetings

TO every Triangle Exhibitor we wish a Merry Christmas.

To the boys overseas and to those who have returned victoriously to the Land of the Free we offer our thanks, a hearty hand-shake and a holiday greeting.

Nations overcome conflicting prejudices and in their cooperation win a world war that promises the blessings of Democracy to every Human Nation on the face of this Earth.

When the Allies harmonized in their activities, victory came with unexpected rapidity. To their efficiency in working together, to their foresight in eliminating selfish interests—we owe the rapidity of a sure victory, and the joy of peace for Christmas, 1918.

Do the problems of a peace time industry compare to the problems of Nations at war?

To overcome the many obstacles which must ever crowd the path of a rapidly growing industry, stimulates interest, develops character and adds zest to our endeavors.

Certainly the motion picture industry will continue to progress and enjoy new prosperity in these days of peace.

Realizing that our interests are one, to entertain a Nation of peaceful individuals, the producers, distributors and exhibitors will solve problems, overcome obstacles, and work together with new enthusiasm for the certain prosperity of our mutual pursuit.

And so we predict and wish you a prosperous New Year

ALICE JOYCE in "The Captain's Captain"

SECOND RELEASE OF THE ALICE JOYCE STAR SERIES

Adapted from James A. Cooper's Widely Read Story "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper"

Directed by Tom Terriss

IT is an entirely new Alice Joyce that you will find in this whimsical Cape Cod romance. This time she is the mischievous, irresponsible girl, always doing the unexpected, getting into a bit of a scrape now and then, but getting out of it again, and getting someone else out with her.

"The Captain's Captain" is a typically Happy Picture—brimming with smiles that are never forced. Its fresh delightful humor, its never-waning action and strong love story should make it one of the most popular of the Alice Joyce releases.

And supporting this beautiful star—whose box-office power is increasing with each succeeding release—is this all-star cast: Arthur Donaldson, Maurice Costello, Eulalie Jensen, Percy Standing and Julia Swayne Gordon.

HEARTS OF THE STAMPEDE

The Gold-Mad Days of Nome in a Mighty Alaskan Drama of Humor and Pathos

The broad sweep and verile magnetism of the colorful North have lent inspiration to Monte M. Katterjohn, the writer, in creating "Hearts of the Stampede," his third vigorous photoplay of Alaskan life. It is a human story of love and daring.

In addition to the tremendous spirit of rush and roar, the wild abandon and fascinating lure, this newest Katterjohn Film possesses humor and pathos to a greater degree than did either of its money-making predecessors.

A blood-red melo-drama of elemental life, it is tempered with throbs and chuckles. The untamed characters of the story are of a nobler mould and a cleaner life than have served in most Alaskan photoplays. They are savage only in the sense that to survive, they lived, loved, fought and died according to the code of that ice-locked land.

"Hearts of the Stampede" is exactly what its title implies—a story of those fortune-seekers who flocked to the golden shores of Nome barely eighteen years ago. Its characters are drawn from the raw life of that period.

This picture will be offered to exhibitors in six reels at no greater price than is asked for the best program specials.

FIRST OF FOUR KATTERJOHN SPECIALS

Creator is Most Essential Factor in Production of Quality Picture Entertainment

Throughout ten years of tedious apprenticeship and untiring effort for better pictures, Monte M. Katterjohn has held steadfastly to the belief that the creator is the essential factor in the production of quality pictures; that it is the story and its visualized arrangement that counts.

Now fortified with a vast reserve of practical experience and successful achievement, he will devote his unhampered individuality exclusively to Katterjohn Films.

Believing in building well to make a permanent place for motion pictures bearing the Katterjohn name, their creator will strive to make his own productions the most successful with which he has ever been identified.

Katterjohn Films are dedicated to the cause of better pictures, and backed by the remarkable record of a creative genius who has proven his one hundred per cent showmanship.

Four "Katterjohn Specials," of which "Hearts of the Stampede" is the first, will be personally created by Monte M. Katterjohn, and produced under his individual management.

Here Is Another "Polly Of The Circus"

THOSE were the words of the reviewing committee of the National Board of Review when they saw Mae Marsh's next Goldwyn production.

A beautiful love story of appeal and pathos; a young girl's love and loyalty for her bankrupt father; a contest against uneven odds with an unscrupulous gambler and a Saratoga race scene that will thrill your audiences as few pictures ever have done before.

"THE HELL CAT'S" AVERAGE

By Edward Weitzel

TO be explicit about the matter, only one man ever called Panchita O'Brien a "hell cat," and he did it in a fit of savage rage, because she refused to hide her contempt for him and fought with all her strength when he made a captive of her and killed her father. Panchita is as fine a specimen of womanhood as ever grew up on a Wyoming ranch. When she takes the law into her own hands and escapes further indignities by burying a dagger in the heart of Jim Dyke her act more than justifies itself. And every one will applaud Jack Webb for telling her that her suffering has only added to her claim on his love and devotion. In other words, Panchita O'Brien is a thoroughbred, and her story will interest every man and woman who admires courage and deep affection and all that is best in woman.

This very impotant point being established, it is in order to check up the other merit marks in the Goldwyn production, "The Hell Cat," and discover how near it comes to that elusive one-hundred-per cent. average. A review of the picture printed in last week's Moving Picture World stated that the plot "departs but little from a familiar and well-tested trail." Further on the article held that, "No Goldwyn production has ever been more completely satisfying."

But one means could have reconciled the two statements—craftsmanship.

Taking the story for consideration, it is quickly made clear that its material has been forced to yield every ounce of its dramatic value without once lowering the tone of its artistic standard, which is a veritable transcript of life. The main motive is primitive passion, and a story of crime and animal instinct is told on the screen lucidly and without compromise, but the artistic restraint which marks the true craftsman is never absent.

Willard Mack has employed the art of the dramatist in putting together the situations of Geraldine Farrar's latest starring vehicle, and the steady pull of its action is never broken by the introduction of unnecessary incident of any description. The closing scenes, which compose the wronged girl's vengeance, are remarkable for their brevity as well as for their power. The effectiveness of their restraint could not be increased. The character drawing is equally well done. Jim Dyke, Jack Webb, Panchita's father and Wan-e-mee are real flesh and blood beings, as created by the author and acted by the members of the cast.

Reginald Barker and his share of the work contribute largely to the merit marks of the production. With the temptation of countless long shots in a sweep of country that abounds in views of great beauty, the director subordinated everything to the human interest of the story and kept the way clear for its constant advance. This scenic background of the picture, when exteriors are used, is a delight, but from the moment Jim Dyke rides over to the O'Brien ranch and meets Panchita the fate of the girl becomes the absorbing feature of "The Hell Cat." Director Barker evidently recognized that nothing else mattered so far as the spectator was concerned. All the help that skilled attention to detail could give was bestowed on the picture, and no legitimate opportunity to add a touch of romance was neglected; but before everything else the director realized it was his duty to create drama.

Here, then, we have "The Hell Cat's" average and the reason for the picture's entertaining qualities: a one-hundred per cent. production of a familiar story whose drama possibilities will never grow old. There have been loftier themes, but none with greater vitality. And none has been told on the screen with a better understanding of its demands.

This production is living up to its 100% classification by establishing new patronage records in the principal theatres of the nation.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

Do You Know the Real Idea Behind the Ford Educational Weekly?

LET us talk together, exhibitor and distributor, like "regular people" about the Ford Educational Weekly and the reasons both for its existence and its success.

Every great newspaper in America—every one that is rated as a successful, big money-maker—is founded upon human interest and mass appeal.

There is not a class daily paper in America with a tremendous circulation. The class dailies written for the minds of the select few have circulations ranging from 22,000 to 75,000 maximum a day.

But the papers that are built for the public taste—what a difference! There are two million-copy circulations in New York; one 448,000 daily circulation in Philadelphia; three in excess of 400,000 each daily in Chicago.

Our reason for telling you this is to give you the real reason for the success and the tremendously widespread distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly.

It is built for the American public. It is frank, open, interesting, human, vivid. It answers the multitude of questions the average alert American asks.

Goldwyn, as you have read in previous announcements, assumes the exclusive American distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly beginning with the first issue of January 12, 1919. We are frankly proud to be the marketing or releasing mechanism for this altruistic product of the greatest industrial captain in our national life.

It Would Take a Grind Of 5 Years and 8 Months To Show This Picture

Of course, it's a Fox film.

For whenever the unusual, amazing or extraordinary is done in photoplay production, 'most everybody who knows the film business just naturally says one word—"Fox."

Up to a year or so ago the photoplay world and the public were amazed at each new Fox film surprise.

Now they take each Fox surprise as a matter of course.

"The Fox way of doing things," they say, and look forward to the next.

William Fox has just gone on producing one surprise after another, until he has set a "surprise" standard of production.

So that motion-picture exhibitors and the public have become so used to the unusual from William Fox that they refuse to be surprised any more—at anything he does.

They just demand his films—and let it go at that.

True—the demand is progressive—is growing bigger and more insistent from day to day, from week to week, from month to month.

Until now—the demand is so vast that the question is—which exhibitor can get Fox productions first.

FOX
FILM CORPORATION

Its Footage Would Be More Than 38,000 Miles, Filling 200,000 Reels

All this great success is very gratifying.

The public appreciates and wants Fox pictures—that's all William Fox is interested in.

The exhibitors, with their wise fingers on the public pulse, are showing Fox pictures whenever they can get them.

We congratulate these exhibitors on their sagacity—we thank them for their generous support and encouragement.

But—how many people fully realize the stupendous achievement that is the result of the Fox Idea in motion pictures?

Even we—including Mr. Fox himself—didn't fully realize it until we found time to sit back for a few days during the recent non-release period.

Then it dawned on us that we had the greatest moving-picture business in the world.

FOX
FILM CORPORATION

This Picture Would Be Long Enough to Measure Circumference of Earth

We had been watching both the public and motion-picture exhibitors take each new Fox production—mark it with the sign manual of success—and then wait expectantly for the next.

We, like them, saw only the individual pictures and didn't grasp the magnitude of the whole, big, vast institution grown up around the successful Fox Idea.

When William Fox began producing some five years ago even he, with his great dreams of the future, had no shadow of a thought that the Fox Film Corporation would become the tremendous institution that it is—particularly in so short a time.

No one foresaw that Fox pictures would be seen in every part of the globe—that countless millions of people would become patrons of the Fox Idea of the photoplay—not only here in this country, but in almost every section of Europe, of Asia, of Africa, of South America, of Australasia.

William Fox has been busy producing month after month, year after year, until he has a record of pictures behind him that, in quality and quantity, is the real wonder of the moving-picture business.

FOX
FILM CORPORATION

It Measures Likewise The Ever - Increasing Scope of the Fox Idea

The quality of the Fox pictures is proved by the astounding Fox success.

As to their quantity—well, up to date, Fox productions, if made into one picture, would have a footage of 200,284,-160 feet, or 38,000 miles, enough to reach around the earth with thirteen thousand miles of film left over.

This one picture would take a grind of five years and eight months, or over fifty thousand hours, to run—think of it!—a picture of more than two hundred thousand reels.

Does that give you any conception of the vastness of the productive growth and success of the Fox Idea?

On the basis of the Fox Idea—to give the public what it wants—William Fox has built up an edifice so stupendous in size that it is difficult to grasp its proportions.

The public has put its mark of approval on the Fox Idea as expressed in Fox pictures.

The public has made Fox success.

The public will make your success—with Fox pictures.

Surrender of the German Fleet

TO THE ALLIED NAVIES

$10,000 were offered us for the first negative of THIS GREAT HISTORICAL PICTURE received in this country. . . . The offerer knew the people were eager to see it, and counted on releasing it in multiple reels, for which the exhibitors would have had to pay fancy rentals.

Needless to say we refused to sell at any price. We are producing pictures not only for our own benefit, but for the benefit of the exhibitors and public.

The complete picture of the surrender of the German fleet and U-boats on the high seas, their imprisonment in the Firth of Forth, the review by King George, the Prince of Wales, Admiral Sims, and other Allied officers—all is shown in one snappy, never-to-be-forgotten reel, distributed at reasonable rates by Exciting Action Story Blended With Good News Film Will Undoubtedly Register Well.

Earl Schenck and Claire Whitney in
"THE KAISER'S FINISH"
Warner Bros.—State Rights.

DIRECTOR ..... John Joseph Harvey.
SCENARIO BY ..... John Joseph Harvey.
CAMERA MAN ..... Rial Schlessenger.
AS A WHOLE ..... Fast-moving interesting action film, with excellent news weekly scenes well titled, and smoothly cut into melodramatic moments.
STORY ..... Shows illegitimate son of Kaiser who looks like Crown Prince entering Germany as spy to kill Kaiser and son.
DIRECTION ..... Held interest very well and kept it snappy; double exposure scenes nicely handled.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very good.
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very good effects; generally satisfactory.
CAMERA WORK ..... Good.
STARS ..... Schenck looks very much like real Crown Prince. Miss Whitney quite appealing.
SUPPORT ..... Satisfactory.
EXTERIORS ..... Blended with atmosphere and news weekly battle stuff.
INTERIORS ..... Quite satisfactory.
DETAIL ..... Necessary news weekly stuff blended better in this with story than most any thing similar I have seen.
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Nothing to offend.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... About 7,000 ft.

At this time when Kaiser Bill still has the center of the stage because of the problem of disposing of him permanently, the title of this film is particularly good.

In every war propaganda subject, or Kaiser production, it has been found necessary to cut in a lot of news weekly film, but I must say that in this production, the treatment of the scenes which made up the story in order to blend them smoothly with the scenes of the battle ground, the real Kaiser and Crown Prince, and various flashes of allied troops and leaders, has been more intelligently handled than in any similar production.

There is also a story which seems at least possible, and surely it is quite interesting. Given in a few words, the plot centers about an illegitimate son of the Kaiser, who has been placed with a German family in this country to await the time when he might be called to serve the Fatherland.

Reared as an American, this boy, when he discovers his true identity, does go to Germany supposedly as a German spy, but in reality as a U. S. Secret Service man, and upon arrival, his uncanny resemblance to the Crown Prince, makes it possible for him to kill that worthy and then afterwards kill the Kaiser

We have some scenes in this of the real Crown Prince on the battlefield and standing around acting foolish, which seems quite easy for him to do, and it is really remarkable the likeness between this prize scoundrel and Earl Schenck when Schenck is made up as the Kaiser's son. This adds quite a bit to the interest of the film.

Although this production runs into considerable footage, it swings along at a speed that holds the attention, with something doing all the time, and plenty of applause is sure to result from the manner in which the real scenes of soldiers, allied leaders, etc. have been cut in with appropriate titles.

There is very little of the gruesome side of war shown in the film, and quite a lot that will appeal to a victorious nation, even though the war is over, so that I would say that this is one of the Kaiser films that has a very good chance of continuing to clean up for some time to come.

The fact that this in a way presents a story that suggests something of the personal life of the one time royal family of Germany, helps to hold the interest, because even though you know that tough Bill is still living, you have a feeling that at least this would have been a good way for him to pass out.

The present investigation of German propaganda in this country will add interest to the portion of the story which deals with the activities of prominent Germans over here, just before and after America entered the war.

In the cast were Earle Schenck, Claire Whitney, Percy Standing, Louise Dean, John Sunderland, Louis Keene, and Philip Van Loan.

Timely Title With Excellent Ad. Changes. Should Really Get Money.

Box Office Analysis for Exhibitor.

Unless I am mistaken, I believe that this is a very good bet. The title which sort of ties up with the "after the war" spirit, has a much better chance of bringing in business than anything which suggests straight battle scenes.

I would particularly emphasize the fact that this is a story of the Kaiser's spy system in America, pitted against the cleverness of Uncle Sam's Secret Service, with the hero a secret service man who so nearly resembled the Crown Prince that he was able to make his way into Germany and confront the Kaiser and his son in their own palace.

Make it clear that this is not a story centered upon war, and battle, but rather a mystery story of spy activities.

A safe angle for you to work along is to appeal to the patriotic with lines like: "Come in and cheer at 'The Kaiser's Finish.' You will enjoy it." You can say, "Many people are wondering what will happen to the Kaiser. Come in and see what this American hero did to him in 'The Kaiser's Finish.'"

I do not think it is at all wise to ever use the one line "not a war picture," in this sort of film, because any film that deals with the Kaiser or the happenings in the last four years between nations, certainly is a picture of bloody battles, but you surely can say: "Not in a way a war picture, but you surely can say: "Not exciting spy story showing what should have happened to the Kaiser."

One of the best possible angles that you could develop on this would be to try to get a photograph of Earl Schenck made up as the Crown Prince and use it alongside of the photograph of the real Crown Prince, providing you can get the two in similar poses, carrying the line underneath: "Which is the hero of this photoplay, and which is the real Crown Prince? He will keep you guessing in the exciting film, 'The Kaiser's Finish.'"

Cheer Up—And Cheer!

A Christmas Thought

HONEST, Boys, isn't it a great life? Even if we do weaken? Isn't it twelve cylindered joy and red-peppered zest just to be a Film Man?

It's Christmas.

Let's take stock.

Let's balance up our personal books.

How are we looking on the outside world? Have we the eyes and the bile of a Mental Bankrupt?—or the smiles and the cheer of a Going Concern?

We've growled and we've grumbled; moaned and groaned. We don't like This Fellow; we are opposed to That Policy. We've boiled and we've Bolsheviked.

It's all down there on the red ink side of the ledger. The total spells—A Bilious Crab.

But that's not Us—is it? Deep down in our hearts?

Would we swap the privilege of being a Film Man for any other Salary-Alibi on earth?

Would we?—We would NOT!

No! There's another column on that ledger. Not in the glaring red—but it's the one that counts. And it's the one that says:

We, Us,—You and I—are gosh blamed glad to be living—in Filmland. And almighty willing to die the day we have to leave it.

Isn't it so?

LET'S go!—Straight ahead! From here, from Christmas, 1918—straight ahead to bigger things and broader thoughts.

Let's go!—

With our heads an inch higher because we are—Film Men.

With our smile a trace broader because we are—Film Men.

With our hearts a bit warmer because we are—Film Men.

Let's go!—an Act of Film Faith in our hearts; a Challenge to the World on our lips!

Gosh a'mighty glad to be in a Business with no Speed Limit on Brains; gol durned happy to be part of an Art born in the Nineteenth Century and already in its Twenty-first; all-fired proud to be in an Industry that will serve Peace even as it has aided Victory.

Let's go!

Cheer up—and Cheer!

Our Own

Abe And Mawruss

They Discuss the Coming Year and Disgust at the One Just Past

[Everybody's doing it—so Mawruss went into the export line a year ago. He journeyed to China with a print of "The Yellow Menace."

The death sentence was commuted—and now he is back looking for news.]

"ABE," he says. "I'd swap it a July 2nd drink if you could information me where is it this fillum business what I left. When I went away it was bad, now it's worse—it aint. An' they all tell me the Infilmenzy took it."

"You got right, Mawruss. This here Infilmenzy it comes along and first the doctor he says it will only last for four weeks—and now, py Golly, it's a chronicker disease.

"An' it comes, Mawruss, just when everybody discovered it how they could 'Win the War' by making Specialties at a thousand a week rental—oder your Oppersition gets it fer a clean-out y'understand. An' everyone they was just deciding it was a great war to win at top prices.

"The magnuts, Mawruss, they was just getting nerve genug to look their bankers straight in the eyes mitout offering a cigar. A good cigar, y'understand, like the kind you buy by the Aster when you want to establish it credick with these here fellows Brulatour, Wright, Gulick and Beecroft. Which I don't blame you, Mawruss, cause with that credick a fellow could start it a program.

"But I am getting away mitout my subject, Mawruss. You want to know what happened while you was selling the Johnson Cannibul pitchers in the Fiji Islands. I'll tell it you.

"Y'remember, Mawruss, just before you left, the Presidenter he called Mr. Brady aside and he says:

"'Listen, Bill, y'know this here war I got in stock—it's a pretty big war. One of the biggest what I ever wrote a history about. Well, Bill, it's this way, old topper. I may be able to swing this here here war alone, but you're a pretty good scout an' I thought mebbe if you got these fillum fellers in to help I could put the whole job over mitout interferencing mit my golluf. How 'bout it, Bill?

"'Righto, Woody!' says Mister Brady, aber, y'know him Mawruss, he shouts it. An' about the fourth time he walks around the room and just when his cigar it's got a complexion like he thought it was a sponge, he shakes hands mit the Presidenter and goes out to the job.

"Y'remember that, Mawruss, don't you? An' y'remember it how Mister Brady he picked on P. A. Powers, J. A. Berst, an' Walter Irwin and he gives it them railroad fare to France, Italy an' Russia. Y'remember that, yes?

"Aber, Mawruss, y'been away a whole year now an' I give you a tip, free gratin. When y'meet it Mister Powers don't go askin' him 'Parlay voo,' an' to Mister Berst is it true Harry Reichenbach changed his name to Ravioli when he was over there by the gondolieros. An' Mister Irwin, don't ask him is it a Bullshivver etwas to eat oder a 'Poisen. Eternal Use Only.'

"Don't do it, Mawruss. I tell you. Don't.

"You should ask me what heppened the appointments? I dunno—aber a friend vun mine who is gequainted mit the doctor says he heard they died of 'Creelitis.'

"On that I couldn't say, Mawruss. This I could tell you. Mister Powers he went instead to Rochester and brought back a raw stock company—nein, Mawruss, not the kind you mean, 'par walue five dollars, cash one tenth of one per cent.' This kind makes it the fillum.

"An' Berst, he went on the United time, where it seems by me he is soon to make a big hit. An' Mister Irwin, just the oder day he gives it his notice to Mister Vitographer.

"Mister Brady he went right ahead and did more for the Presidenter. So much, Mawruss, the least y'could expect he'd get it one of them there S. O. S. Medals. One day, Mawruss, we pick up the papers an' it is appointed fifty seven varieties of committers. Such names—Mawruss! Adolph Zukor, Hiram Abrams, Walter Greene, Pete Schaefer, Bill Sherrill, Bill Johnston, J. D. Williams, Sam Goldfish, Bob Cochrane, Carl Laemmle, Bill Fox, Dick Rowland, Louie Selznick, Nick Astor—everybody, Mawruss, exception me an' Joe Lee.

"They all got it on Committers to help put this here war over big. Some mit the War Department, some the Commercial Department, some the Food an' Drink Consternationer, some mit the Fuelless Administer, an'—yes, Mawruss—some even got next to the Treasurer. An' I tell you right, Mawruss, when I say that while you was away Zukor's Committeer it raised genug credick for Mister McAdoo's Liberty Loans to float even a company making natural color fillums.

"Oh, it was great, Mawruss. Everybody gave it three cheers an' then phoned their tailors to study up on uniform regularities. Aber, Mawruss, this needer wouldn't I mention when you go round to get gequainted again. Cause most of the fellers they lost it the newspaper clippings the next day and forgot what Committer they was on. An' there aint nobody reminded them.

"Other events evented while you was away, Mawruss. Up in Bosting they had an Eposition so all the boys could meet Louie Mayer on his home stumping ground. An' just so soon as it was over the boys found there was some of the Expensive Account saved from the clutches of the Beach Beauties so right away the whole twenty attenders went out to Chicago fer a Convention. By time Colisemo and Mister La Salle got through their consciences was clear.

"So mit no Expensive Account left to worry about they patched up everything. Bill Brady, Pete Schaefer and Frank Rembusch they juggle the alphabet an' the N. A. M. P. I. & M. P. E. L. & A. E. A. they come out all malgumated—which, Mawruss, y'understand it, I aint talking about railroads.

"Aber, Mawruss, this needer would I talk about when y'meet the boys in front of 729. It was a great idea, Mawruss, only someone fergot to sign the papers, an' the dotted line alone aint binding in court y'understand. So the other day they called it all off. An' Bill Brady he got so mad he quit his job as Presidenter the National Assessment. Which, the least y'could expect, Mawruss, would be excuse genug fer another assessment.

"Also, Mawruss, while you was away, the National Assessment gave it a Grand One Week Benefit Fer Uncle Sam at Madison's Square. Oh, Mawruss, as a Moving Pitcher Exposition it was a wunnerful War Tax Collector.

"Outside of these happenings what didn't happen, Mawruss, there aint much what happened. J. D. Williams—y'notice, Mawruss, he's got the same initials as that Rockerfeller—wasn't saying much when you left, but this Christmas, Mawruss, he hands the First National Bank a present of Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart an' Norma Talmadge.

"Which, Mawruss, you could see is three of a kind, an' mit the ace Chaplin spiked, why any schnorrer of a poker player could afford to draw one more card. An' I aint saying much, Mawruss, but maybe he'll fill.

"Odderwise, Mawruss, there aint much to tell. Only, believe me, never did y'see such a year fer Specialties. I tell you straight, Mawruss, the staple goods was just pushed in the backward ground. 'The Kaiser in Beastly Berlin,' 'The Prussian Curd,' 'My Four Years Too Long in Germany,' 'Why America Won,' 'Two Hell's Fer the Kaiser,' 'Over the Topper,' oh, there was oodles.

"Also, Mawruss, Moving Day lasted the whole year in the busyness. George Kleine he now hangs his hat in the General offices, Bill Sherry, he starts it a program and first he opens offices, then he also visits Frank Tichenor. Bill Hodkinson, he thinks it's getting crowded so he gets desk room with Paul Brunet at Pathe. World Fillum aint no more Brady-Made cause Bill he starts up an independence establishment of his own. Frank Hall, he throws U. S. Exhibitors down, flirts mit Producers an' Distributors, an' finishes up mit the Fillum Clearing House—which y'understand aint no relationship to the New York Clearing House.

"Also, Mawruss, we had the Government in the pitcher busyness this year. Which I understand it, Mawruss, is one company where the angel aint kicking, cause that Publicker Information Committeer made a lot of money.

"Now run along, Mawruss, an' when you come back leave yourselluf outside."

"So long, Abe," says Mawruss. "I got a important deal for export on. I'm closing fer the German rights on 'The Common Cause,' 'Crashing Through to Berlin,' 'The Great Victory' and 'Why Germany Must Pay' and do it blamed quick. So long!"

J. D. Williams

THIS First National gentleman has them all guessing. Started 1918 with Chaplin, Petrova and Brenon productions. Starts 1919 with Chaplin—and—Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Norma Talmadge. Also attracted the bigger independent productions, such as "Tarzan" and "My Four Years in Germany." Incidentally gave the merry ha-ha to those who said "First National can't last. You can't make a business organization out of a debating society. Those exhibitors won't stick together." How does it look today? Ha! ha! Dame Rumor says that J. D. has even bigger bombs to explode during 1919. Look out for shell shock!

William Fox

THE "Fox Idea" never showed up better than under the ever-changing conditions of war and sudden peace. Hit the right moment with such productions as "Why America Will Win," "The Prussian Cur," and now—"Every Mother's Son." Branded some new ones "Victory Pictures," "Excel Pictures," "The Great Nine," and specials and extravaganzas. Put over "The Big Six" reissues to a clean-up. Increased his theatre holdings until he will soon have a "Second National Circuit" all his own. Was in the forefront of every charitable and patriotic movement. Added Evelyn Nesbit to his list of stars.

Albert E. Smith

MOST unusual activity in 1918 the planting of Vitagraph right in the front rank as a serial producer. Opened with "Vengeance and the Woman," following the brilliant record of "The Fighting Trail," and went straight ahead to a policy of fifty-two a year, week in and week out, sure-fire. Produced "Over the Top" at the psychological moment to the tune of a half million in bookings. That's hitting on high, isn't it? Added Bessie Love to his stars, and under a definitely scheduled star series release plan maintained a high standard of quality.

Samuel Goldfish

"TWENTY-SIX A YEAR," the ads read last Christmas. "Fifty-Two a Year" is the word now—not to mention Capitol Comedies and occasional specials. A year ago we were wondering if Goldwyn could live up to its successful first twelve months' history. Today it is breaking speed limits. Added Pauline Frederick to its roster; put Tom Moore in the electric lights, and gave us Will Rogers for one picture. Corraled Henry Ford's Weekly. And we have a hunch that Sam may break some 1919 news about the time the Goldfish-Rothapfel jaunt reaches Los Angeles.

Walter H. Seeley

ENTERS 1919 with the proposition that has 'em all watching—Robertson-Cole. One pessimist called it "the one organization in the business with real cash." Be that as it may, Walter Hoff has brought Robertson-Cole from a general exporter with modest film leanings to a real factor in the film world. Supplies all the product for release by Exhibitors Mutual; covers the world with its export ramifications—and has only started. Its star list already includes Henry Walthall, William Desmond and Billie Rhodes. Also exploiting the Johnson Cannibal Pictures in bang-up showman fashion.

Louis Mayer

LOUIS certainly had a busy year during 1918. Joined forces with Gordon and started pushing First National in the New England territory. Settled the Anita Stewart suit with Vitagraph and started work on "Virtuous Wives." Finished "Virtuous Wives," handed railroad fare and "Expense Accounts" to three or four organizations and announced a "Country Wide Trade Showing." "In Old Kentucky" is the next. Don't know whether Louis has any more stars in view, but we do know he is restless, he is a showman, and he can give orders to Joe Lee. So keep your eyes on him.

FRANK TICHENOR—we'll get that photo yet, "Tich"—kept General Film sailing smoothly during 1918 and took on more cargo in Sherry, United and Kleine productions.

HARRY RAPF closed 1918 like a whirlwind, beating the clock to "Wanted for Murder."

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL put over one Frohman winner, "My Own United States," and now seems to have another for 1919—"Once to Every Man."

WATTERSON ROTHACKER maintained his position as the First National of the laboratory game—not to mention successes in the industrial field.

GEORGE KLEINE wrote some letters that sure did start 'em talking and on the side continued to distribute good pictures.

HERBERT LUBIN and A. H. SAWYER sprung a new one—S. L. Pictures. Ralph Ince directs, E. K. Lincoln stars and 1919 sees the first release.

FRANK HALL took up the reins on the Film Clearing House and then closed the year by buying the Rapf winner, "Wanted for Murder."

AL. CHRISTIE proved that there is a live state right market for live comedies. He clinched it by adding a one a month two reeler on the 1919 schedule.

HARRY GARSON added Blanche Sweet to his list. Clara Kimball Young maintained her undisputed place.

ıking Film History

J. A. Berst

ONCE upon a time we couldn't say "Berst" without thinking of "Pathe." But 1918 brought J. A. to United. Took a rather indefinite proposition that didn't arouse any enthusiasm and has brought it to a point where—as 1919 looms up—many film men are betting on it to win handily. Made his biggest hit with us through the fact that he refused to be hurried. Took his time, gathered together his product, rounded up his membership, placed his distribution in General's efficient hands, and is now ready to start in regular fashion. Also did yeoman service during 1918 for the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films.

W. W. Hodkinson

WAS talking a great deal about "The Motion Picture Plus" as 1918 started on its merry course. We don't hear so much about that now, but we have seen W. W. releasing a consistent quality product throughout the year. This week finds him in Chicago, whence, the rumor boys tell us, we may expect some interesting news. Seems likely, for with the air as unsettled as it is just now in Filmland, you may count on the daddy of Paramount to pull something new. Opened the blithesome year of 1918 with General distributing his product, but finishes with Pathe doing the job.

FREDERICK COLLINS, of McClure, didn't say much but kept the cameras grinding and as Christmas nears we hear of "What Shall We Do with Him?", of a Roosevelt picture and a Gompers special.

LEWIS SELZNICK—Gosh, but he's been quiet this year. But Myron evened up by incorporating "Selznick Productions" as 1919 neared.

GEORGE SPOOR continued to make pictures, but also blossomed out as a laboratory man—with a process all his own.

B. A. ROLFE gave up his post with Metro's productions forces during 1918 and made the Houdini serial. Then received a Christmas present in the form of U. B. O. booking.

GAUMONT duplicated the Christie stunt—showing that there is a live state rights market for a live weekly and live serials.

RICORD GRADWELL reorganized World's production forces and clinched a winning contract for official Government films.

WILLIAM L. SHERRY sprung a new program in 1918. Theodore Dietrich left International to manage Doris Kenyon productions on that program.

EARL HAMMONS closes 1918 with mysterious rumblings of a Griffith deal.

J. STUART BLACKTON left Paramount to once more put specials through Vitagraph.

MONTE KATTERJOHN embarked as an independent producer with original ideas as 1919 neared.

BROUGHT Caruso and Fred Stone to the screen in 1918. Sprung a new one on Lila Lee. Gave us Griffith on a regular program schedule once more. And—here's one big point for Filmland—he actually carried out one promise made at Christmas 1918. He "Nationally Advertised" the Pramount-Artcraft trade-marks up to every dollar and more than he had promised. Closed 1918 with a "Good luck and God bless you!" to Hiram Abrams and Benjamin Schulberg, who embark on their own craft. We never thought it could happen, Benny. Well, here's our "Good luck!" to you.

Adolph Zukor

HIT the bull's eye with the one big surprise winner of the year—"The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin." Followed with "Crashing Through to Berlin." Didn't tell us much of the Universal Program and the glory of the two-reeler during 1918, but, glory be, what attention was paid Bluebirds, Jewels, and Universal Special Attractions. Made the most consistent gains in quality of product registered by any company. Sold the Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events to International—but will continue to do the releasing. Got a million dollar Christmas present when Charlie made Mildred—Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

Carl Laemmle

SUCCEEDED J. A. Berst as directing head during the year. Closed the deal by which Pathe handles distribution on W. W. Hodkinson's product. Has a crackerjack exchange organization that should attract producers. Kept Pathe's unequaled serial reputation right up to the notch—and they tell us the next Pearl White is "the greatest ever." A little birdie whispers to us that with the war over a visit from Charles Pathe may be likely, and then—well, the 1919 trade papers won't be lacking in Pathe news. Take those words as a tip to watch and listen.

Paul Brunet

STARTED 1918 with Metro and finished with Metro and Screen Classics. Adding the two and two together you learn that Dick Rowland starts 1919 with oodles of extra kale earned by "To Hell with the Kaiser," "Revelation" and other big specials. Gave the screen the biggest newcomer of the year—Nazimova. Never has a star new to films jumped right into the center of the spotlight as she did. R. A. maintained a policy that places Metro, judging from exhibitor letters to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in first place for popularity with exhibitors because of its sales methods and representation.

Quinn's "Cure-All"

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—J. A. Quinn, the live Los Angeles showman who started the fuss that has produced so much interesting reading matter in "Motion Picture News" during the past few weeks, steps forward this week in the garb of "Old Doc Quinn." Having diagnosed the case he presents a prescription that he guarantees to cure. The scheme is novel, and daring—to say the least. We are anxious to know the reception it will receive from "Motion Picture News" readers. Write us. Tell us if you think "Doc" Quinn is dreaming or if you think he can put over in the picture industry the things that war accomplished in the automobile, steel and shoe fields. Come on—you have something new to pan or to boost now. Step up—the line forms on the right.]

"THE CURE," By J. A. QUINN

THE Editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS said "Let's Start Something," and if you do not think there is something started in the Los Angeles film colony just ask anyone on exchange row or in the studios here. And the best part of it is that everyone who means anything to the industry is glad it's started. I am receiving wonderful letters from those in the business and the public, copies of some of which I enclose. This is just what I expected, for no one who is conscientiously interested in the welfare of the motion picture industry could be anything but glad. Yes, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has come gallantly to the front at a time of most urgent need, and when this campaign is over, every producer, every exhibitor and every other person engaged in the business will owe a lasting debt of gratitude to W. A. Johnston and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The "necessary" people "think it's great," but they wonder how we are going to manage to get the desired results. Well, one of the foremost reasons we are going to get results is because we've got a LIVE JOURNAL back of us. I have no axe to grind and have had no personal correspondence with any official on the NEWS, aside from enclosing my articles in envelopes addressed to the editor, but it does not take a very keen mind to discern that there is a LIVE, AGGRESSIVE MAN at the head of this paper—not ruled by any particular faction or by advertisers. That this journal is a real trade paper seeking to solidify the foundations of the industry it represents cannot be doubted, and I am sure is not doubted by anyone we "need" in the business.

So now with the continued wonderful assistance of the NEWS I will tell all who do not know how we are going to effect a cure for unstable conditions in the picture business.

In a recent article published in the NEWS, the statement was made by the head of a producing firm that the exhibitors were trying to starve the producers.

I want to say right here that there is no such thought in my mind in leading this "clean-up movement" as to try to starve conscientious producers who are willing to listen to and co-operate with the exhibitors, but we are going to starve those who persist in using shoe-making methods and wasting time, money and material which has all to be paid for by the exhibitors who are the "paymasters" of the business, and we are going to starve those who refuse to listen to the call of equity, consistency and co-operation.

The exhibitor has had enough of the one-sided game of assuming a great big investment, tremendous liability on leases, etc., and putting in eighteen hours a day grinding and worrying and then either walking home or at the best taking a street car and watching or visualizing high powered limousines whirl by him occupied by the very people who are being paid by him, but who in many cases are not only incapable, but are a positive detriment.

The exhibitor is tired of watching the bored faces of his patrons emerging night after night with few exceptions, unless he happens to have a million dollar palace with a fifty-piece symphony orchestra and a dollar show on the side.

The exhibitor is tired of the "bunk" in the business and the padded, drawn out story, the poor casting, bad timing and unreasonable situations, and has come to the point where he feels that things cannot be any worse. He feels himself at a standstill with his hands tied behind his back. The game has become so inconsistent that his audiences have lost confidence and enthusiasm in his shows. On the rare occasions when he is fortunate enough to get a fairly good picture between the inflated price that is tacked on and the barrel of money it takes to tell the people that it is good and the time it takes for the people to learn by word of mouth that it is good, he finds himself in most cases a heavy loser unless the picture is headed by an exceptional artist with an exceptional drawing power.

Speaking from the standpoint of the conscientious producer—they are having their troubles also and as many if not more headaches than the exhibitor, and I believe they will welcome any move that is intended as this one is to stabilize conditions for all by eliminating waste and dead wood and make fewer and better pictures. The performers I believe will all gladly join when they know that in joining they make it possible for the producer and exhibitor to survive.

I have received endorsements from those prominent in every branch of the industry and I contemplate shortly starting on a tour of the country to meet exhibitors and representatives of other branches, and feel confident of lining up everyone to support a central organization composed of representatives from all branches of the industry, with offices in New York and Los Angeles, which organization will be the instrument through which these changes will be worked out.

This organization will be fathered by men like W. A. Johnston and will be the official "doctor" for the business, and its committees will carefully investigate all phases of the motion picture business and keep a close tab on the drawing power of the various players and classify them accordingly, also classify directors, producers and exhibitors, take up all grievances, and, in short, establish a get-together, equitable, consistent and co-operative system to deal with all concerned. Regulation of advertising will be an important feature as this is one of the places where money is being thrown away in great quantities.

Those who refuse to join in this movement will announce to the world just what caliber they are made of, and I believe the film world will soon decide that it can get along without them.

For the benefit of a few of the weak-kneed editors who accuse criticizers of conditions of being calamity howlers, I want to say right here that we can verify all that we have been complaining about and can prove hundreds of specific instances where frightful waste has been and is now going on, and can show where through the false idea of gain and rank incompetency the market has been and is now being flooded with inferior pictures.

RIGHT IS MIGHT—and this movement for equity, consistency and co-operation is right and is going to be backed by the press and the public.

On National Advertising

"Hurray For Kunsky!"

[EDITOR'S NOTE—John H. Kunsky's recent exclusive article in MOTION PICTURE NEWS on the subject of producer advertising that aids the exhibitor and advertising that is of no help, has brought an enthusiastic echo from L. H. Grandjean, Director of Publicity for the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans. In addition to adding the recital of his experience to that of the prominent Detroit exhibitor, Mr. Grandjean also put forth some interesting opinions of his own on the subject of national advertising.]

Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

The Kunsky letter on National Advertising is one hundred per cent common sense and the best exhibitor article which has appeared in any trade journal in months.

The success of any film production in the release city insures its success in the territory surrounding that city, no matter whether the city be Detroit and the territory Michigan or the city New Orleans and the territory Louisiana-Mississippi, etc., ad infinitum, providing, of course, that ordinary intelligence is manifested by the territorial exhibitors in capitalizing the first-run publicity. Likewise, the failure of any production in the release city, the inability of an exchange to secure a "live" release, or the inability to get any "first run" at all in the release city spells poor business for his film through his territory, all of the billboard and magazine advertising notwithstanding, and a great deal of the patent-medicine type of syndicated motion picture advertising complained of by Mr. Kunsky notwithstanding.

I can bear Mr. Kunsky out in this latter, having had experience in trying to put over pictures with "ready-made" advertising of the type specified. I said "trying to"—that's what we did. If anyone in any city of consequence ever succeeded with advertising of that sort, it was success in spite, not by virtue, of the advertising. It lacks conviction because it is so obviously a manufacturer's advertisement, and would be as obviously his even though his name, his trademark and other matter did not dominate the space, because it does not harmonize with its surroundings. Mr. Kunsky states that every house, every newspaper has an individuality. The public knows its newspaper, the public mind is influenced by its newspaper; the public knows its exhibitor and reposes a certain confidence in him. And Mr. Kunsky has pointed the way to intelligent, effective, economical, successful exploitation of motion pictures in suggesting that the manufacturers' appropriations be apportioned among the release exhibitors, letting the latter, in collaboration with the exchange, prepare the copy—the exhibitor to add his own lineage to the manufacturer's appropriation.

There is one point which Mr. Kunsky has not brought out and which I consider very important in a discussion of national advertising. It is (and I believe Mr. Kunsky and others will agree with me) that the newspaper can be a valuable ally to the moving picture, whereas the billboard cannot and the magazine has no local power to exert, regardless of its feelings in the matter. By this I mean that newspapers which are kindly disposed are generous in their favors to exhibitors and the industry in general in the way of reviews, press notices and special stories. It is obviously impossible for the billboard to go further than expose on its front a poster. It is big, ugly, impersonal—a mere announcement that all who run may read, and its province ends there. The magazine has closer ties with its readers, but as an ally of the exhibitor it is a minus quantity. Yet of the hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars wasted annually but a small proportion is placed with newspapers.

It is natural that the newspapers resent this. Let me pause to state that hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent in newspaper advertising which is not to be included in the above. This is strictly exhibitor expenditure. It is, however, of direct benefit to the manufacturer inasmuch as 75 per cent of it is spent in advertising first runs AND THIS ADVERTISING WORKS FOR THE SHOWINGS THAT FOLLOW. This IS the advertising WHICH REALLY SWAYS the mind.

Yes, the newspapers resent the fortunes wasted on other mediums, for not only do they not receive their just share of the manufacturer's appropriation, but every day the manufacturers' publicity departments "rub it in" by swamping the editorial desk of every newspaper in the country with all sorts of press dope, mats and photos. This direct-to-the-newspaper matter is sheer waste; it fetches up in the bottom of the waste basket—bottom, I said, for it's the first thing that is swept off the desk. But that isn't all. You will never fail to find in all press campaign books the line (with variations): "Hand these stories to your editor, he will be GLAD to print them." Yes, he will—not. If you are a regular advertiser he might, after having knocked the gizzards out of the story with his little blue pencil. But if you're a release exhibitor you have opportunity to see the film. Look at it yourself, write something with guts in it about the production and your editor will use it all, and only then.

Obviously, it is impossible for the territorial exhibitor to enjoy this advantage. AND THAT'S JUST EXACTLY WHY the territorial exhibitor follows the lead of the city release exhibitor. It is not billboard or magazine which brings this information to him and to his patrons. It IS the NEWSPAPER. And if the production is worth a hang and the newspapers are kindly disposed, not only do the city patrons read considerable interesting news of the production, but lots of other pertinent news to keep up their interest in photoplay. Otherwise, it is as easy for the newspaper to hold its silence.

Here, then, is the reason for newspaper advertising by the manufacturer in collaboration with the exhibitor.

I heartily agree with every line Mr. Kunsky wrote. His remarks about stills are particularly apropos. Will either of his suggestions be adopted, or are such efforts on the part of the exhibitor futile? The industry was removed from its position on the list of essential industries and placed on probation on account of its manifold extravagancies. It would seem that the manufacturers, particularly, have been shooting at the moon so long that they would lend an ear to arguments advanced by the progressive element among exhibitors.

It is most improbable that the advertising agencies which handle manufacturer advertising appropriations know anything of the motion picture business. They may not endorse the Kunsky idea or my remarks about billboards and magazines for that reason; maybe for other reasons. But that is no reason why we exhibitors, and particularly the NEWS Advisory Board, should not seek to enlighten the manufacturer through a discussion of National Advertising and its most efficient employment.

L. H. GRANDJEAN.

Vitagraph Appoints Quinn General Manager

FOLLOWING on the heels of the announced resignation of Walter W. Irwin from Vitagraph, it was announced this week that John M. Quinn has been appointed general manager of Vitagraph's sales organization. The announcement came from the office of Albert E. Smith, president of the joint Vitagraph distributing and producing companies.

The announcement makes known that in looking about for a chief executive for the selling organization Mr. Smith made it a point to secure a man who combined in the highest degree an intimate knowledge of the producing end of the film industry as well as of the distributing and the exploitation branch of the business. For practically a year past, Mr. Quinn has been closely associated with Mr. Smith at the main studio of Vitagraph company in Brooklyn and he has thus gained a knowledge of the particular conditions and problems which Vitagraph must meet in the production of its pictures.

The new general manager is no stranger to Vitagraph, having first been associated with the company in 1915, at which time he assisted in the exploitation of Vitagraph's first big serial, "The Goddess," in which Earle Williams and Anita Stewart were starred.

After the completion of this work, Mr. Quinn joined the Triangle Film Corporation, and upon the retirement of David W. Griffith from the Triangle-Fine Arts Studio in California Mr. Quinn assumed the post of general manager of that Western studio.

In discussing Mr. Quinn's appointment, Mr. Smith stated that, in his opinion, the permanency of all organizations in the film industry from this time onward necessitated the employment in executive capacities of acknowledged specialists in their respective lines who also enjoyed a broad training in the various other phases of the film industry. He stated further that in an organization of Vitagraph's type, wherein the distribution was confined to the product of the parent organization, and wherein, therefore, the producing and distributing ends of the business were indissolubly linked, he felt that his chief lieutenants in the producing end of the business must have a comprehensive knowledge of the distribution problems, and likewise, and perhaps even more essentially, his lieutenants in the distributing end of the business must be thoroughly conversant with the producing problems. In other words, all his chief assistants must be film specialists with a thorough understanding of all branches of the business, including a superlative knowledge of their own branch.

Advertisers Host to Well Known Guests

The regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's last week, was featured and enlivened by the presence of two distinguished guests, Henri Bioment Bergere, editor and director of Le Film, of Paris, the largest motion picture publication in France, and Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto Theater, Butte, Mont., and a member of the Advisory Board of Motion Picture News.

M. Bergere was introduced by Allan Rock, secretary of the association, and gave an interesting talk on the condition of the film industry in France and the reconstruction plans for the immediate as well as the more distant future. He intimated that Paris will soon supplant London as the chief distributing center for Europe, and pointed out that with a fair amount of reciprocity between American and French film interests both parties could profit immeasurably.

Mr. Ruffner, who is one of the most successful exhibitors in the country and was formerly publicity and advertising director for the Jensen & Von Herberg interests, provoked a lively discussion which was participated in by nearly all of the twenty-five members present. He spoke not only as an exhibitor, but as an advertising man, and his pointed, constructive criticisms proved of the highest value to the members. There was little or nothing of mutual interest to the exhibitor and the publicity and advertising man which he did not touch upon, and his ready and logically sound answers to the countless questions with which he was bombarded received the most careful attention and were mentally recorded for future use in the preparation of copy and advertising accessories.

Samuel Goldfish Meets Milwaukee Exhibitors

Milwaukee exhibitors were the guests of Samuel Goldfish and the Goldwyn Company Friday at an interesting luncheon and talk in the gold room of the Hotel Wisconsin at 12:30 p. m.

S. W. Rothapfel was the particular magnate that drew the exhibitors to this luncheon, and the talk he gave them at the close of the luncheon was most interesting.

Quality instead of quantity was the gist of Mr. Rothapfel's remarks, and he took a rap at the firms that insisted upon long and lengthy leads, giving the names of the producers, the authors, the stars, etc. The people do not pay their money to see those things, said Mr. Rothapfel. They want action, not padding.

Accompanying Mr. Rothapfel were Samuel Goldfish, Aaron Jones, Nathan Ascher and Ike Van Runkle. A large majority of the members of the Milwaukee Photoplay Exhibitors' Association were at the meeting, including Thomas Saxe, George Fischer, Jack Silliman, Henry Trinz, Paul Langheimrich and others.

Film Men Favored in Winnipeg

Members of the Winnipeg Board of Trade took a mail vote on the question of the advisability of the proposed film exchange by-law which will compel local exchanges to move into one-story fireproof structures. The vote was overwhelmingly against the proposed law, 431 members marking the ballot paper as being opposed to the legislation and 163 supporting the by-law. The vote on a question as to whether local exchanges and theatres should be asked to pay additional taxes favored the film men even more than the ballot on the exchange building question.

Special Writer "Pities the Exhibitor"

Under the heading of "Pity the Exhibitor," S. Jay Kaufman, who writes a column called Round the Town for a New York afternoon paper, said the following in an edition last week:

"Ask the average picture magnate or director what's wrong with pictures and he will say 'The Exhibitor.' The exhibitor has no way of answering, because all he can show is what the producer makes. Thus better pictures become impossible. That is to say, pictures with something more than a romance of two idiots. The 'pretty-boy' and the ingenue. A big idea back of the story is always refused with, 'Yes, great; but the exhibitors will not take it.' For many a moon we have wanted to see these exhibitors. We did. Last night. At a dinner at Healy's which they gave to discuss their affairs. They are average, intelligent, earnest men. They are anxious to get better pictures, and they have, as one said, no way of getting them other than by asking. When they ask they are told, so this man said: 'Yes, but you are only one exhibitor. The others will not take anything really fine.' The result is obvious. Until, then, some philanthropist comes along and produces several hundred great pictures which will set a standard the two-idiot romances will continue. The joker, however, may be that the philanthropist will make money. As did Miss Horniman when she established a repertory theatre in England.

"One phase of their discussion was Sunday shows. Some towns still refuse to allow pictures on Sunday. And the movement seems to be growing. In what we heard there was no mention of the music in movie theatres. If an art gallery is permitted to remain open on Sunday why not a series of pictures with the civic and sacred force of music? And isn't what is wrong on Sunday wrong on Monday? Would these cities rather have their citizens gossip, sleep, and walk the streets than see pictures and hear music? Oh, it's done for pay? Oh, we see. The objection is not to the pictures but to the fact that some one makes a decent living at the same time? We see."

J. J. Colleton Resigns His Position at Toronto

J. J. Colleton has resigned as manager of the Toronto branch of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributors of Pathe and other releases.

Mr. Colleton's plans for the future have not been detailed.

Epidemic Must Not Close Theatres

National Campaign of Education Inaugurated by National Association Seeks to Prove That Recent Closing of Theatres Was a Mistake

IT is a mistake on the part of public officials to close down motion picture theatres and other places of public gathering when trying to combat the epidemic of Spanish influenza, according to Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of the City of New York.

As a result of these frankly expressed views coming from so high an authority, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry announces that it has just started a national campaign to prove it and also to show the many public officials throughout the country, and the public in general, that the motion picture theatres, where they remained open as in New York, were of the greatest assistance to the Department of Health in furthering the work of public health education during the epidemic.

Will Drive Facts Home

That Commissioner Copeland's policy in keeping the theatres open had the best effect is substantiated in a table of statistics that has been compiled by the United States Department of Labor showing that of the major cities of the country where the epidemic had the greatest hold, New York, the largest city in the United States, whtich kept its theatres open all of the time had the smallest death rate.

The campaign which the National Association has started has for its object the driving home of these facts to the public officials of all the cities in the country of 25,000 population and over.

A copy of the Commissioner's letter to the Association, a reprint of a statement, issued by him and published in the New York Times, explaining in detail why the death rate of New York City was so low and giving great credit to the motion picture theatres for the part they played in keeping the death rate down, and the table compiled by the Department of Labor which shows that in every instance places where the theatres were permitted to remain open the death rate was lower than in the places where they were forced to close down, is being sent to all of the motion picture theatres of the country, daily newspapers, motion picture exchanges, Mayors of cities, Chiefs of Police, Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, city and state health officers, and to the superintendents of schools.

Exhibitors Can Help

With the material that is being sent to the motion picture theatres is a letter of explanation telling the exhibitor in detail just what he is to do in order to use this material to its greatest advantage.

Likewise a letter is being sent to the exchange managers of the various companies signed by the executive heads of the individual companies, apprising the exchange managers of what is being done and instructing them to get together with the exhibitors in their territories and to use every force and every power of concerted effort to impress on the authorities the beneficial results that will result from a proper campaign of public health education carried on in the newspapers, motion picture theatres, schools and all places of public gathering.

The material that is being sent out has been designed in such form that the exhibitors can use it to post in their lobbies in the form of bulletins, and supplies them with the necessary information to enable them to throw slides upon the screen or as was done by the exhibitors in New York City, make short addresses to their patrons before every performance on the great danger of public coughing and sneezing.

INFLUENZA TAKES TWO DIRECTORS

Wolbert and Percival Succomb to Epidemic at Los Angeles

UNIVERSAL and Paramount lost well known directors when William Wolbert passed away December 12 and Harold Percival died on December 14.

Influenza claimed both victims, and their passing is viewed with keen regret by the film colony on the West Coast.

Mr. Wolbert had been with the Universal since last July and was previously directing for Vitagraph.

Harold Percival had been art director for two years with Thomas H. Ince Productions.

Lift Ban in Butte

BUTTE, MONT.—The local health board ban on theaters, dance halls and cabarets was lifted on December 17th. The authorities declare that all danger from the epidemic has passed.

But just when things cleared up in one direction local managers found another storm cloud heading their way. There is no music in any of the houses, due to a strike of the musicians over wage demands. On top of that the operators went out in sympathy and all the managers are in the projection booths themselves.

OGDEN, UTAH (Special).—The influenza situation here is greatly improved. Local managers petitioned the health authorities to permit a reopening of the theaters on December 20th and a decision in their favor was granted on the 18th.

In Doubt in Virginia

RICHMOND, VA. (Special).—The influenza situation here is somewhat muddled, just enough cases being reported to keep the managers in daily fear that they may be closed and to hurt attendance.

To help save the managers from a closing order the Health Department and exhibitors are co-operating. A slide has been ordered shown before each performance reading: "It is ordered by the Richmond Health Department that all persons have their handkerchief in readiness to cover up their coughs or sneezes and to prevent the spread of influenza. Any person failing to comply with this order will be ejected from this theater."

In Petersburg, Virginia, all children under the age of twelve are prohibited from attending theaters.

"Cinci" Closed and Opened

CINCINNATI, O. (Special).—Cincinnati has just emerged from a two days' ban on account of influenza, due to the action taken by Mayor John Galvin in telling the police to ignore orders of the Board of Health. On December 11 the board issued an order that all motion picture theaters must close daily from 4:30 to 6 p. m. The order stated that all places must be thoroughly ventilated during this period. A further restriction stated that the movie houses must so arrange their performances that the audiences were not dismissed at the same time that the patrons of the so-called legitimate theaters thronged the streets. No person under eighteen years of age was allowed in the theaters.

Hamilton, Ohio, a suburb in the Cincinnati district, has lifted the "lid" on picture shows, which were closed by the Board of Health when influenza struck that city. When Dr. M. F. Vereker, health officer, reported that the epidemic was under control, the Board of Health issued an order allowing the theaters to reopen on Monday, December 16. This action followed closely upon the organized protest of movie house managers that they were being discriminated against by the influenza ban. The order limits the theaters to one performance daily, running from 7 to 11 o'clock, without admitting children.

New Strand at Douglas Opens in January

Plans are now being made by Nick Diamos for the opening of his new theatre, which has been named the Strand, at Douglas, Ariz., some time early in January.

This theatre is said to be the finest one in Arizona, and will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,500. The lobby of the new house is finished in elegant style, Arizona marble being used throughout.

Calbeck Buys Two Houses

Newton Calbeck has just purchased the property of the Nappanee Amusement Company, of Nappanee, Ind.

Coal Saving Campaign Started

National Association Heeds Request of Fuel Administration to Help Conserve Supply — Trailers Used

AT the request of the United States Fuel Administration the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its fuel conservation committee, has inaugurated a coal saving campaign to cover the northeastern section of the United States.

This campaign will be conducted in the motion picture theatres in the territory which the Fuel Administration desires to reach by means of trailers attached to the regular weekly issues of the news weeklies.

Sufficient trailers have been provided to cover a campaign of six weeks, the plan being to release two trailers each week. The news weeklies were selected for this purpose owing to the fact that the three weeklies co-operating with the association in this work, the Universal, Pathe and Gaumont, reach practically every theatre in the territory in which the Fuel Administration believes there exists an acute necessity for the economy of coal during the coming winter months.

This territory includes New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia. It is the desire of the Fuel Administration that these trailers be not shown outside of the above-mentioned territory and exhibitors not located within the restricted zone are requested not to show the trailers in case news weeklies come to them with the trailers attached. All those exhibitors within this zone however are requested to show the trailers and to do everything within their power to impress on their patrons the necessity for economy in the use of coal.

The plans for this campaign have been under discussion by the fuel conservation committee of the National Association and the Fuel Administration for considerable time. This committee consists of Marcus Loew, chairman; P. A. Powers, B. S. Moss, Samuel Rothapfel, William Brandt, Sydney Cohen, Albert Lowe, Gabriel Hess and Harry Crandall. When the question of a campaign to reach the individual consumer of coal was first presented to this committee by the officials of the Fuel Administration it was planned to cover all of the territory east of the Mississippi river, and detailed plans were worked out by the committee for this work.

The signing of the armistice however changed all of these plans and all of the work that had been done had to be discarded and new plans worked out. This necessitated the working out of an entirely new set of trailers. When the subject matter of these had been finally approved by the Fuel Administration the committee gave Washington an example of the quick manner in which the motion picture industry works once it obtains the word to go ahead.

Twenty-four hours after the copy for the trailers had been received by Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the committee, the first sample print had been made and was in the mail for Washington. As soon as this was approved by the Fuel Administration orders were placed for the printing of the requisite number of trailers, and forty-eight hours after these orders had been given the trailers were in the hands of the news weeklies and are now being attached to the releases. Letters of appreciation of the expeditious manner in which this work was handled have been received from the Fuel Administration.

Goldwyn Selects Feist as Vice-President

It was announced this week that at a meeting of the directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, Felix F. Feist of the World Film Corporation, one of the well-known younger executives in the industry, has been elected a vice-president of the Goldwyn releasing organization and in a few weeks will join the Goldwyn family.

Mr. Feist is the type of successful man that Goldwyn has taken into its organization since the beginnings of the company. The officers of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation are Samuel Goldfish, president; F. B. Warren and Alfred Weiss, vice-presidents, and Gabriel L. Hess, secretary and treasurer. These executives have been a part of Goldwyn from the day of the company's formation in June, 1917, and have witnessed its growth as an international factor in the industry.

Mr. Feist's entry into the picture industry was made in 1910 as advertising manager of the Kinemacolor Company. A few months later he was made western manager of Kinemacolor with offices in Chicago. He resigned from that organization to become general manager of the Celebrated Players' Film Corporation of Chicago, and in a few months was made president of the company. He remained with this company two and a half years, coming to New York to become secretary and general manager of the Equitable Pictures Corporation. Here he remained until the Equitable was merged with the World.

Detroit Seeks to Correct Trade Evils

DETROIT, MICH.—In order to eliminate certain trade evils that have crept into the business the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers will soon send to every theatre manager in the state, copies of a new set of rules under which the managers must govern themselves. The board seeks to have universal rules for the disposition of film, paper, slides and advertising matter and to eliminate the exhibitor who refuses to pay legitimate charges.

Since the board has been organized a central shipping room has been put into operation in the film building. A credit department is now planned.

It is announced that exhibitors who have complaints should file reports with the board and absolutely fair treatment is assured them.

McLaurin Goes to France for the Red Cross

HAMISH McLAURIN, until recently publicity director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, left this week for France where he will have charge of making pictures for the American Red Cross. He will be absent a year.

Mr. McLaurin left his post with Mr. Rothapfel, with whom he had been associated since the opening of the Rialto, because he felt that he wanted to do his bit for his country, and his splendid newspaper talents, together with his considerable knowledge of the technique of motion pictures fitted him especially for his position with the Red Cross.

The week that marked his departure from his country saw the presentation of his picture, "The Greatest Gift," a sterling argument for the campaign that is now on.

"Over there" he will exercise general supervision over the motion pictures that are to be made by the American Red Cross. This work is going to continue because this great organization of humanity believes is showing to the donors to its sacred cause what is being done with the money that has been contributed. These pictures will be made for the next year and will be shown all through the country. Heretofore, there has been some confusion because these pictures have come to this country in what may be called the crude form and they have had to be cut and titled here.

In France Mr. McLaurin will have charge of this work and when the films do come across they will be ready to go to the laboratory so that the prints may be made. In addition to this, he will direct the work of the cameramen of the Red Cross, and hereafter the pictures will be made with a definite object in view, of telling a particular story.

Officers Elected by N. Y. F.I.L.M Club

At the annual election of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York, which took place December 4th, the following officers were chosen:

I. E. Chadwick, president; John Hammel, first vice-president; Joseph Klein, second vice-president; Sam Eckman, treasurer; Charles B. Hoy, secretary; George Schaefer, sergeant-at-arms.

Every branch manager and practically every salesman of the various film exchanges in connection with the F. I. L. M. Club attended the beefsteak dinner at Healy's December 11th given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Edna Gladys Brown Dies in New York

Edna Gladys Brown, who had been prominently associated with the motion picture industry for the past ten years, died suddenly December 12 of pneumonia. For the past four years she had been interested with Joseph R. Miles in the Joseph R. Miles Enterprises.

Funeral services were held December 14 from the Funeral Church in New York.

Abrams and Schulberg Quit F.P.-Lasky

Former Vice-President and Vice-Managing Director Lay Plans to Form Own Organization—Details Not Yet Made Known—Off for Coast

AMONG the more important executive changes within the larger organizations as the old year draws to a close was that last week which saw the withdrawal of Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The former was vice-president and managing director and the latter was vice-managing director.

It was announced this week that Mr. Abrams and Mr. Schulberg have laid plans to form their own organization along lines which they have long had in mind, and it was this reason that resulted in their withdrawal from Famous Players-Lasky.

Details of their proposition have not been given out, as they are considered of such import that complete announcement now would be premature.

Pillars of Organization

The announcement to MOTION PICTURE NEWS regarding their withdrawal read as follows:

"What are perhaps the most important executive changes of the year are contained in the announcement that Hiram Abrams, vice-president and managing director, and B. P. Schulberg, vice-managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, have resigned their offices to form their own organization and carry out certain plans which it has long been their desire to establish.

"The news has aroused intense surprise and interest in the trade, for these two men have long been known as strong pillars of the organization with which they have been identified since its inception."

In response to a request for a statement as to what general form his plans would take, Mr. Abrams remarked that they were of too much import to the trade to be presented in their present immature shape, but that they would be announced in detail within a few weeks, when they would be found to comprise some of the most constructive measures and some of the most equitable principles ever offered for the trade's consideration. He also added that the reason for his departure from his old company was due to the realization that it is more difficult to work out new tenets of procedure between two factors of an industry through an old company with established policies than through a new and unhampered machinery of his own construction.

Goes to the Coast

Mr. Abrams is to start for Los Angeles immediately, and it is promised that the announcement will promptly follow his return to New York. In his absence, Mr. Schulberg will remain in New York adopting the preliminary steps toward the organization which they contemplate building.

They are in close touch with motion picture conditions throughout the country, and their plan to organize a new unit in the industry indicates that they believe that the after-war influence promises expansion for the entire motion picture business.

Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg about a year ago surrendered the presidency and general managership, respectively, of Paramount to organize the administrative bureau of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through which, as was announced at that time, it was their desire to bring the exhibitors of the country closer to the producers for their common welfare, so that a direct channel of communication could be maintained between studio and theatre. In the interests of this project they made numerous tours of the country in order to come in more direct contact with trade currents and more closely feel the pulse of the public as registered at box offices in various sections of the country. It was as a result of these observations that they prompted the declaration by Jesse L. Lasky that the company would produce no gruesome, religious, costume plays or fairy tales during the war, and they were also responsible for the system at present in vogue of obtaining opinions on all productions from exhibitors, for which work they selected Mr. George N. Shorey because he combined the experiences of exhibitor, critic and box office analyst.

Hiram Abrams and Ben Schulberg, Formerly of Famous Players-Lasky

Long in the Business

Hiram Abrams entered the film business in the early stages of its development, when his great personal force, magnetic qualities and devotion to the exhibitors' interests rapidly made him conspicuous as one of the foremost distributors in the country. He has always been known as a constructive organizer and a vigorous exponent of equitable principles between producer and exhibitor. He was among the first exchange men to acquire the rights to "Queen Elizabeth," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and the first feature program produced by the Famous Players Film Company, of which he, in association with Walter E. Greene, was the sole distributor in New England. He was one of the principal factors in the formation of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and it was during his presidency of this organization that he, in conjunction with Adolph Zukor, effected the amalgamation of the big distributing company with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It was also during the last period of his three-year tenure of that office that the star-series system was adopted by Paramount, in compliance with the opinions of the majority of exhibitors as contained in their replies to his famous article, "Is the Program System Right or Wrong?"

First Thirty Features

B. P. Schulberg entered the film business ten years ago from the newspaper field, and joined the Famous Players Film Company at its inception as scenario editor and advertising and publicity manager, in which capacity he selected and adapted for the screen, and later exploited, "the first thirty Famous Features." It is of interest that it was he who selected "Tess of the Storm Country" for Mary Pickford and "Wildflower" for Marguerite Clark, the first for a long time considered Mary Pickford's greatest success, and the second of which established Miss Clark overnight as one of the foremost favorites of the screen, and it was he who Mr. Zukor once publicly announced "delivered his message to the world." He was appointed general manager of Paramount in 1915 under Hiram Abrams, and has been closely identified with him ever since. They have been described as ideal collaborators, and their detailed announcement is awaited with interest.

Lynchburg Theatre Burns

LYNCHBURG, VA.—Fire last week almost completely destroyed the Broadway Moving Picture theatre in Lynchburg, entailing damages estimated at about $12,000, which is covered by insurance.

The fire started from a film in the operating room, causing an explosion, flames spreading rapidly throughout the building. The audience escaped and no one was hurt.

Soldier Employee of Paramount Wins Croix de Guerre

ENLISTING as a private immediately after the United States entered the world war, William J. Moore, formerly employed at the main offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has just returned to New York a First Lieutenant and with high honors—the winning of his French war cross—the Croix de Guerre.

Not since Bill Hart recently visited New York has there been such a commotion among stenographers, clerks and employees, all friends of the hero who entered the army as a private and returned, battle scarred, as a First Lieutenant.

Moore is a member of the old Sixty-ninth of New York (new 165th Infantry), and was wounded twice and gassed once. On March 7th he took command of a sector under heavy bombardment after his superior officer had been killed.

He organized relief parties to dig out men who had been caught in dugouts that caved in, commanding this work and taking active part in it for twenty-four hours, holding out against a fierce bombardment in which forty-two men were lost and he himself shot through the right lung with a machine gun bullet.

Lieutenant Moore, immediately upon landing in New York, rushed up to the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on Fifth Avenue, where he was welcomed back by Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky and other executives.

The bombardment in which Moore won his cross and was first wounded took place at Lunneville. After recovering from his wound he again went into action at Baccarat. At Rouge Bouquet later he was severely gassed. He also took part in engagements at Badon Viller, St. Mihiel, and his latest fighting occurred in the Argonne Forest, where he was again wounded, a bullet passing through his leg.

Canada Upholds Own Pictures

Agitation Against American Films Continues to Hold Limelight—Papers Urge the Government to Take Action

THAT all Canadian Provinces should follow up the action of Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer for Ontario, in raising official objection to the presentation of American war dramas and topical pictures on the screens of Ontario, was urged in an editorial appearing in the Calgary Albertan. This step, according to the writer of the editorial, would form one way to influence the producers of films to a consideration of the desires of the Canadian public. It was urged that Canadians seemed to be helpless in the matter up to the present.

The Albertan declared that the action taken by the Ontario official was not an indication of small country peevishness or international sentiment. It was considered more or less a matter of commercial readjustment and a desired change between producer and consumer. The paper argued that American producers had "dumped" anything and everything upon the Canadians just as it suited their convenience. There is no lack of sympathy with Americanism, it was pointed out, but "scream eagle" productions made Canadians squirm in their seats. It was urged that the government as a whole should take action so that theatre patrons throughout the country would "get a square deal."

The agitation against American war pictures to date, however, has been more or less localized in Toronto, where Hon. T. W. McGarry holds forth in his official capacity. Hon. McGarry followed up his first "proclamation" against the American soldier films by announcing that he was attending various theatres to see if the exchange managers and exhibitors were taking steps to adjust the situation.

Two of the prominent Toronto theatres presented features and other pictures during the week of December 16 which were Canadian or English in character. Manager W. M. Elliott of the Regent Theatre reproduced in facsimile form the official letter of Hon. T. W. McGarry which had been sent to local exchanges, and he announced that "to comply with Hon. T. W. McGarry's request" the Regent was offering an English film success, "Inside the Lines."

Manager Bernstein of Loew's Theater, Toronto, selected "Canadian" pictures for his programme of December 16 also, the feature attraction being "The Law of the North," a Canadian story in which Charles Ray is starred. Another picture was the first of a series of Canadian official views showing Canadian troops in France. The first reel was made up of pictures of the Third (Toronto) Battalion.

Fox Theatre Opens Strong at Minneapolis

Evidence of the growing interest in the silent drama in Minneapolis is shown by the crowds that throng the William Fox Shubert Theatre, which has just opened its doors for the first time.

It has been often said that if Minneapolis acquired any additional moving picture houses they would have little patronage, as so many theatres already exist there.

However, when Theda Bara in "Salome" was screened as the opening entertainment, Minneapolis theatre folk "elbowed" their way into the parquet with the same precision and regularity as they do at the other theatres in the city.

If early indications count for anything a great future is in store for the new playhouse, which for the past few years has been occupied by stock companies, and for various entertainments and programs.

Hillsboro Defeats Sunday Closing of Theatres

At the election in Hillsboro, Washington, the proposal to close motion picture theatres on Sundays was badly beaten, only 144 votes being cast for the measure to 372 against.

As the original petition presented to the council asking the passage of a closing ordinance contained 250 names it is plain that many who signed the petition did not vote in favor of the measure, and the result is further evidence of the truth of the statement that people will sign their names to anything, and a signature does not necessarily indicate opinion.

The initiated measure was the means of turning what promised to be a dull city election into a lively affair and was undoubtedly the means of bringing out the large vote which was cast.

Cincinnati Theatres May Increase Admission

Cincinnati now has only five downtown motion picture theatres that operate with five-cent admissions. This condition may be remedied in the near fture, as the managers are threatening to raise admissions to ten cents, plus the war tax.

The managers are finding it hard sledding to show a profit, and as none of them are in business for their health they are considering the advance in admissions, thus following out the generally adopted policy of the Queen City downtown exhibitors.

Rufus K. Evans Returns to Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Rufus K. Evans, former manager of the General, Fox and Jewel exchanges of Minneapolis, has returned after an absence of two months to open an exchange for the Film Clearing House.

Mr. Evans has not announced his future plans, but it is believed that the new firm will distribute state rights productions in the territory.

Division of Films Scheduled to End Soon

Acting Director, in Answering Film Men's Attack Declares "Will Cease on Signing of Peace"—Denies Government Competition Charge

MARCUS BEEMAN, Acting Director of the Committee on Public Information's Division of Films, stepped forward this week with a reply to the resolutions presented by a committee of film men at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

In the course of a vigorous reply to the charge that the Government's bureau has provided unfair competition with regular motion picture interests, Mr. Beeman makes the flat statement that "the Committee on Public Information will cease to exist with the signing of the peace proclamation. . . . It has no desire to perpetuate itself."

The Chamber of Commerce resolutions were presented by a committee representing the National Association and consisting of Walter W. Irwin, Will C. Smith, John Flinn and Frederick H. Elliott.

The Division's Reply

Messrs. Walter W. Irwin, John C. Flinn, William C. Smith and Frederick H. Elliott, representing the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: The Division of Films of the United States Committee on Public Information has received a copy of the resolution drawn up by your committee at a meeting held at Atlantic City on December 5, 1918.

Your resolution features the assistance the motion picture industry has rendered to the United States Government in its Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives and departmental activities, such as War, Navy, Food, Fuel, Agriculture and other departments. This splendid and generous help and co-operation has been acknowledged by the President of the United States and by those associated with him.

You claim that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has "competed" with the motion picture industry in releasing its official war features and weekly reviews "at a profit," and wants these activities turned over to private film agencies.

The Division of Films has not competed with the motion picture industry, as it purposely avoided creating an expensive and elaborate mechanism for distribution. On the other hand, through competitive bids, it allowed the distributors of the United States to employ their physical facilities and exchanges for this purpose.

Of necessity the official film material was taken by the Signal Corps photographers of the army and the official photographers of the navy, no privately staged material whatever being utilized. All of the official film portrayed intimately and accurately the military and industrial preparations in the United States and the splendid accomplishments of our armies on the battle fronts of Europe.

The rental prices to exhibitors which you complain of were determined by a most fair and equitable procedure in which each exhibitor indicated his average daily receipts and the price he could afford to pay to return him a profit and still play to crowded houses.

MARKET REPORT CHART

THE Annual Market Report Chart, a feature of Motion Pictures News' Holiday Numbers for some years past, does not appear in this issue.

It was thought that in view of the peculiar circumstances created by the influenza epidemic and the coming of peace a country-wide survey at this time would have little permanent value. In addition, any value it might have in recording admission price tendencies is apt to be rendered nil in a few months should a boost in the war tax be decided by the Congress.

The Motion Picture News Market Report will appear in an issue early in the New Year—just as soon as conditions warrant it.

Profits to Treasury

The "profits" of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, which you apparently object to, were by act of Congress under date of June 17, 1917, turned over to the United States Treasury and represent a direct return to the taxpayers. The fact that the Division of Films did operate on this basis and return substantial sums to the United States Treasury is a matter of general knowledge and has been the subject of widespread commendation and has been gratefully appreciated by those who know the tremendous cost of this World War.

On the other hand, had these films been released to the exhibitors at cost, as you suggest, you would have been justified in claiming that the standardized priced releases of privately produced features would be placed in jeopardy. This would have been "ruinous competition" indeed.

Furthermore, the Committee on Public Information, through an extensive community campaign, has brought thousands upon thousands of new patrons to the motion picture theatres of the country. The "People's Films" had a drawing power second to none. Throughout the United States and in foreign countries these films showed that the allies and the United States must ultimately win the war, and their value in this respect cannot be overestimated.

As a war organization similar to the War Trade Board and the War Industries Board and other departments created as war emergency bodies, the Committee on Public Information will cease to exist upon the signing of the peace proclamation. It has already reduced to a minimum its activities, as it has no desire to perpetuate itself. The third official war feature, "Under Four Flags," is the last official feature to be distributed. The official war review continues only during the period embraced by the present activities of our army and navy.

The Division of Films is now completing a record of which it is justly proud.

The motion picture industry of the United States has been immeasurably benefitted by its existence.

Yours very truly,

MARCUS A. BEEMAN,
Acting Director.

"The Spreading Evil"

Sol Lesser, well known Pacific Coast states rights buyer, has closed a contract for "The Spreading Evil," James Keane's special production, for the States of California, Arizona and Nevada. The deal was closed in Chicago after a really spectacular chase from New York to the Middle West metropolis in which everything but an airplane was used.

Mr. Lesser had expressed a keen interest in the picture some weeks ago, but when he arrived in New York, Mr. Keane was out of town. Just as Mr. Lesser was leaving for the coast Mr. Keane got back into New York and the two got together at the last minute.

George Wilson to Manage Strand at Kingston

George Wilson, formerly manager of the Empire Theatre, Windsor, Ontario, has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Kingston, Ontario, which is one of the string of theatres controlled by the Paramount Theatres Company, Limited.

Mr. James Davidson, who has been in charge of the Strand temporarily, has returned to his duties with the Regal Films, Limited, Toronto.

Atlanta Sees Changes

It has been announced from Atlanta, Ga., that Wallace Walthall, former salesman of the Atlanta branch of General Film Company, has succeeded James Kelly at Dallas, Texas, as manager of the General branch at that point.

J. B. Wilbanks, former manager of the George Kleine System branch, succeeds Mr. Dillard at the Atlanta branch of General, Mr. Dillard being transferred to the New Orleans office to fill the vacancy left by Jack Woods' death.

Ohio May Lose Sunday Shows

Reformers Take Courage at Prohibition Amendment and Turn Attention to Pictures—Exhibitors Put Up Stiff Fight

ACCORDING to reports from Cincinnati, Ohio now faces the prospect of having Sunday motion picture shows put in the discard, as reformers who have succeeded in having the Buckeye State placed in the "dry" column are turning their attention to amusements. An effort will be made to have the coming session of the Ohio Legislature enact a new law that will make the "blue" laws effective after being dormant for a number of years. At the present time a Sunday closing law is on the statute books, but it has not been enforced for over twenty-five years. The consensus of opinion is in favor of Sunday shows.

Cincinnati exhibitors have taken steps to make a vigorous fight against the reformers, and at a meeting at the Hotel Sinton, December 11, expressed themselves as follows:

"Now that the reformers have succeeded in making Ohio dry, their activities will be centered upon the theatres, and an effective organization will be necessary to counteract their efforts."

A committee of five was named to collect funds from exhibitors to finance the fight. The committee named was as follows: George G. Rich and William Bowers, representing the sixteen film exchanges, and Isaac Libson, Frederick L. Emmert and A. Hettesheimer, representing the exhibitors.

It also was agreed that every exhibitor in Cincinnati and Hamilton County should be enrolled as a member of the Ohio State Screen League. This was recommended to pool all interests to present a solid front before the State Legislature.

Exhibitors from many of the small theatres in the vicinity of Cincinnati attended the meeting and they made an active protest against any attempt to make them close their theatres on Sundays, they claiming that such action would make operation of their show houses a losing proposition, Sunday, of course, being their heaviest day of business. Many of them now are compelled to close on Sundays while the show houses in the larger cities are open on Sundays and receive the benefit of the heavy attendance.

An attempt was made by Ben Heidingfeld, representing the legitimate houses, to have the meeting back step on its proposal to fight any attempt to do away with Sunday shows. Mr. Heidingsfeld made the claim that any agitation at the present time would result in a drastic measure being passed by the Ohio Legislature. However, the opposition has "tipped off" its hand at Columbus, coming out with the flat-footed announcement that they plan to close all shows on Sunday, so the local exhibitors have determined to meet the opposition half way and have fired the first shot in the fight.

Harry W. Kress, Piqua, Ohio, member of the executive committee of the Ohio State Screen League, attended the meeting. He presented the view of the exhibitors in the smaller cities. Those that have not been allowed to operate their show houses on Sundays declare that they will have to close their doors if the Sunday "lid" is enforced.

Pictures Discussed in Small Towns

The fresh interest of the public in the subject of motion pictures following the war was indicated at two meetings held recently in Danielson, Conn., and Worcester, Mass. The former was held in the High School building of the town, under the auspices of the Killingly Woman's Club, while the latter meeting, which took place in the Free Public Library building, was called by the Worcester Board of Review of Motion Pictures, composed of forty-nine representatives of civic and social organizations of the city. Both of these meetings were addressed by Orrin G. Cocks, Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Review. At the former, the subjects discussed were the importance of the motion picture in connection with the war, the advances made in the motion picture art, and the use of selected motion pictures for young people. Questions were asked regarding the possibility of greater cooperation with the exhibitor in connection with "family nights" and the use of pictures considered particularly suitable for young people.

Wallace Leaves for South America

H. Staunton Wallace, South American representative of the North American Film Company, whose headquarters are in Buenos Ayres, has been in New York for the past five weeks. Friday he left again for his home office after acquainting himself with the changes in trade conditions in this country since his last visit here.

Mr. Wallace is one of the leaders in the film industry of South America and is enthusiastic over prospects on the southern continent. There was never a better opportunity offered a business house than is offered the film company today in South America, according to Mr. Wallace.

C. H. Fulton Will Soon Return from France

C. H. Fulton, sergeant in an engineers' corps in France, expects to be back within a few months, and it is expected that he will establish a film office in Chicago, and also take up his duties as an officer of the E. E. Fulton Company, manufacturers of the "Fulco" specialties, with offices and factory at 3208 Carroll avenue, Chicago.

R. H. Fulton, a brother, also interested in the E. E. Fulton Company, has resigned from active employment with the United Theatre Equipment Corporation to take a much needed rest.

New California Theatre Opened Dec. 24

Announcement was made by Director General Fred A. Miller of the new California theatre opening date at Los Angeles, which was Tuesday evening, December 24. It was expected that the house would be completely finished and very elaborate plans were made for the opening program, which introduced a number of new features in motion picture presentation.

The principal feature of the evening was Douglas Fairbanks in Arizona. Arrangements were made for the star to appear in person at the theatre. Governor Stephens of California was scheduled to make the dedication address, and William A. Johnston, editor of Motion Picture News, and Jesse L. Laksy, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, were invited to be guests of honor.

Besides the California news weekly, which will be a composite of all the weeklies now on the market, the program includes a Burlingham Travelogue and a Bill Parsons-Goldwyn comedy.

This theatre has had installed the finest orchestral organ made by the Robert Morton branch of the American Photo Player Company, and this will be augmented with music by a thirty-five piece orchestra.

Buffalo Experiences Good Business

Buffalo, like other cities, is no exception to the present business boom in film circles, both theatres and exchanges enjoying remarkable business. There are few theatres in Buffalo today complaining of poor business, and these are mostly small houses in the outlying districts, but even these places are getting their share. "Try to Get In," is the slogan used in the advertising of one of the downtown houses, and that explains nicely the general situation. With the coming of the holidays, crowds are flocking to the business section and as a result the theatres are reaping a golden harvest from those who would rest a few hours during their search for Xmas presents. With the war over folks are also finding that they wish to get back to the old good times again, and so we find that the family is now going to the "movies" more than ever. Local exhibitors are looking forward to their most prosperous season. Each week exhibitors tell of breaking "last week's record."

Cassinelli Appointed Lieutenant

The American soldier boys at Camp Upton have sent to Dolores Cassinelli, the Italian film artist, a certificate appointing her honorary first lieutenant of the 3rd Battalion, 152nd Depot Brigade of the U. S. Army.

This is in recognition for her entertaining the Camp Upton boys this summer, while many scenes of Leonce Perret's Victory film, "Stars of Glory," were taken near Camp Upton. In a good many scenes of this film the soldiers of Camp Upton took a prominent part.

News Weekly "Grinder" Gets Off Easy

According to reports from Buffalo, N. Y., a conflict that arose over the taking of pictures by the News-Strand cameraman of that city of the floating bulkheaded section of the freighter Van Hise has been straightened out by Washington, according to the announcement by U. S. Attorney Stephen T. Lockwood, to whom representatives of the Shipping Board appealed. Under the announcement from the capital, all war-time rules and acts governing the taking of pictures in harbors are now out of effect, with the exception of the Espionage Act, which contains a brief section covering this. The Espionage Act will remain in effect until final peace is declared, but it is of no avail for prosecution unless the inimical intent of the alleged violator is clearly established. Mr. Lockwood said the official statement he had received coincided with his own view, that Mr. Spang had not sought to do anything antagonistic either to the interests of the nation as a whole or the Shipping Board itself.

"Fit-to-Fight" Picture Shown in Canada

MONTREAL, CAN.—The Committee of Sixteen in Montreal, Quebec, which is leading a crusade against commercialized vice locally, has obtained a print of the "Fit-to-Fight" picture which has been shown at army camps throughout the United States.

Announcement is made that the Mortreal Y. M. C. A. has arranged for the showing of the picture to soldiers at the Red Triangle Hut, Dominion Square, at regular intervals.

The Committee of Sixteen also arranged for a very private presentation of the release December 6. Invitations were extended to five hundred citizens of Montreal and the latter were required to make written application for an admission ticket for the performance. Only males were admitted to this show.

G. F. Perkins of Montreal Visits New York

George F. Perkins, general manager of the Perkins Electric Company, 497 Phillips Square, Montreal, Quebec, Canada, was a visitor in New York.

His company is the exclusive distributor for the Simplex projector throughout the Dominion of Canada, and maintains branches in Toronto, Winnipeg and St. John.

ONE DAY LATE

Owing to Christmas falling on Wednesday, next week's issue of Motion Picture News will be one day late.

Miscellaneous Notes

With Thomas Meighan as her leading man, Gladden James and several full-blooded Comanche Indians in the supporting cast, Norma Talmadge had one of the most exceptional and novel companies on record for the presentation of her Select Picture, "The Heart of Wetona."

The new John Emerson-Anita Loos production for release as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, titled "When the Boys Come Home," has in the cast Clairette Anthony, a Belgian girl of charming personality.

Members of Henry Lehrman's Sunshine Comedies companies arranged an elaborate vaudeville program which was given for the boys in the Knights of Columbus theatre at Camp Kearny, under the auspices of the Motion Picture War Service.

Baby Marie Osborne, the Pathe Diando child star, is perfectly framed in the five-reel program feature, "Dolly's Vacation," which will be released by Pathe on December 29.

The occupation of a North African port by French marines, who proceeded to quell a disturbance by hostile Arabian tribes, is depicted in "Eye for Eye," the seven-act production distributed by Metro, starring the celebrated Russian actress, Mme. Nazimova.

At the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, John Barrymore is nearing the finish of his new Paramount picture, "Here Comes the Bride," which John Stuart Robertson is directing.

In "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, released December 9, Vitagraph presents Earle Williams in the second of his eight star series releases under the new rotary Star Series releasing plan and booking policy.

Rex Beach has engaged Kay Laurell to play the leading feminine role in "The Brand." She was once a featured player in Ziegfeld's Follies.

For the first time in its history Tom Moore's Strand theatre at Washington, D. C., played a second run on a production after it had been featured several weeks before at one of the competing theatres. The production was "My Four Years In Germany," a First National attraction.

One of the leading characters in D. W. Griffith's new photoplay for Artcraft, "The Greatest Thing in Life," released December 8, is a snobbish and fastidious young aristocrat, Edward Livingston, a part played by Robert Harron.

The Lee Children, Jane and Katherine, who are out on the West Coast for the first time, started their first picture at the William Fox Hollywood studios under the direction of Arvid Gillstrom. This newest Lee vehicle is entitled "Smiles," from a story by Ralph H. Spence.

Ten million picture patrons will be reached by the "Saturday Evening Post" campaign to be instituted by Pathe Exchange, Inc., for its forthcoming Pearl White Serial, "The Lightning Raider," to be released early in January.

Submarine scenes are shown in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," a forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., picture version of the drama of the same name. Both interior and exterior views of a submarine are photographed in connection with the action of this feature.

What is said to be one of the most realistic scenes in motion pictures is the one where the Prussian soldiers advance on the French chateau in Kitty Gordon's latest feature drama, "Adele," taken from the novel, "The Nurse's Story," written by Adele Bleneau.

Houdini, the star of the Octagon Films, Inc., serial, "The Master Mystery," produced by B. A. Rolfe Productions, made fifteen personal appearances in conjunction with the initial territorial release showing.

Elsie Ferguson, whose Artcraft picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," was released December 1, is working at the Fifty-Sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in a new production under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Ed Sedgewick, who appears in the two William Fox pictures, "The Land of the Free" and "Why I Would Not Marry," has been commissioned a second lieutenant in the First Field Artillery, U. S. A.

That "Celebes, Malay Archipelago," is one of the oddest spots in the world, so far as the people and the customs go, is shown in No. 22 of the Post Travel Series, released December 8 by Pathe.

William E. Keefe Visits the East in Interest of Griffith Production

William E. Keefe, studio manager and special representative for David Wark Griffith, is in New York, where he will spend several days in the interest of Mr. Griffith's productions. Mr. Keefe did not disclose the purpose of his mission, but it is believed it is in connection with the release of the subject recently filmed by Mr. Griffith under the direction of Provost Marshal General Crowder, and pertaining to the war activities of the government within the United States.

Mr. Keefe will probably be in the East for several weeks. Incidentally it is of interest to know that Mr. Keefe is the first west coast publicity man, having become a member of Mr. Griffith's staff when the producer opened his Los Angeles studios in 1913, and he has continued since that time with Mr. Griffith.

Sydney S. Cohen Buys His Fourth Theatre

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors added another theatre to his chain when he purchased the Trement Theatre at 178th street and Webster avenue, New York.

The Tremont is one of the largest theatres in the Bronx, seating more than a thousand people, and has a high class clientele.

By the acquisition of the Tremont, Mr. Cohen now owns outright four large theatres in New York and has large holdings in other houses. The three others under his immediate control are the Empire and McKinley Square, also in the Bronx, and the North Star on upper Fifth avenue.

Richmond Threatened with Another Epidemic

RICHMOND, VA.—With a daily average of nearly two hundred deaths for the past week, indications are that Richmond will have another "flu" epidemic.

Local health officials, who are advising everybody to avoid all crowds, state that it is a big mistake to assert that the present epidemic is less virulent than that in October. Generally speaking, the disease has shown itself less dangerous to children and to old people than to people in robust health.

C. E. Elliot of Select on West Coast

Clyde E. Elliott has been sent to Los Angeles by the Select Pictures Corporation to act as representative for their special releases, including "The One Woman," produced by Reginald Barker from the Tom Dickson story, "The Cavell Case," and the Thomas H. Ince special production, "The Midnight Patrol."

Mr. Elliot will make his headquarters at the Los Angeles Select office, and work in co-operation with Manager B. E. Loper.

Arrogance in Kansas City

Star, With Its Dominating Circulation Worst Blot on the Story of Newspaper Cooperation

IT is an old adage that competition is the life of trade. It is also equally true that where one newspaper dominates a particular territory that some one is likely to suffer. Why that should affect the motion picture is, from one point of view, a mystery, for one would think that the newspaper that is so far in the lead would seek to continue to maintain that lead by giving it the fullest appeal to its readers.

But that is, unfortunately, not the case in Kansas City, Mo. If you have been at all familiar with the standing of various newspapers you have always heard that the Kansas City Star is one of the greatest of newspapers. We must confess that in years of newspaper training we have never got just a definite idea of why it has continued to maintain that position, but it remains a fact that it is, not only generally, but in its own city and community. It certainly is great in that it has almost a monopoly on the field.

Now while Kansas City has a census population of only 281,911, the Star is rated by the Lord and Thomas newspaper directory as having a daily (afternoon) circulation of 218,927 and on Sunday of 343,666. The morning edition of the same paper, the Times, is given 214,208. Now, of course, all of this circulation is by no means in Kansas City, but it remains a fact that the paper covers the field much better than either of the two other papers. It does carry the bulk of the advertising and motion picture exhibitors feel that they have to advertise in this paper.

There are only two other papers in Kansas City. The Journal is a morning and Sunday, but the circulation is very small compared with that of the Star and Times, for it is rated at only 42,899 during the week and 42,006 on Sunday. The Post is an afternoon daily and also prints a Sunday issue. The daily circulation is given at 145,949 and the Sunday at 127,783. This paper is much more sensational than any of the others, which are unusually conservative, and, according to our information from Kansas City, a considerable portion of this circulation is street sale, and naturally the motion picture exhibitor wants the sort of circulation that goes into the home.

Now with its position as it is the Star, and when we use the word "Star" we refer to both the morning and afternoon papers, absolutely dictates to the advertiser what he can do.

In the first place, to get the advertising rate of 15 cents a line for motion picture theatres the exhibitor must use both papers. As a matter of fact, the picture houses get a little the best of this, for the legitimate advertising rate of the two papers is 50 cents a line.

But with that the exhibitor cannot do the sort of advertising he wants to do. In the first place, there can be no cut or trade mark used in an advertisement unless the space used is at least four inches double column, and even after the theatre has taken larger space he cannot use anything of the black effect in types or borders. While the pages in the reproduction opposite are brought down so small that only the general effect is shown you can see that the exhibitor is not given a chance to do anything at all in the way of display.

If we did not know the situation in Kansas City we would condemn the displays as mighty bad work, but the truth is that the exhibitors are so hemmed in by rules that they have lost all desire to try to do anything original, because they have seldom been allowed to get away with it. And when these regulations by the dominant paper hold them down to such an extent one would not expect the theatres to go to a great deal of trouble and expense for their displays in the papers of lesser circulation.

In the Star there is the same rule followed in the way of news cuts. There is never a half tone used in the news pages of either paper. In the center of the top row on the opposite page the drawing shows the manner in which the paper is "illustrated." The reduction makes this cut look blacker than it really appears in the full sized sheet, for it is a very light line drawing. This ruling prevents the exhibitor from getting a chance to use in the news pages any of the matter supplied by the producers. Scenes pictures are out of the question, because they could not well be re-drawn and have any punch to them.

But there is not much use of worrying about this fact, because the Star gives the theatres NOTHING in the way of cooperation. Sometimes you will find one of these drawn illustrations and about a column of motion picture notes in the Star, but this matter is printed without the slightest reference to the interests of the local theatres. In the issues that we have at hand, daily and Sunday, there is not a reference to motion pictures except in the advertising columns.

Can you imagine a newspaper that is ranked as being one of the leading papers of the country following such a policy?

Can you imagine a newspaper that pretends to represent the interests of its readers ignoring the desires of the thousands of motion picture fans among its readers?

The Kansas City Star is holding its position largely by tradition. In so far as motion pictures is concerned it does not deserve the dominance it holds. It deliberately ignores one of the biggest interests of the country because it has the power to do something.

We do not know a case on record where there are such ARBITRARY policies followed and if the treatment of motion pictures is any guide to the rest of the paper the people of Kansas City would do well to forget the age-old position of the Star and go out and buy a paper with a little less prestige and a little more energy.

A lot of people live on the past and get away with it. The Star appears to be doing so as far as the photoplay is concerned. It is not a representative paper: it is twenty years behind the times so far as amusement is concerned; it is unjust and unfair, in this regard, at least to the public's interests.

And here is another remarkable point about the Kansas City situation:

There are about fifty motion picture houses in Kansas City and there are thirty-one theatres represented in the Star advertising, the highest proportion that we have found in any of the large cities.

There isn't any use to analyze the advertising of the various theatres in the Star, for we have already pointed out that the theatres have no real opportunity. The entire layout of advertising is little more than a directory and within the limits set for them the houses are doing the best that they could.

There are twelve downtown theatres including eight first run. The Liberty is the largest house with a seating capacity of about a thousand. The others are Twelfth Street, 700; Regent, 650; Royal, 750; Doric, 900; Wonderland, 500; Idle Hours, 600 and the Victory 450.

We have printed the "dramatic" page of the Star to show the matter that is given to the legitimate—and nothing to the motion picture.

In the Saturday Star we find the displays of thirty-four theatres, some of the smaller neighborhood houses coming in for that edition. Practically the same advertisements appear in the Times daily.

In its Sunday issue the Post makes a stab at getting out an

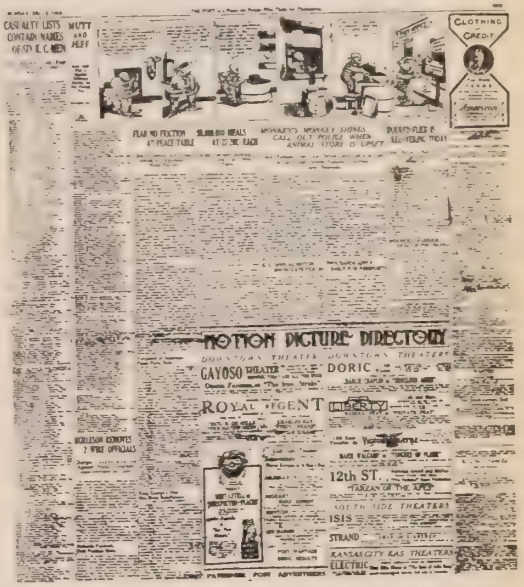
One Newspaper Out of Four Gives Some Hope in Kansas City

At the top left and center are two pages from the Sunday Star and at the right a Saturday page. In the center row are Saturday and Monday pages from the Post. Below at the left is a Saturday page from the Times and then a Sunday and Wednesday page from the Journal. Note the peculiar style of advertising that is used in the Star and the Times.



Only One Paper Sheds Any Ray on Situation in Kansas City

amusement page. It carries more than three columns of motion picture advertising gathered together under the heading "Motion Picture Directory" and carries the displays of sixteen theatres. There are reading notices for those using the larger spaces, but the most of the space is devoted to legitimate and vaudeville attractions under the larger head at the left of the page, but at the right, under "Stage and Screen," the photoplay gets a little the best of it.

This same directory is carried during the week, but in the papers we have examined we have not found any photoplay matter.

But into the Kansas City situation there comes a real ray of hope through the Journal. Under the direction of Miss Lorena M. Wade, the Sunday Journal has a real motion picture page, but we regret to see that it is not supported to any extent by the theatres, only eight of them using any space, and the Liberty being the only one to use any considerable space.

There is not a reading notice on this page. It is all strictly news matter, the sort that will encourage interest in the motion picture and help every theatre in the Kansas City section.

If in addition to this page there were added another, giving a layout on productions at the local theatres and short stories about the current attractions, we would be just about satisfied with the co-operative efforts on the part of the Journal.

Three times a week, on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, under the heading "Film Facts and Fables," the Journal prints brief gossip of the photoplay. There are, apparently only three theatres using the Journal every day in the week, the Royal, Regent and Liberty.

Now, regardless of the fact that the Star has far the larger circulation, they should encourage in every way what this paper is doing, and there is no doubt in our minds that advertising in the Journal will bring the theatres a 1,000 per cent. greater result per reader than in the Star. We would advise the exhibitors of Kansas City not only to encourage the Journal's policy by advertising, but to call attention to the fact that you are advertising in this paper by using slides on your screen.

So far as the situation is concerned the deal that is being given motion pictures by the Star is a disgrace to Kansas City. The cock-sure, dictatorial policy of the Star offers not the slightest hope. It is in the same position, so far as motion pictures are concerned, as the aged lady on getting her first sight of a railway train. It is distinctly the "old lady" of newspapers of the country.

The only hope that the exhibitors have is by showing the owners of the papers that the people are interested in motion pictures by patronizing the paper that gives them some attention. Probably it is useless to make the suggestion, but if the exhibitors of Kansas City would get together and reduce their advertising in the Star to five or ten agate lines each, just enough to carry the bare announcements of their bills and then devote this money to the support of the Journal, we believe that there would be ultimate results.

While the paper in question was probably not so strong as the Star, we know of a case where one of the arrogant, dictatorial sheets was brought around. In this case the managing editor and the city editor and various other employees, who wanted to be considered very "high brows," were fond of openly boasting that if they had their way there would not be a motion picture show in the country. It accepted the motion picture advertising "as a favor" to the exhibitors and gave them nothing. But the showmen had no recourse until another paper with young blood and new ownership came along and started a real motion picture department and gave real co-operation. The "old lady" stood it for a few months. She saw the livelier paper getting the motion picture advertising and herself losing it. And she heard the people talking about the motion picture department of the other and livelier sheet, saw people turning to these departments on the street car, and her employees reported that from their own families came a demand for this matter. Finally she saw the light.

But where she slipped in motion pictures she slipped in everything else, and from that day until now she is distinctly a second in the field, though she has the old age and the "distinguished past" of the Star.

Radical medicines generally work. Possibly it might in the case of the Star.

Display on "Yellow Dog" at Criterion, Atlanta, Ga.

Animated Lobby Display and Youthful Detective Build Business in Atlanta

ONE of the most novel exterior lobby displays ever seen outside a motion picture theatre in Atlanta was that which was devised by James F. Jackson, manager of the Tudor in Peachtree street, the home of Universal photoplays, for the showing of "The Yellow Dog" in Atlanta.

The effect produced outside was directly in line with the picture on the screen—a yellow dog cringing and cowering before Uncle Sam. In Manager Jackson's display Uncle Sam was represented by a huge foot in the act of kicking the figure of a dog. The foot showed the red and white striped trouser leg of Uncle Sam and was operated by an electric motor, striking the dog every five seconds. The figure of the dog represented a yowling cur, painted yellow, with its tail between its legs—an abject coward. A red light was placed in the dog's mouth, and every time the foot came in contact with the dog the light flashed in the dog's mouth.

This device is believed to have been instrumental in drawing many persons into the theatre—persons who would have ordinarily passed by without entering the house. Manager Jackson contends that there are many photoplay goers who determine the merits of the films only by the color and attractiveness of the exterior displays, and that an effectively dressed lobby has a real box-office value. Hence, the big display for "The Yellow Dog."

In connection with the showing of "The Yellow Dog" in Atlanta, it might be mentioned that the Tudor made a special appeal to the juvenile photoplaygoer, and on Saturday before the opening of the picture on Monday, distributed "detective" badges to all youngsters presenting themselves at the theatre. Mr. Jackson had previously advertised that all boys on hand at the theatre at a certain hour would be sworn in a regulation "detectuf," and would be commissioned to investigate all persons antagonistic to Uncle Sam.

On Monday there were more boys at the Tudor theatre than had been there on the opening day of any picture's engagement

How Exhibitor Can Become a "Producer"

By Harold B. Franklin
Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

THE war has given the public a loftier conception of the motion picture than ever before. Now that the war is won, managers should strive to make their theatres more deserving of this public confidence. The motion picture theatre is the great "national" theatre of today. It is an acknowledged "necessity" in the public life of the nation.

One of the big reasons for its popularity is because the motion picture has an appeal for every member of the family. Pictures are the favorite diversion of most folks. Managers should arrange their programs so that there is something that will please both young and old. There is a popular notion that any one can arrange a motion picture program. Motion picture exhibiting is rapidly passing away from "star show" methods.

The successful exhibitor has become as much a "producer" of pictures as a manufacturer. The arrangement of the program, and the proper staging of the picture is the one function that is entirely in the hands of the exhibitor. It is here that he distinguishes his entertainment from the other fellows. Careful staging, playing up the details, music that syncronizes with the action of the public, attention to lighting, all help to enhance the production. The artistic side of the manager's tastes and refinements finds expression here. The booking of the picture is really the easiest thing the exhibitor can do.

In arranging the program at Shea's Hippodrome we strive to have something on the program that will appeal to every possible taste. We try to keep our entertainment cheerful and inspiring. We pick our program just as an editor picks his make-up for a magazine. Variety, diversity of program is what counts. And quality is the watchword.

The successful exhibitor must know what a large portion of the public wants—study and observation is necessary to achieve this knowledge. The story quality of pictures naturally has different appeal. A "good" story generally appeals to all. A woman's natural instinct is towards romance, while a man prefers mystery and adventure. Comedy appeals to everyone. What does the public demand of a picture? It must have something to tell and it must be well told. The most successful story mirrors life. Most of our inspired literature has been taken from actual incidents that have happened. Suggestive pictures cannot find a place on the screen of the theatre that expects to prosper.

Franklin stage setting marking the Hun surrender

There cannot be any set rules as to what a program should consist of. It depends entirely on the class of theatre you run. First discover what class of people you play to—then cater to them.

Good music appeals to every member of the family—neither too classical nor too popular. Give them some of each. Haunting melodies, good marches, beautiful lyrics! Good music is always a source of pleasure. It is not necessary to have a great symphony orchestra to produce good music—a piano well played is better than a big orchestra out of tune.

The comfort of your patrons is a big subject. The future of your theatre depends entirely on what the public impression is of your theatre. Service is the cheapest thing you can give, yet it is most important. Every thoughtful service strengthens the foundation of your success.

Novelties and stage settings give the "exhibitor" unlimited scopes for his talents. It is here that the more prominent theatres of the country have developed an "artistic touch," that seldom misses fire. This part of the motion picture theatre program is "still in its infancy." Great development can be expected here. It binds itself to color, music, singing and is looked for with interest by every class of patron. It is the atmosphere you surround your picture with that give it "individuality."

Taste! The motion picture theatre must be run with good judgment and taste. No one would willingly appear at a disadvantage indoors. Make your theatre inviting and restful. Don't overlook the many little details that delight the eye.

Your Idea and Ours

THIS quarter page of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, O., certainly has the distinction of being entirely different from any other that we have seen. The corset with an inset of the picture of Mabel Normand, and then her name, and the title of the picture will get the attention at the first opening of the paper.

The general style of advertising of the Cleveland papers is to use some striking display and then merely announce the star and the picture, the selling argument being omitted. We believe that this would have been bettered as a business puller if there has been a few lines telling the character of the picture. Some people may get a wrong impression merely from the picture of a corset. But as a teaser stunt it is mighty hard to beat because most of those who see this will take the trouble to come to the theatre to find out what it is all about.

Get the Christmas spirit now and keep it all the year in the courtesy of your theatre.

AFTER the somewhat rough things that we had to say about St. Louis theatres' advertising in general we are mighty glad to see that the Royal is proving an exception to the rule by using larger space than the others and seeking to get something worth while into the displays.

This one is five inches across three columns and the person who wrote this has been studying the picture and is really trying to put the message over to the public. Some of the lines that were suggested in our Special Service Section on this picture have been used. Directly under the cut the writer has taken care to call attention to some of the other big successes in which Miss Phillips has appeared.

We would like to have seen a more striking cut of the star used, preferably one as she appears in the picture. But the display, at that, shows great progress as compared with the other St. Louis theatres who rarely use a cut no matter how big the attraction is and depend merely upon the name of the star and the title of the picture to get the people to the theatre.

WHAT a good looking cut of a pretty woman will do for an advertisement. the pulling power that it will give, is shown by this nine-inch three-column display of the Majestic, Topeka, Kan. Here the name of the star and title of the picture are used in only 14 point type, with the name of the author in 10 point bold and the selling talk in 10 point light. Now we would like to have seen the name of the star in somewhat larger type than was used, and the display could have been much improved by taking only another inch of space and getting these two lines sufficiently strong.

But it was a great deal better to have done it this way than to have attempted to crowd a lot of matter into the space between the cut and the border. As it is the pretty picture gets the eye and one will read the matter even if it is in comparatively small type. The man who discounts the worth of attractive cuts in motion picture advertising is several years behind.

WE have referred a number of times in these columns that Casino theatre, Chicago, is a mighty good advertiser. Most of the specimens we have printed have been in small space on account of the exceedingly high rate for advertising in Chicago and because there are a number of media to be used. But this theatre has solved the problem of getting a punch in a few inches as we have shown you several times.

But here is a case where the Casino has used large space for a Chicago theatre—and in advertising a serial. The display which consists largely of the same Universal advertising as appeared in the trade papers occupies 7¼ inches, double column and is bound to attract attention. The reading matter takes one back to his boyhood days when he got the greatest of all his thrills when the circus came to town. Then it goes ahead to tell that this is a real circus picture with all the thrills.

For some reason there has been a feeling on the part of some exhibitors that it does not pay to advertise serials, and most exhibitors book the serials because they believe them sure money and then force the pictures to put themselves over by their own power. We are certain that every exhibitor would make more money with these chaptered stories if he gave them a big send off. The Casino is proving the value of advertising by devoting more space to "The Lure of the Circus" than it usually does to a feature. We believe it is right.

The tail may not wag the dog, but "little things" jar a lot of theatres.

HERE is a remarkably fine example of the "personal guarantee" advertisement, and Max Strean, owner of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., reports that it attracted more attention than any display that he had used in a long time. And we don't doubt it for this is all carried out in splendid taste. The theatre itself does not use any adjectives. It simply calls your attention to the definition that Webster gives of the word "special" and let's him use the adjectives. Mighty good way to put a thing.

We also like the quotations at the top from the owner and the manager of the house. Now you will note that the theatre is made the dominant thing in this display, and quite properly because the theatre itself is made responsible for the statements. The arrangement has the effect of going still further and carrying the message: "The Majestic is always a theatre showing the best, but here is one so unusually good that we don't want any of our friends to miss it."

Now just a word. The guarantee style of advertising is good once in a while, but be mighty sure that you have a real special before you try it. And repeated use of the same plan will destroy its value.

Speeding a show will also add momentum to the parting patron.

NATURALLY you have to take into consideration the character of the city in which your theatre is located in deciding on the style of your advertising. Now Lowell, Mass., is a manufacturing city and the biggest portion of the population is working people. Another thing is that theatre patrons have to be appealed to there as getting a great deal for their money, that being the reason why double bills are the vogue there. Another thing to be considered is that the writer of the displays for the Crown tells us that it is almost impossible for him to get any cuts from his exchanges and that he has to rely on type effects.

Even with these things considered we distinctly do not like the heavy rule effects and the use of the black type all the way through. We don't believe that it impresses half as much as would an artistic display, no matter if most of the patrons work for "daily wages" instead of an "annual salary." And we believe that the use of adjectives weakens, rather than adds to the appeal. Also, the printers have been very careless and there are errors in the names of two or the three players mentioned.

Let's also celebrate Christmas as the birth of your real progressiveness.

THIS ten-inch five-column display of the Playhouse, Wilmington, Del., has too much of the "jumpy" effect about it. In other words the eye is kept traveling about from one set of type to another without getting any consecutive selling argument. We believe that all advertising should have the straight away effect, that one thing should get the eye and then lead the reader to the next, AFTER he has read the first. Certainly this is not the case here. Certainly there can be no reason for the ruled in connection with the box on "Evidence." Straight type without any rules of any sort would have much better connected the line "Wanted for Murder" with the title of the picture.

However, there is one splendid thing about this display and that is the way that the comedy is brought out with the line "Should the testimony become too tense," and then the announcement of the Arbuckle picture. We would, however, have carried the matter about the comedy in a different style type from that used through the most of the advertisement—Cheltenham bold. It would have set this off as more distinctly talk about a different picture, while the effect as at present is confusing.

ALTHOUGH it does consume a lot of space, we are printing this eighteen-inch three-column display of the Strand, Omaha, because it represents one of the best plans of advertising two attractions that we have seen. And it is very simple. The Arbuckle comedy is advertised with black on white and the arrangement is just reversed in case of the Mary Pickford picture. The cuts have been intelligently used and there is just enough of the selling campaign to be in the right proportion.

Note that reference is made to Bill Hart and Doug Fairbanks in the display on "The Sheriff," and this is done in a way that is calculated to get every admirer of the two more strenuous players into the theatre. The talk on the Pickford picture is equally good and we are especially pleased with the line, following the reference to the old millionaire which says "No, no. You're wrong, she don't marry him."

Another thing that we like about the display is that the name of the theatre is not sacrificed for anything else. It is still kept the most prominent thing about the entire arrangement. Never sacrifice your theatre for anything.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

AT both the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres the start of the Red Cross membership drive was given momentum by the picture displays that were made. It was fitting that at the Rivoli there should be the first presentation of "The Greatest Gift," the scenario for which was written by Hamish McLaurin, who has been the publicity director for Mr. Rothapfel since the opening of the Rialto and up to the time that he entered his duties with the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross a few months ago.

Before he left here on his tour across the country Mr. Rothapfel left orders that this picture, written by his former aide be given the best of presentations, and it certainly has been. Not only is there a special musical number with one of the brilliant Wenger settings, but there is a musical score prepared just as carefully as if the picture were a seven-reel special. And at the Rialto the Red Cross punch is put over effectively through the arrangement of the Animated. It is done so that the call for giving is not a wring at the heart, but a message that brings cheers.

Specialization has come to motion picture theatres of the first class. Possibly most of us know that we should add something of the holiday cheer around Christmas time and that we should get in the patriotic stuff when the Fourth rolls around, but there are too many houses that do not keep themselves up to the minute on the live events of the day. And there is one thing that it is well to remember. The big news is going to die down with the signing of peace. We won't have these celebrations to record or the thrill of victory to picture. We are going to have to make more of the way that we record the lesser things.

There are lots of ways in which you can keep your theatre up to the world ticker. Watch for the chances. Don't pass over any of them. And don't make them mere records, but appeals that get to the heart—not obvious things, but the sort that leave a happy impression while they are performing their mission.

All of the lights are red and the orchestra bathed in the glow for the brilliant overture, "Sakuntala," at the Rialto this week. It is a selection that tells of the love affair of a king and a nymph and how a powerful priest causes her to lose the ring by which she is to make the king recognize her. But in the end the ring is recovered through a fisherman and then all his happiness. And as this part of the story is unfolded in the music the lights come up to gold with the orchestra flooded with brilliance with the final peal.

Then follow pictures of "Versailles," where the peace conference will be held. Though these are old they have been retitled so as to give them the today appeal, with the result that they got great applause at the end. The first, second and fourth of the "Trianon Suite" are used.

Comes William Fedor, 'cellist of the Rialto orchestra, playing a Spanish dance, with the lights red in tone and the spot upon him, with the rest of the orchestra in darkness.

Rialto Animated opens with Gaumont pictures of the final parade of 35,000 men at Camp Funston and for these fine shots of the marching soldiers. "Entrance of the Guard" march is used to the accompaniment of great applause. Then follow Hearst-Pathe pictures of the arrival of wounded soldiers in New York. For the most of this "When You Come Back" is played by the full orchestra, but there is a scene where a Red Cross girl is shown playing a piano on shipboard and here the orchestra dims down until the pianist alone is playing.

Immediately after this comes the Red Cross appeal, a reproduction of the poster, "I am the Red Cross" and then with the warning "Join." Following this comes a Gaumont picture telling us that a busy executive is taking his time off to feed the pigeons, but judging from the sign on the windows this was rather an advertisement for the brand of pictures. During these two numbers "Kentucky Dream" is played. Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures showing the sultan and his people at Rabat, Morocco, celebrating the victory of the Allies, and here we get "March Arabe," which changes to "Japanese Hymn" with Gaumont pictures of the visit of the Jap prince.

Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of the surrender of the German fleet. These are practically the same as those of the same event that are included in the Official War Review and shown at the Rivoli this week. There are some striking views of the big German fleet as it sails in to its ignominious doom and then of the submarines. It is strange to watch the audiences with these pictures. As the vessels come into view a flag is seen, but it is hard to determine what the emblem. But the audiences are taking no chances and they remain silent, and properly so because the flag proves to be German. And then there is another close-up of a crew, and for the moment one cannot tell their nationality. There were a few stray handclaps, for one fellow wore a uniform near American, but when the conviction comes that they are Germans there follow hisses which serve to even up for the mistaken applause. "War March" is used up to the time that the title tells us that these are types of the German battleships that surrendered and here we have "March to the Gallows," and never has there been a more timely selection. We wish that the audience could have known the title; it would have cheered the more madly.

Gaumont then shows us pictures of the German supergun being viewed by the crowds in Paris, and then come pictures of "Our Boys in France," under the subtitle of "Pushing on to Potsdam." These get great applause all the way through, but when the picture tells us that they advance in open formation "because no one trusts the Hun," there is a regular outburst. And at the end when Foch and Pershing are shown shaking hands—well, there were never 2,500 people who could make no more ever drawn together than there were the Sunday afternoon when we witnessed the event. "To Victory" is used for this smashing ending of the Animated.

With the lights all in red except for purple on the orchestra, Vincente Ballester then sings "And Would Thou Thus?" from "The Masked Ball."

"Heloise" is the theme for the feature, William S. Hart in "Bucking Broadway," which is first introduced when the baggageman spies "Sands" in his car and then comes back with Hart, seeing the story in the newspaper of the guardian needed for Larry Harrington. It is not used again until the very end, practically all of the music being confined to the Rothapfel numbered selections. In this picture Mr. Hart rather gives away the fact that he is not altogether a rough and ready Westerner. He is supposed to have his first introduction to a silk hat and to be eager to get rid of same, yet unconsciously he shows that he knows just how to handle it, even getting down to giving it the w. k. sleeve rub.

Selections from "Princess Pat," played by the orchestra follow, and then comes a bunch of mirth with the Mack Sennett comedy, "Hide and Seek Detectives." Here are the music selections in the order they are used: "Paddle Addle," "Who's Who," "Kangaroo Hop," "Hy Sine," "Song d'Ete," "The Roaring Lion," "Sinbad," "The Star Gazer," "Peter Piper,"

YES, THEY HURT

But It is Hard to Ask People to Leave the Theatre

JUST the other day the problem was put up to us by a visiting manager as to what he should do with people who "politely" misbehave in the theatre, the talkers and the gigglers. It's a hard problem to decide. When the manager is spending money to get people in his house it is pretty tough to ask them to leave.

For instance, the other night we sat in one of the leading houses. During a portion of a picture paying a tribute to the Red Cross a couple of young women began to "act smart," to talk loud and to laugh when there wasn't the slightest thing to stir their mirth. They disgusted everyone who sat around them, but they belonged to the class of "smart alecs" who thought that they were either very funny or showing their unusual intellectuality.

The manager who invites such people as these to either keep quiet or leave his theatre will lose nothing in the long run. They may never come back again, but the mass of your patrons come to the theatre to enjoy your show and not to see fools "show off."

Rialto and Rivoli

and "Song d'Ete." Yes, they go away laughing and every fellow who walked out into that cold Sunday rain was chuckling.

Lighting effects continue to play an important part in the rendition of the overtures at the Rivoli since the new settings, which give such wonderful opportunities, have been installed. With the rendition of "Zampa" this week the general effects are in gold, with the stage curtain in green and a suggestion of pink showing at the top around the curtain effects, the color blending into the gold with rare beauty.

Robert C. Bruce, who has set a new mark in scenic pictures with his releases for Educational, has one of his best being shown this week. The two actors in this are the Great Dane, who is now familiar to most motion picture goers, and the "Whositt," which turns out to be a terrier much in need of a hair cut. We are told at the start that the Great Dane is a dog who knows no master and we are shown a number of scenes in which he appears, and after a while he scents the fact that he is not alone in the snowy wilderness, and then we have a few shots of the "Whositt" rolling in the snow. Of course these dogs are merely accompaniment to the wonderful views that are shown, but soon the audience is applauding the animals, who prove splendid actors. "How do they make them keep so still?" and "Oh, isn't that just too cunning," are samples of the remarks that come from the women, especially with the close-ups. And these dogs are really better actors than a lot of people who get real money for showing themselves on the screen. There are masterpieces of photography when the animals are shown en silhouette on the top of the snow covered mountain and there is a great volume of applause called forth. The picture gets more applause at the end than most features.

"Cherry Duet" from "L'Amico Fritz"—not one of the German sort, but a creation of Mascagni—is the first vocal number and for this John Wenger has one of his artistic settings. With the dome in blue and the sides blue slightly striped with pink, the orchestra plays a few bars before the curtain parts, revealing a cherry tree loaded with fruit, a village in the distance, and a dead tree at the right. Miss Annie Rossner is on a stepladder picking the fruit and singing to Carols Mejia, and then the duet follows with the two finally coming forward to the front of the stage and then strolling off, with the curtains closing after a few notes behind the scene.

Rivoli Animated is this week confined to Official War Review No. 26, which first shows some scenes in the fighting around St. Quentin. First we have pictures of the anti-aircraft guns firing and we see a German observation balloon coming down in smoke. Then we have pictures of the advancing soldiers and as the Americans are recognized there is a great wave of applause. Then we have pictures of the men going forward with the tanks, and finally the Canadians entering the burning city. "Ruy Blas" is played through these pictures.

Then the scene changes to Italy and we have pictures of the heroic Arditi in review, preceded by an exhibition of liquid fire, and then the men moving forward at double time to the crashing music of the Italian national march. With the opening of the pictures showing the surrender of the German fleet we have "Pomp and Circumstance," used through the scenes showing the "Queen Elizabeth," and then the double row of Allied ships with the Germans steaming between them. With the first of the German submarines the music changes to "Coriolanus"—and a storm of hisses from the audience. As there flashes on the screen a view of the cheering sailors the orchestra leaps into "Rule Britannia," which continues to the end, when the audience pays a tribute of the greatest enthusiasm to the waving British flag.

With a pale blue light on the stage and no music from the orchestra the Rialto quartet then scores one of the hits of a triumphant bill with its rendition of a double number, "Winter Song" and Jerusalem Mornin'."

Wealth of the musical library of the Rothapfel houses and the genius of Dr. Riesenfeld are again shown in the arrangement of the score for the feature, Douglas Fairbanks in "Arizona," in which the strenuous actor gives us an entirely different version of the play as we saw it on the speaking stage years ago. Practically the whole music is confined to the numbered selections.

Then, with the quartet seated in the orchestra, we have "Rose of No Man's Land" rendered, and after the first verse the curtains part and reveal Miss Agnes Tait, who posed for the original of the poster, "The Greatest Mother in the World," in the same pose, with the setting the quaint church scene that has been used before at the Rivoli. The audience bursts into applause and at the end the screen curtain comes down and "The Greatest Gift" starts. Then the orchestra takes up "Rose of No Man's Land," while for the scenes in Egypt we have "Lakme" used, and then when the change comes to Buddha we get "Desert" with the organ carrying the music for the opening of the story of the Good Samaritan. Then follows the scenes of the various blessings, Straus's "Adagio" being largely used. But the crash comes with the endorsement of the three chief figures of the war. As the picture of Gen. Foch and his message are thrown on the screen we have the last strain of "Pere de la Victoire," and then with Gen. Pershing "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and finally with the appeal of the President one chorus from "Rose of No Man's Land," which can scarcely be heard for the applause. It is a most effective appeal, especially with such a music setting.

After the orchestra has rendered Percy Grainger's "Dance Tune," we have a screaming Fox Mutt and Jeff comedy in "The Draft Board," about as crazy a thing as well could be imagined, and the audience was soon yelling in its delight. "Our Old Town Pump," "Anvil Chorus," "Old Town Pump" repeated, "Hello Wisconsin" and "Make Way" are the selections. They are two mighty good presentations, but music has a lot to do with them. And one thing that we like about them is that there is not a note of sadness in them, if we except the stirring appeal of the Red Cross film.

They are bills that bring hundred per cent AMUSEMENT.

More than that, these two bills form splendid arrangements for the holiday season. It is going to be this year a season of greater cheer than ever, now that the end of the fighting has come in Europe and people will want to see that same spirit reflected in your programs. Rialto and Rivoli show you how to keep the "sad stuff" out.

How the Bijou theatre, Boston, advertised its Chaplin week

Comedian and His Bride Featured in Chaplin Week at Boston

"CHAPLIN WEEK" has just been featured with great success by the Bijou theatre, Boston. Attendance is reported as unusually good as the result of the clever advertising plan and the arrangement of the program.

On Monday and Tuesday, December 16 and 17, the comedian was seen in "A Dog's Life," the first of his "million dollar pictures," and Mae Murray in "Her Body in Bond." This was followed by the showing of Mrs. Charles Chaplin (Mildred Harris) in "Borrowed Clothes," Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" and a William S. Hart production.

In addition to the regular newspaper advertising, several thousand post cards announcing the Chaplin Week plan were sent out.

Jewel Productions reports that the idea of a Mrs. Chaplin Week has been carried out with great success by a number of eastern theatres. There are now available four productions with Mildred Harris, the comedian's bride, as the star—"The Price of a Good Time," "The Doctor and the Woman," "For Husbands Only" and "Borrowed Clothes."

Iowa Small City Manager Tells Exploitation Ideas That He Has Put Over for Good Business

IF there were a thousand smaller city managers like George D. Bickford, who directs the destinies of the Graham theatre, Washington, Iowa, writing to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS regularly about the things that they are doing, the presentation of pictures outside of the larger centers would quickly be elevated a hundred per cent.

Mr. Bickford writes: "I am greatly interested in the work of the small town exhibitor because I am one myself. I am running an 800-seat theatre in a town of 4,500, and I wouldn't trade places for a house in New York City." And that statement tells the spirit that governs the Graham theatre. He makes himself a part of the city, and we wouldn't be afraid to make the guess that the people of Washington, Iowa, are mighty proud of this house.

Mr. Bickford has put his own story so well that we are going to print his letter as it comes to us. It is full of sound advice.

"After reading what other exhibitors are doing in the small towns through the columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in the way of helping the small town exhibitor, I feel at liberty in writing the NEWS of just two little stunts that I find are quite profitable, and as far as publicity obtained from them, I can truthfully say there is no end to it.

"One stunt that can be worked not only in smaller towns, but larger ones as well, is the small placard sign.

"I had twenty-five cards, 7 x 12 inches, printed up with a very simple group of words, that through natural instinct make all that read them inquire about them. The cards read:

> Go to the "Movies"
> ——tonight
> Ask——
> Which One?

"Now there are but two picture houses in this town. I placed these cards in the business houses around town, and in return for a good position in their business places I gave a few complimentaries, which they accepted gratefully.

"Nine persons out of ten that read the card will ask the proprietor (if they are strangers) which is the better picture house. Naturally Mr. Proprietor will give you the boost. If they are not strangers they will ask which showman or exhibitor put out these cards. Of course, the hotel man, restaurant man, or whatever the proprietor may be, will mention your name, or the name of your theatre.

"Instinct will cause the average stranger to watch for ads in the papers, or at least recognize the name of your theatre. This little stunt is the least expensive and the most effective I have yet tried.

"Another idea which any exhibitor may work to a perfection is the exhibitor's OWN WEEKLY NEWSPAPER. The first thought the reader will give this idea is the expense that it must incur to carry on such a good method of advertising. Well, in the first place, it will not cost the exhibitor one cent, except his time. A convenient size for your weekly is a half sheet, or better still a sheet 18 x 22 inches.

"One of your newspapers will gladly quote you prices on getting this out for you each week. At the most it would not exceed $20 per three thousand. In this city I get them for $15 for three thousand. Now for contents, you have a whole page to tell probably 5,000 people what you have at your theatre for the entire week. Have them delivered by your bill-boys early Saturday mornings, so as to be in the homes over Sunday. You can absolutely make fans out of people who never thought of attending a 'movie.'

"Solicit advertising for your paper from the merchants of your town. They will all be only too glad to advertise in three thousand homes, or whatever the number may be, for perhaps two dollars, or three, according, of course, to the size of the ads. Naturally Christmas week you must have a SPECIAL EDITION.

"This little stunt will make you the exhibitor of your town. You will feel independent as far as being the advertiser, and the results, you may be sure, will be to your greatest satisfaction."

Traveling Motion Picture Show Scores a Success in the Northwest

REMINDFUL of the early days of the motion picture when "The Great Train Robbery" was being exhibited by carnival companies, the northwest section has been enjoying for the past four seasons a traveling motion picture show.

This is conducted by Harry G. Waldron, formerly an employee of the Universal Minneapolis exchange, who carries his entire outfit, as well as posters in a motor car, visiting only towns where there are no regular motion picture theatres. He makes it a point to use only big pictures, for which the great demand has already been created.

Mr. Waldron has had unusual success with his traveling show and during the past summer and fall he has, despite health conditions and the war, made a bigger success with "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" than he previously did with "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Spoilers."

Mr. Waldron has continued his showing in the small country towns up until December, when it became so cold that he had to abandon his outdoor showing.

Newman and Ralph Ruffner Visitors in New York

Frank L. Newman, president and manager of the Royal and Regent theatres, Kansas City, spent the past week in New York with his architect completing contracts for his splendid new million-dollar house which will be opened early in the new year.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Butte, Mont., was another member of the Advisory Board among the visitors.

Roth Urges All Exhibitors to Speak Out

By Eugene H. Roth

Managing Director, California and Portola Theatres, San Francisco

MR. SAMUEL GOLDFISH. Our thanks for his article appearing in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of November 30. I am flattered that my few remarks published in your number of November 16 should have called for a reply from so august a source. It now seems that the splendid efforts of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are going to be productive of gratifying results for the entire industry, and that those who are in a position to accomplish the results that we all hope for, are being stimulated by your efforts. Mr. Goldfish prefaces his reply with the query:

"I wonder how many exhibitors there are in the United States who really know what kind of stories, scenarios and productions the audience—the public—really like and desire to see on the screen?"

The answer to this query as it suggests itself to me will carry with it not only a surprise to the questioner, but possibly some clarifying of the present situation. It is my opinion that a modest estimate would be that at least half of the exhibitors in the United States have a pretty shrewd notion of what manner and sort of stories, scenarios and productions their audiences demand, and this knowledge has come to them from sources that are numerous and are not confined to the daily balance sheet. Practically every exhibitor in the great cities and in the small country places are endeavoring with daily regularity to ascertain what the public's demands are, and it will be necessary for each and every one of them to plug up their ears if they are not to hear abundant comments from their patrons, and these patrons, as we all know, have by their constant attendance at moving picture shows been educated to a degress that permit them to claim that their judgment has some discernment.

Asks Exhibitors to Reply

Mr. Goldfish's article has left an opening for the exhibitor to reply to him. Ordinarily it would have been a bit of a presumption for most of us in the motion picture industry to have dared to suggest a definite plan of action to him, but his article permits us to state what in our opinion the public demands and what our knowledge of the public is, and the writer sincerely hopes that all exhibitors who are steadfast of purpose and who are striving to make their theatres the success that the industry warrants, will, now that the opening has been given them, grasp the opportunity to express their views and offer suggestions.

The Motion Picture News has by its broad course of conduct clearly indicated that it at all times welcomes suggestions from no matter how obscure a source, and I am sure that its columns will be at the disposal of all of us.

It must be borne in mind that the producer and the exhibitor have a common interest. The one is indispensable to the other. It therefore follows inevitably that any efforts for the betterment of the industry must be of a friendly and co-operative nature, and that the suggestions must be considered as sincere, and not fault-finding.

Eugene H. Roth

Who Should Know?

Who is in a better position to suggest to the producer what the public does not want than the individual who is in daily contact with the millions who are viewing his product? Would the manufacturer resent the retailer merchant's telling him what character of fashions his trade will not purchase? A designer with an automobile model would necessarily curtail or expand his product depending upon the demand of the consumer. So, too, with the exhibitor of motion pictures. It seems hardly necessary to justify the exhibitor's right to do so. I mean to state directly that when the exhibitor says what the public do not want, the individual who is in close contact with the public is speaking for that public to the producer.

I think that if Mr. Goldfish would more carefully analyze my article he would discern therein an unbiased version of a consistent exhibitor's ideas. My article was qualified by the following statement:

"I wish I were able to advise the producer, but that is a branch in itself, and suggestions only can be made by the exhibitor which may guide the producers," etc.

What the Public Wants

Consistently, and in line with that statement, I reiterate that as an exhibitor my experience has taught me that the public want good, wholesome stories, with a heart interest and appeal. It is my conviction that this statement can be made with equal force by the vast majority of other exhibitors, who, by a process of exclusion, would unanimously state that they do not want fairy tales, biblical pictures, costume pictures, licentious pictures, and I might add that the sudden termination of the war makes it necessary to add war pictures to this group.

At the same time I fully realize and am anxious to admit that there are a number of pictures of this last type which have been produced, and that the producer is justified in expecting the co-operation of the exhibitor, and this for the reason that many of these productions were undertaken for the purpose of meeting the demands of the exhibitors who were clamoring for this character of product during the period of the war. As to this character of product, I only desire to be understood as saying that I think it would be ill-advised at this time to start the making of any other or further war pictures.

Of course, Mr. Goldfish does not take direct issue with me on any of the above notions, but he does state that I do not go far enough. I am an exhibitor. Don't you think that Mr. Goldfish would resent my handing him a scenario?

Must See the Light

There can be no doubt but that Mr. Goldfish is subject to many complaints of the exhibitors, or, as he phrases it, "the endless bias of exhibitors." Yes, exhibitors are biased, especially in favor of good pictures. Also, like all other human beings, of any particular group or class, there are in the vast army of exhibitors some who are shortsighted and some what have their shortcomings. This portion of our fraternity must be made to see the light, and it does seem to me that we are in a measure justified in asking that the producers who have a broader and keener view help with all the strength that they have in guiding these exhibitors to the road of understanding and the haven of a better and higher aim.

Mr. Goldfish writes glibly of his encouragement of the best literary efforts on the part of the scenario writers, but he tells us that his pictures are produced in the most modern and up-to-date studio plants; that his stars are the brightest in the firmament, his directors the most highly developed in the industry, and his productions the last word in artistic development. In the next breath we learn that a thousand dollars is the standard price for a creditable scenario to a writer. Can anyone say that the proportion is maintained? The production and salaries costs runs into the tens of thousands. The vehicle for their showing is maximized as one thousand. To be a bit personal, but just for a moment, does Mr. Goldfish imagine that he could purchase a scenario from such a capable writer as Mr. Rex Beach for the price of one thousand dollars?

What He Suggests

I am not endeavoring to reconstruct the producing end of this industry, but I do maintain that it would be vastly better for all of the interests concerned if the bigger and better producers would purchase plays, scenarios or books for prices ranging from three thousand to ten thousand dollars, and, as a result of this investment and effort, secures the very foundation for a successful picture, rather than to pay any sum ranging from nothing to one thousand dollars for the background of a picture, which in most instances portrays on the screen not only characters that are not known to the public mind, but are so poorly developed that they can never make an impression on the public mind. A successful spoken drama has the advantage of already having produced an impression on the public mind, lest a star misconstrue what I say, I hope to make it clear that it is my notion that the moving picture star is as capable of portraying any character as is the star of the spoken drama, but that the added advantage lies in the fact that the successful spoken drama has a big past, thousands spent on an advertising campaign, and in already achieved and demonstrated nation-wide popularity.

It is a matter of much concern to me, and I keenly regret that Mr. Goldfish has become wearied and exasperated with the "monotonous cry that the producers do not encourage authors," etc. We are producing pictures with the hope of realizing a profit for ourselves by so doing, and the very moment any individual of originality or novelty would offer a scenario properly produced, we would welcome it, encourage it and pay him for it. Mr. Goldfish must know this. His experience must have taught him that the vast number of popular magazines in the United States vie with one another and offer fabulous prices for the story, be it short or long, that will attract. I fail to see that Mr. Goldfish has offered one single suggestion that calls for the statement that the exhibitor's view on the writer's problems are absurd. We do not want to put any shackles on the writers, but they are no more privileged than is any one else to go outside of acceptable subjects for the meat of their scenarios.

It is not my purpose to discuss "Baby Mine," or "Nearly Married." I did not play them. Exhibitors who have are qualified to voice their opinion and expressions. It is evident that if Mr. Goldfish is basing his notion of all exhibitors, or the majority of them, on the type of exhibitor he mentions, which exhibitor said: "Why, I have never even heard of her (meaning Madge Kennedy)," then it is a waste of time to even engage in any discussion. But Mr. Goldfish must admit that his big rental does not come from that type of exhibitor, and I cannot for one moment believe that the genuine and legitimate exhibitor could ever make the statement that he had "never heard of Madge Kennedy."

Tribute to Rothapfel

Our industry as a whole is under a tremendous obligation to Mr. Samuel Rothapfel, whose extraordinary insight and ability have accomplished more for the advancement of the exhibition of pictures than that of any other individual member of the craft. Mr. Rothapfel is always anxious to offer his patrons the best pictures, but he insures his customers pleasure by magnificently arranging musical offerings of the highest standard, and other notable features of his program aid materially any picture, and add extraordinarily to a weak feature. Exhibitors the country over modeling their features along the lines thus suggested, are not only standardizing, but always elevating the motion picture industry, and these same exhibitors have invested in their plants enormous sums of money, years of present, and the hopes of years of future effort, and it would seem to me that this in a measure justifies and gives them the right to at least state what they consider the public does not want.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Goldfish, and more especially so when he states his dissatisfaction with a large number of exhibitors who, individually or in concert, seem to take the position that they hope to starve the producer of pictures. But that is another story. It was my aim in the article to which Mr. Goldfish did me the compliment of replying to touch upon other and different aspects of the motion picture problem. It is my hope that the notions contained herein will be taken in the spirit in which they are intended.

The motion picture industry has absorbed all of my time for the past eight years. It is my hope that all of whatever years are left to me can be devoted to work in the industry. I am at all times ready to serve the industry in any capacity, with the object only of co-operation, and with the sole purpose of raising the standards in all of its many activities.

AN INVITATION FROM ONE OF OUR MEMBERS

You Exhibitors All Are Invited Into This Discussion

DURING the "closed season" we invited a number of the members of the Advisory Board to tell us what were the greatest needs of the industry, what better things could be done. Under the heading "Check Up Now, Everybody," we published an article from Mr. Roth in the November 16 issue in which he urged manufacturers and exhibitors alike to take stock of themselves and took occasion to point out the sort of stories that were needed.

This drew a reply from Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, in which he asked how many exhibitors of the country really knew what sort of pictures their audiences want. If you haven't read his article dig out the November 30 issue of the NEWS and read it.

Now comes back Mr. Roth clarifying and making stronger the points in his original letter. EVERY LINE OF THIS IS VITAL TO YOU AS AN EXHIBITOR.

We want to call attention to one paragraph in this article in which Mr. Roth says:

"The MOTION PICTURE NEWS has, by its broad course of conduct, clearly indicated that it at all times welcomes suggestions from no matter how obscure a source, and I am sure that its columns will be at the disposal of all of us."

You are right, Mr. Roth, these pages of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau are just what they are labelled—the exhibitors' own department, for, by and of the exhibitor.

We would like to hear from you all.

HOLIDAY SPIRIT

A Little Touch of It in Your Theatre is Good Advertising

THIS issue will reach the exhibitors just before the holidays. How many of you are planning to get something of the holiday spirit into your bill during that week? It is not what lavish things that you do, but merely a question of absorbing something of Christmas time.

Everything that you do out of the ordinary causes word of mouth advertising, and that is the sort that you cannot buy for mere money. And it makes the people think that your theatre is up to the minute and taking advantage of every opportunity.

Plan something "different." It need not be big. But do something that you have not done before. And then write us about it so that in these pages these good ideas of showmen everywhere will be useful on another Christmas to those who have not had the initiative to plan for themselves.

Phonographs Boost Business for "My Cousin" in Omaha

When "My Cousin," the first of the Caruso pictures, was shown at the new Rialto theatre, Omaha, Manager H. M. Thomas used a giant phonograph behind the scenes and played renditions of Caruso records to the great delight of his audiences. Music from "I Pagliacci" was played by the splendid orchestra.

Prize Offers Arouse New Interest in House Program

Manager Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, came to the conclusion that he was not getting full value out of his house organ because not enough people were reading them, and too many of them were being thrown on the floor. So he determined to make them even more valuable and started the plan of numbering them, announcing a certain number of lucky numbers each week. The prizes consisted of free passes. The same plan has been worked in baseball parks for several years.

Two of the recent "pocket edition" stage displays used with vocal numbers at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis

"Pocket Edition" Stage Displays Welcomed by Motion Picture Followers at the Circle Theatre

By Davis Hampton

AST week the MOTION PICTURE NEWS recorded the presentation at the Circle heatre, Indianapolis, of one of the elabrate stage spectacles that are such a disnctive feature of that house. This week everal of the smaller but not the less interesting of the S. Barret McCormick prouctions are shown, not for purposes of omparison but for the reason that they erve to demonstrate the value of conantly providing the unexpected for the heatre-goer. The detail and audience ffect that is so carefully worked out for he bigger productions is never neglected these miniature stage pictures which are resented during the weeks when the more aborate ones are not being staged, and as result they blend into and help to make or the general excellence of the program.

The McCormick idea in presentation like the McCormick idea in advertising is aimed at a definite target—the imagination of the public. The melody of a song may appeal to the ear but when the eye can also understand the sentiment and see the beauty of the words the effort is just twice as enjoyable for two of the senses have been appealed to instead of only one.

One of the recent "pocket editions" was a pictorial setting for the Kipling song poem, "Mandalay." A British soldier of the India service was discovered before his little thatched hut overlooking a mysterious lagoon that stretched away to a boundary line of black mountains. Beyond that lay nothing. Then as he sang the rollicking words that told the story of his former adventures and of the Burmah girl "who was awaiting" a new picture dissolved into the scene and the audience looking into the deep blue of the India sky saw his vision, a golden city of the East, a dream city that rose above the Black Mountain peaks.

It was simply a case of putting italics into a story or a "close-up" into the scene. The imagination of the audience was stimulated by the emphasis.

The mysticism of the Far East was likewise conveyed in another scene in which a Hindoo temple dance was presented by straight, rough columns that stretched away into the distance against deep blue background, while in the center sacrificial fires burned into a huge and vividly red brazier.

The "pocket editions" quite often are the settings for excerpts from well known operas, one illustrated here being for a scene from "The Tales of Hoffman." The desert scene provided a musical and scenic curtain raiser to a picture of Oriental locale.

DIGNITY WITH A KICK

Another McCormick Advertising Article in Next Week's Issue

THERE will be another one of S. Barret McCormick's "Zero Hour" stories on advertising in next week's issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. No articles that have been printed in the history of the motion picture industry have attracted more attention than this work of the managing director of the Circle, Indianapolis. "Dignity With a Kick" is the title of next week's.

Exhibitors all over the country have been following the ideas that Mr. McCormick outlines in these articles, and since there are numerous reproductions of the display printed his plans are easy of imitation.

This setting was used with the rendition of "Mandalay"

Noble Uses "Growing" Newspaper Displays as a Stunt and Stimulates New Interest

HERE is an unusual teaser campaign that has just been put over by P. E. Noble, advertising manager for the Liberty and Columbia theatres, Jensen and Von Herberg houses, in Portland, Ore. After trying out this campaign Mr. Noble writes that he is convinced that this advance exploitation of pictures is a paying proposition and recommends the plan that he has followed here to other exhibitors.

When one considers that these displays as they appeared in the newspapers were only three inches deep, single column, it can be seen that the plan is not expensive. Naturally these displays were run separate from all of the other advertising of the two theatres. Black and white effects have been found by Mr. Noble the best to get the desired results for this teaser sort of advertising.

The picture that was chosen for this test was William S. Hart in "The Border Wireless." The first step was to draw the outline of the advertisement with the whole thing as it would appear complete and then proceed to cut it so that none of the advertising until the final one would tell the complete story, but the interest would be kept up strong. Mr. Noble warns especially against using too many words for the reason that the displays will then become confusing.

The first of these advertisements showed only the hat and a portion of Hart's forehead. It was enough to give a bare hint of the character to those thoroughly familiar with him, but certainly there was enough lacking to make most of the people wonder what it was all about. Except for the word "The" there was nothing to indicate what the reading matter would say. Traced in were the words, "We will tell you a little bit more tomorrow."

Then on the second day there was a little more of the black and white effect with the title of the picture given so plainly that most of the people would get it. There was just a suggestion of the name of the star, but the barrel of the "gun" was added and the Hart fans could begin to guess that it was their favorite. But that did not dull their interest in what the rest of the display would say. The third display gave the features in full with the name still left in some doubt, but as yet the name of the theatre had not appeared. This was left for the fourth of the displays when the full story was told.

Hart fans would recognize

Here are the conclusions of Mr. Noble on his campaign:

"I have used them here, four a day on right hand pages, getting page edge position, and the same space for each cut each day and the effect is working out fine. Already I have seen people in restaurants looking for them to see what is to follow and I have been asked by people familiar with my style of 'stuff' what the big idea is, which proves that they are attracting the attention I wanted, and once you have done that, the rest is easy.

Waiting for time and place

"I am foolish enough to believe there is unlimited possibility here for everybody to work on, from the producer on down, as matter of this kind really means something to the exhibitor of today as it is totally DIFFERENT."

All teaser campaigns depend upon their novelty. Some times it is the mere title of the picture that may be used to excite the interest. But the trouble about most of the so-called teaser campaigns is that there is nothing to them to hold the interest from day to day. In this case, with the progressive development of the drawing they will be noticed even my those who have possibly guessed from the first display that it referred to Hart and was a motion picture advertising stunt.

Another reason for the teaser campaign is the interest that it arouses in your theatre. Your patrons like to see that you are doing things "different" and when they see evidences of it in your newspaper advertising they are mighty apt to conclude that there is pep in your presentations and that your house is the one that they should patronize.

Teaser campaigns should not be a habit,

The "finished product"

but as a business stimulant they are hard to beat—when they are well done. But if you haven't a real idea to put over do not waste your money.

Another Exchange Man Becomes Big Theatre Manager

Another exchange man has become an exhibitor with the appointment of J. William Houck as manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash. He succeeds Sam W. B. Cohn, who resigned the management to enter the army. However, he had just reported to the officers' training camp when the armistice was signed, and after a few days he was dismissed. In the meantime the owners of the Liberty had signed a contract with Mr. Houck, who has been with the Famous Players-Lasky organization for some time.

Wilby Exploits Installation of Big New Organ and Brings More Business to Montgomery Theatre

WITHIN the past few months we have called attention to several institutional campaigns that have been conducted by the theatres in Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala., which are under the direction of R. B. Wilby. He believes in talking over his theatre with the public and it is a mighty good idea—when you have something to talk about.

So when the Strand installed a new $11,000 organ a few days ago Mr. Wilby went to the newspapers and for several days used space about eight inches deep across three columns with talks about this musical instrument. Two of them are reproduced on this page. The others were written in the same vein, with the purpose of telling the people of Montgomery how much better music they were to have in the future.

You will note that one of these recites the instruments that are represented on the organ. Now, to get behind the scenes, the truth is that the Strand has been having some trouble with its musicians and decided to replace them with an organ. So you can see the impress that is made on the public with the recital of the number of pieces that are represented under the new arrangement. Then the display goes ahead to say that an orchestra with this number of pieces would be impossible under the scale of prices charged—hence the organ.

Another display is headed "We ought to call it a $25,000 organ," and then goes on to say:

"And we could do that without missing the truth any further than she is usually missed in announcements of that kind. But the cost of the organ is about the only thing that concerns us more than you. What we want you to know is that the organ is the largest instrument in any Southern theatre, that it has been designed as a perfect musical accompaniment to pictures, that in point of variety, tonal quality and volume, it is easily the equal of an orchestra of thirty men with the additional advantage of giving the player better control of its parts than a director can have of so many musicians."

Two of the displays were devoted to talking about the organist, telling his experience and outlining the quality of music that he would supply. It recited the things that Mr. Allen had done in the past and left the impression with the patrons that the theatre had gone out and acquired the very best musician that could be obtained. In addition there were a few lines about the two assistants, or relief organists.

It's all mighty good work and you won't make the slightest mistake when you spend money in improving your theatre to spend a little more in the newspapers and let the people know what you are doing. Without this advertising the installation of the big instrument would have caused nothing more than a little comment. But, as it was handled it was one of the big topics of conversation in the Alabama city.

We Wish to Introduce Mr. Oala D. Allen

Student of Dudley Buck and Eugene Thayer

Assistant Director, Hendel and Hydyn Society, Boston, Mass.

Recitalist, World's Fair, Chicago, Ill.

Official Organist, Kirilfy's Ballet "America," Chicago Auditorium

Recitalist, Carnegie Hall, Pittsburg, Pa.

Erected and opened organs in City Auditorium, Saginaw, Mich.

KNOWING Mr Allen is going to give you a lot of pleasure for it is Mr Allen who will play the organ at the Strand most of the time. And it is HIS organ for he caused its purchase, he designed it, he planned the cemented chamber in which it is installed, he made the installation, and now he will play it. Certainly here is a real case of a musician who knows his instrument

Mr. Allen is one of the real organists of America, a man intimately connected with organs in three ways, building, erecting and playing. He has played most of the celebrated organs of America,—he erected many of them—and has held any number of positions quite as important as those mentioned in this advertisement.

We are proud to have secured Mr Allen for HIS organ. We know that he is going to increase the pleasure of your visits to the Strand. You will enjoy his part in the musical accompaniment to Charles Ray's The Law of the North" today

Introducing the organist

You Would Enjoy an Orchestra Like This:

6 Violins
2 Violas
2 Cellos
1 String Bass
3 Flutes
1 Picalo
1 Oboe
2 Clarinetes
2 Trumpets
1 Tuba
1 French Horn
1 Trombone
1 Harp

We know and you know, an orchestra like that is not possible in a theatre with the Strand's admission. But in the organ now being installed in the Strand, there is available the same musical qualities the other owners of those same instruments could be secured with an even larger orchestra. Violins, violas, trumpets, oboe, tuba—there is there as unmistakably as if you saw the men. And in addition are those purely organ tones not to be found in any orchestra

But beyond that the organist has a control of those instruments—those 1,221 pipes of varying shape and size—that no director can have of his men. This absolute control, with the variety and the beauty of the music, makes such an organ an ideal musical accompaniment for pictures

We are sure that your enjoyment of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures shown here is to be enhanced by the music of this, the largest theatre organ in the South

The Organ will be played Tues for CHARLES RAY The Law of The North on Thursday

French Idea Carried Thro' Whole Performance at the Broadway

IN designing his lobby display at the Broadway theatre this week and, in fact, in his entire presentation of his program Maurice A. Kashin is carrying out the French idea from the sidewalk to the stage, a policy that has attracted attention with many of his bills.

Priscilla Dean in "The Wilcat of Paris," is the feature picture and along with this is being shown "How Stars Twinkle Away from the Studios," being the first meeting of the Motion Picture War Service Association. There were the usual news and comedy pictures, with all French music.

Preceding the showing of the feature Mr. Kashin staged a real Apache dance with two noted dancers as the principals. This fitted splendidly into the first scenes of the feature, the title coming on the screen just at the conclusion of the dance.

Simplicity marked the display in the outer lobby. There was a large head of Priscilla Dean used as the only decoration, an enlargement from one of the posters. The French style of design was followed in all of the window cards and the shadow box at the rear of the lobby was devoted to the motion picture star's picture.

Clever Stage Setting Used with Charles Ray Picture

Charles Ray's picture, "The Law of the North," was shown at Grauman's million dollar theatre recently with an elaborate and artistic setting. It is a story of the north woods, with a stockade in the midst of the great snow wastes as the background for much of the action in the picture. Immediately after the title, cast and introduction to the picture have been thrown on the screen the curtain is suddenly withdrawn and brilliant lights play on the stage, where a couple open the huge gates of the stockade. Ray is cleverly represented in this bit of atmosphere, and when the door closes again the first scene of the picture is flashed on the screen, an exact duplication of the realistic stage setting.

Film Influences Public Opinion

Motion Pictures Rapidly Becoming Greatest Possible Medium in Swaying the People—Many Topical Themes

IN presenting big problems of the moment in concise, visualized form, so that every spectator can at once grasp the salient points, and by grasping them the better form a comprehensive judgment as to what should be done in the matter, motion pictures stand alone.

Magazines, newspapers and the drama cannot, by the greatest possible extension of their particular provinces, compete with motion pictures in humanizing and clarifying the world's big questions.

Motion pictures are rapidly becoming the greatest and most effective medium in enabling the public to formulate sane and satisfactory opinions.

A realization of this fact came early in the war to England, France and America, and these countries made use of this powerful organ for molding public opinion by creating governmental departments or divisions of film.

The effectiveness of their screen propaganda is best illustrated by the change in attitude of the neutral powers who for a long time are said to have wavered in their determination to take sides with the Central Powers, and were held back only through the irrefutable arguments presented by the Allies through motion pictures of the certainty of ultimate victory resting with the cause of humanity.

If there were no other illustration of the ultimate use of moving pictures to sway not alone individuals but also collective bodies of men and women, yes, even nations, than what was done by films during the long years of war, it would be sufficient to show that in the future the motion picture will have an established position as the best method of getting to men in order to convert them to a certain line of thought.

McClure's Productions, in distributing through World Pictures their latest production, "What Shall We Do With Him?" have seized upon the topic of the moment as the theme for an interesting photoplay that not alone carries entertainment qualities but acts as an ocular demonstration of the subject that is commandeering the front pages of every newspaper in the world, according to an announcement from World Film Corporation.

Its six thousand feet of pictorial representation of acts of the greatest criminal the world has ever known is declared to carry with it the summing up by humanity's lawyers of the evidence that has been brought out in the trial that is now taking place "Over There."

Sheehan Looks for Prosperous Year in 1919

JUST back from a tour of the William Fox branch offices throughout the country, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is optimistic over the outlook for the motion picture industry in the coming year.

But at the same time he sounds a note of caution, warning producers and exhibitors alike against over-confidence that they can make increased profits in 1919 without hard work and sound business methods.

"The coming year," said Mr. Sheehan, "will be the most prosperous in the history of the films—for those who deserve prosperity. The country is returning to a peace basis, and after the first unsettled conditions due to the readjustment from a war to a peace foundation the country will enter upon the greatest period of commercial and industrial development we ever have seen.

"Naturally the motion picture business will derive direct benefit from the prosperity, for, it goes without saying, good times mean plenty of spending money.

"But exhibitors and producers need not think that this prosperity and these profits are to be had for the asking. Hard work and close attention to the changing tastes and conditions are absolutely necessary.

"During the year now closing the motion picture exhibitors have endured greater trials and tribulations than ever before. The imposition of heavy taxes by the Government, the tightening of the Government's war curb on all activities not absolutely necessary to the winning of the war, the influenza epidemic and a number of other things have combined to make the lot of the exhibitor a hard one.

"It is to the credit of exhibitors, however, and of the industry that only a comparatively few were unable to stand up under the strain. The great majority of exhibitors, doing business along tried, proved and sound lines, surmounted difficulties and made money.

"For this last class the year 1919 holds out great promise, and they deserve it."

Cupid Wins Again

Lester Brown, chief of projection of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York, and Miss Violet Daniells were married recently at Trinity Church. It was their intention to keep the marriage secret, but "it leaked out."

Romayne Leases Home in Los Angeles

To insure perfect interiors, the Romayne Super Films, Inc., has leased the use of one of the finest furnished residence properties on fashionable West Adams street, Los Angeles, and here Director Wyndham Gettins is producing many of the interiors and exteriors for the company's second production. This home is considered one of the finest in Los Angeles and has beautiful gardens adjoining, all of which will be used for this film. Another feature of the subject which will make it decidedly attractive is that Mr. Gettins, by the aid of the owner of this home, has induced many of the best known society people of Los Angeles to take part in ball room and dining scenes within this home. In this manner Director Gettins has been able to secure people who not only look the part they are playing, but are capable of naturally acting the various roles in the society scenes.

This second production of Romayne Super Films will offer Vera Sisson and Edward Hearn in the leading roles, with Hector Sarno appearing as the heavy. A cast of well-known West Coast players will support these three principals. Director Gettins is also author of the story, which he speaks of as being intensely dramatic, with comedy touches and satire sufficient for relief. It is based on present-day conditions in the business world, and will offer a treatise on a theme that is of great interest to everyone of the nation at this time.

Director Gettins, following a long career as story writer and magazine editor, became film editor for the Universal company, where he remained for more than a year. Following this he served in a similar capacity for Triangle, and there did his first directing. Probably his best known release is that of the Triangle titled "The Ship of Doom," which received unstinted praise from the critics throughout the country when it was released. Indications point to the present subject, as yet untitled, as being one of the promising independent releases of the season, Director Gettins having all the essential facilities needed for such a subject.

Film Star Combination for Universal

What Universal considers as one of the best film-star combinations of the screen has been assembled at Universal City where Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford have begun work on "Pirate Gold," under the direction of Rupert Julian, of "Kaiser, Beast of Berlin" fame.

Last year under the direction of Mr. Julian, the Salisbury-Clifford duo was featured in "The Desire of the Moth," "The Savage," "Hands Down" and "Hungry Eyes."

Wm. Fox Activities Reviewed for 1918

Past Twelve Months Declared to Have Been Most Successful Year in History of Fox Film Corporation—Introduced Three New Brands

DESPITE the difficulties created by war conditions and the sudden cessation of hostilities, not to mention the nation-wide influenza epidemic a few of the big producers, by dint of close study of conditions and a policy of quick acceptance of opportunities, can point to 1918 as the most successful year in their history.

Intensive development of merchandising in distribution, elimination of waste and a close adherence to basic business principles in production, have enabled many producers to serve their exhibitors even better than during the year previous, and at the same time show reasonable progress on the profit side of their own ledgers.

Chief among these producers is William Fox, who, it is reported, has just put the Fox Film Corporation through the most successful season of its history.

The Showman Vision

Officials of the Fox Corporation, commenting on this record, declare it is a result of the keen showman's vision of William Fox and the sound business principles upon which the Fox Film Corporation has always operated.

The ability of Mr. Fox to forecast the wants of the public, they say, has given Fox pictures an appeal that insured big profits to the exhibitors; and the safe and sane business methods of the Fox organization have enabled the Fox Corporation to surmount the difficulties caused by unsettled conditions and to extend the distribution of Fox films as in normal times.

Not only has William Fox continued the same high output of the Fox Film Corporation, it is pointed out, but he is the only producer who introduced three new brands of pictures to the trade this year. These brands are the William Fox Big Timely Pictures, Victory Pictures and Excel Pictures.

Beginning with the opening of this season, in September, Fox officials declare that these three brands have forged to the front in a manner that more than justifies Mr. Fox's confidence that, despite the unsettled conditions of the world, big pictures, made in a big way and featuring big stars, would prove successful.

Big Timely Pictures

In the Big, Timely group, five pictures have been released to date. These are R. A. Walsh's drama, "The Prussian Cur"; "Queen of the Sea," featuring Annette Kellerman; "The Land of the Free," based on the life of General John J. Pershing; "Every Mother's Son," R. A. Walsh's production dealing with the end of the war and the reconstruction period, and "Why I Would Not Marry," Richard Stanton's morality play.

The Victory Pictures group was inaugurated with the opening of the fall season in September. The stars in this group are Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and George Walsh. Every one of the pictures have scored heavily, it is declared.

Victory Pictures so far released are "Kultur," featuring Gladys Brockwell; "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," with Tom Mix; "On the Jump," starring George Walsh; "Fame and Fortune," starring Tom Mix; "The Strange Woman," with Gladys Brockwell, and George Walsh in "I'll Say So."

"The other new William Fox series, Excel Pictures, has attained a tremendous success," declared a Fox official. "Made by stars of assured drawing power and produced on a big scale, these pictures have already earned a reputation among exhibitors as pictures that can be relied upon to fill theatres."

The stars in this group are Peggy Hyland, Jane and Katherine Lee, Madlaine Traverse and Virginia Pearson.

Since September 1st these Excel Pictures have been released: "Bonnie Annie Laurie," starring Peggy Hyland; "Queen of Hearts," with Virginia Pearson; "Swat the Spy," featuring Jane and Katherine Lee; "Marriages Are Made," with Peggy Hyland; "Buchanan's Wife," featuring Virginia Pearson; "Tell It to the Marines," with Jane and Katherine Lee, and "Caught in the Act," starring Peggy Hyland.

Twenty-six "Standards"

The William Fox Standard Pictures, it is stated by the Fox Film Corporation, have maintained a high grade of excellence. Twenty-six subjects have been released in this group, and the exhibitors who have contracted for the Standard Picture program have almost doubled in number during the year, it is said.

Not only has William Fox instituted two new groups of photoplays, but he also has added two more stars—Evelyn Nesbit, whose pictures are being released under the Standard Picture program, and Madlaine Traverse, who is now making Excel Pictures in Los Angeles.

The William Fox year has been marked also by the release on the open market of three big special productions—"Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," starring William Farnum, and "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellerman. William Fox states that since their release they have proved themselves among the most successful pictures of the whole year.

Two Extravaganzas

The two extravaganzas—"Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves"—another new group of William Fox plays which this season has brought forth, are said to be produced on a lavish scale. It is claimed that they are the first film extravaganzas made by any producer, and that although they were released in November, they have already made a huge success.

Since last January William Fox has produced and released a total of 170 pictures. Production has been about evenly divided between the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal., and the Fox studios in and around New York City. Except for the four-week shutdown due to the influenza epidemic, fifteen Fox companies have been working constantly, East and West.

"There has been a persistent combing of the film profession for directors, until today the Fox staff of fifteen directors represents a corps d'elite," said Mr. Fox.

Mr. Fox also he re-edited and revised a number of his greatest successes of former years. The Great Nine, a series of pictures, the success of which is declared to have established Mr. Fox as a producer, will have its first release the latter part of December; one of the pictures to be released each week thereafter.

Early in the summer Mr. Fox also released the Big Six, another series of his former best productions. Primarily intended as a summer attraction only, it is said these pictures, in their new form, are still carrying on, and bookings for the holidays is declared to have shown that their attraction to exhibitors and the public will probably last for a long time to come.

"Infatuation" Benefits by Former Publicity

Reports from Pathe branch offices all over the country, said to be coming in daily, are taken to indicate that "Infatuation" is meeting with unqualified success and that Gaby Deslys has made a personal hit in the picture.

It is interesting to note in this connection that the story, that was published in practically every newspaper of the United States at one time and which was probably responsible more than any factor in creating for Gaby Deslys the interest and curiosity which are tremendous advantages for a star, has been denounced by Miss Deslys as absolutely without a word of truth.

This story connected her name with that of a profligate European monarch, and he was supposed to have lost his throne through neglect of his royal duties while paying court to "Gaby."

Perret Chooses McAdoo

Leonce Perret, the French film director, who has become well known in the motion picture field through his recent film productions, "Lafayette We Come" and "Stars of Glory," wants no less a person than William J. McAdoo, the present secretary of the treasury, to assume a post as leader of the film industry.

Mr. Perret thinks the well-known organizing capabilities of Mr. McAdoo would be of invaluable aid to the motion picture industry, and has written a letter to William J. McAdoo in which the French film director points out how the motion picture industry can help during the reconstruction period and of what great assistance it can be to solve big problems.

Ebbing Year is the Greatest for Metro

More Than Seventy All-Star Series and Screen Classics Produced Besides Erection of Million Dollar Studio and Participation in Patriotic Drives

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, President of Metro Pictures Corporation, is highly elated and pronounces the year 1918 as the most active and brilliant, from an artistic, production and achievement standpoint in the history of that company.

During the twelve-month period the organization which Mr. Rowland heads has made more than sixty-two All-Star Series features, distributed the monthly "super de luxe" productions of Screen Classics, Inc., spent many thousands of dollars in enlarging and improving its studios and laboratories and purchasing the rights to novels, plays and manuscripts for future use, and finally has begun the erection of what is described as one of the most complete and up-to-the-minute studios in the world in Hollywood, California, a studio which, when finished, will accommodate more than a dozen big companies at the same time.

A Banner Year

Maxwell Karger, under whose personal supervision all casts for Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., pictures are selected and directed, feels with Mr. Rowland, that 1918 has been an unparalleled banner year for the companies. He has just recently gone to California to supervise production work in the companies' new studios.

"In addition to its producing and distributing activities, Metro has done as much if not more than any other three companies," said Mr. Rowland, "in arousing and quickening patriotism with its stirring Screen Classics, Inc., superfeatures, "The Slacker," starring Emily Stevens, "Draft 258," starring Mabel Taliaferro, "My Own United States," the William L. Sherrill masterpiece, produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, in which Mr. Arnold Daly was starred, "The Legion of Death," with Edith Storey as star, "To Hell With the Kaiser," featuring Lawrence Grant with Olive Tell and a cast of 2,000, and Screen Classics, Inc.'s two latest seven-reel productions, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" and "Why Germany Must Pay," historical records of the war which future generations will view with the same enthusiasm as they read Gibbons now.

"For Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., stars and directors contributed their services as four-minute speakers, made special patriotic productions for the government, and in other ways unselfishly gave their time and talents to aiding in crushing Germany's mad monarch.

"Over two hundred employees, including stars and directors, served in different arms of the service and in the loan drives the company and its stars raised over $25,000,000—thousands of dollars of this being contributed by the corporation and its employees, one star alone taking over $200,000 in Liberty bonds."

Many Big Productions

Among the works of extensively read fiction used by Metro were "The House of Mirth," Edith Wharton's society novel, which was produced with a cast composed of Katharine Harris Barrymore, Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Lottie Briscoe, Christine Mayo and Edward Abeles; Myrtle Reed's two books, "Flower of the Dusk" and "Weaver of Dreams," in which Viola Dana did some of the best work of her career; "Lend Me Your Name," Francis Perry Elliott's story, played by the late Harold Lockwood; "The Landloper," also one of Mr. Lockwood's most successful pictures, adopted by Fred J. Balshofer from Holman Day's appealing novel of the same name; Edward Moffat's novel of the west, "Hearts Steadfast," with Edith Storey, under the title of "Revenge"; Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "No Man's Land," which served to introduce Bert Lytell; "The Trail to Yesterday," a picturization of Charles Alden Seltzer's tale of the same name, and Mr. Lytell's first Metro picture; C. N. and A. M. Williamson's romantic story, "The Demon," the screen version of which Edith Storey used as a starring vehicle, and "Kildare of Storm," Emily Stevens' mid-summer All Star Series picture, which was adapted from Eleanor Kelly's novel, published by the Century Company.

May Allison, Metro Star

Ten Screen Classics

Among the Screen Classics, Incorporated, "Big Super-Features" which the Metro organization distributed were "Lest We Forget," in which the French stage artist, Rita Jolivet, survivor of the Lusitania, starred; "Pals First," a picturization of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name in which Harold Lockwood was starred; "The Legion of Death," a tremendous screen epitome of Russia's famous battalion of women, in which Edith Storey played the commander of these Joan d'Arcs; Charles A. Taylor's photo-version of Joseph Arthur's melodrama, "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana in her first Screen Classics, Inc., production; "My Own United States," in which the dramatic star, Mr. Arnold Daly, appeared; "The Million Dollar Dollies," the feature which served to introduce the Broadway beauties and dancers; "The Slacker," starring Emily Stevens; "Draft 258," starring Mabel Taliaferro, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns," an adaptation of Maxwell Karger's novel, depicting the causes and end of the war, and "Why Germany Must Pay," also written by Mr. Karger. The two latter productions were directed by Charles Miller.

"While Metro has always been unique in the class of stars that headed its productions, its casts of nationally known stage and screen artists, the excellence in direction, setting and lighting of its big photo-dramas, its achievements for 1918 have exceeded all of its previous efforts in these lines," said Mr. Rowland.

"And Metro enters upon its new year with still further plans of expansion and enlarged activities. It will be even a more active producer than ever. It foresees in the coming year a great improvement in business conditions and public patronage which will mean greater returns for exhibitors and Metro."

Jefferies Assigned to Secure Stories

Norman Jefferies, who transacted the purchase of "High Pockets" for the Betzwood Film Company, to be released through Goldwyn, is now commissioned to negotiate immediately for several other stories suitable for Louis Bennison. Original or published stories with Western, Canadian or Alaskan locals are required at once.

There is also instant demand for a feature story for Katherine McDonald, whose work with W. S. Hart in "Shark Monroe" and "Riddle Gawne" is known to picture patrons.

Quick action is promised on stories of the designated type if submitted to Norman Jefferies, Real Estate Trust Building, Philadelphia.

Riddle Assistant Manager N. Y. General Exchange

Announcement is made by General Film Company of the appointment of B. S. Riddle as assistant manager of the New York City exchange. Mr. Riddle was promoted to this position from traveling auditor, in which capacity he has served the company several years.

At the New York exchange he will cooperate with Manager J. A. Hammell, his duties pertaining to the accounting work of the office. Mr. Riddle is known to motion picture people through the East and has specialized in system and office management.

Zukor Sees the Industry Victorious

Declares Past Twelve Months Have Been Most Trying Motion Pictures Have Ever Experienced—Sees Breakers Ahead But Thinks Crisis Is Passed

THE motion picture industry during the past twelve months has weathered the stormiest year since its inception, according to Adolph Zukor of Famous Players-Lasky. "Never before has our business been confronted with such perplexing problems as have evidenced themselves during the year of 1918," said Mr. Lasky to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "Through it all the industry has survived, a bigger and mightier enterprise than ever before. The motion picture has stood the acid test. War and epidemic have only acted as the fire that strengthens and purifies the steel, welding together an enterprise that, has it been less potent, less beneficial to mankind, would have tumbled and perhaps fallen into a ruin that would have taken years to rebuild.

"To everyone who has stood by the industry and contributed towards its everlasting recognition in the eyes of the world must surely come a distinct sense of gratification and pride at this time when the future seems clear of obstacles that have been thrown in the path of our progress during the past twelve months," continued the producer

Big Dangers Ahead

"I do not mean to infer that the motion picture industry is now in a sea of calm and that before it lies clearly defined a passive voyage. Both from without and within our business we must always anticipate dangers the like of which are unknown to other gigantic institutions.

"However, it is quite right to feel that we have passed the crisis. With peace at hand it is only natural to expect that the motion picture enterprise will enjoy conditions that will make possible its great advancement, not only as an art, but as a regular business project.

"With conditions at normal I anticipate greater developments during the next year than within any similar period heretofore. The reason for this supposition seems quite obvious. During the past year we have as a unit devoted our energies chiefly toward the welfare of our Government. What we have accomplished in this connection is history and needs no repetition here. Suffice to say that our efforts have brought forth expressions of sincere and full appreciation from Government executives in whose hands has been entrusted the future of some hundred and ten million people.

"From our store of brains and genius we have contributed freely and gladly toward the ultimate victory of our country, a reward for heroic sacrifice which must always come to those peoples who fight for right.

"With the advent of 1919 the motion picture industry embarks on a new era of business association. More things have happened during the past twelve months to make the industry a modern business enterprise than during any previous year. The better motion pictures of today are being embarked in a manner befitting the importance of our gigantic business. The product is being sold not only to the exhibitor, but to the public as well, along lines employed by large distributors in other modern industries.

Service the Main Issue

"Service is the keynote of all business success once the quality has become established. During the past year the exhibitor has been given increased service as the time progressed. Systematic sales plans have been embodied in the distribution of the motion picture product. The haphazard manner of distributing and exploiting films, although not entirely extinct in some cases, is rapidly giving place to more business-like methods.

Adolph Zukor, President of Famous Players-Lasky

"With the beginning of the new year nearly all pictures are being sold on their merit, and the producer and exhibitor profit or loss is absolutely commensurate with the quality of the product. In other words, since the inception of the motion picture business it is only through the distribution and presentation developments of the past year that producers, distributors and exhibitors alike are better able to calculate their earnings in advance by virtue of the fact that we are now dealing in concrete values.

"In bringing about this improved business relation within the industry itself no single organization has done more than the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This I feel we can say without any sense of egotism. Paramount and Artcraft pictures have been merchandised along modern business lines. With our tremendous advertising and sales systems we have established new standards of service to our customers, realizing from the very start that our organization could only succeed along strict business lines based on the fundamental laws which govern all commercial institutions.

"For the first time in the history of the motion picture business, a definite product, a concrete schedule for an entire year was presented to the exhibitor by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation last June. At this time we announced our policies and product for the entire year of 1918-19, starting September 1. From our announcements the exhibitor could definitely figure out his plan of action many months ahead. Our production and distribution plans were clearly outlined. We definitely announced just how many pictures of a given star and brand of film there would be during the new season, giving a schedule which also made it possible for the manager to arrange his dates far in advance. In short, we instituted a schedule of product on which our patrons could absolutely depend. We catalogued our output just as it is done by large organizations in other branches of the commercial world.

Business Now Firm

"This stability of enterprise was never before evidenced in our industry. It marked the evolution of our business from a more or less uncertain 'game,' as it has been called, to a commercial proposition of sound foundations. Because of the absolute reliability of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exhibitors no longer needed to wonder where the pictures to be shown in three and six months would come from. If they wanted consistent quality of product they knew they could sign for the backbone of their business for a year. Instead of doing business from week to week, they planned for a year, and therein lies the positive proof of the statement that our industry has become more of a sound business during the past year than ever before.

"The fundamental business basis of the motion picture industry is now firmly established. I can see great improvements and enlargements within the next year, however. Our own confidence in the success of our year's prospectus is in the good will and reputation which we have built up with public and exhibitor. That reputation and good will does not come over night and does not come haphazard. It is the result of hard work backed by a constant ideal and the ability to show the sincerity of our aim to the public through our national exploitation work. Everyone connected with our business knows that the public has learned to discriminate in the purchase of its mo-

Monroe Salisbury is the Universal Featured Player in "The Light of Victory," Which Promises Unusual Interest

January 5 Is United's Big Day

The First Release of the United Picture Theatres of America Is Scheduled for First Week of New Year

CONCRETE evidence of the activity which has been reported from United offices is contained in the detailed announcement of definite date of release in January of the first two of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., features, "The Light of Western Stars" and "Adele."

The former, which is closely based on Zane Gray's Western romance, "The Light of Western Stars," and was directed by Charles Swickard from the screen version of Roy Clements, is definitely announced for release January 5th.

The second United release, which is set for January 26th, will be that of the recently completed Kitty Gordon feature, "Adele," which has gone smoothly from its inception at the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, and which is said to present this screen star in a novel role differing in its entirety from anything before accomplished by Miss Gordon.

Private showings of "Adele" in New York are reported to have elicited unstinted praise. The piece is based on Adele Bleneau's "The Nurse's Story. Jack Cunningham wrote the continuity and Wallace Worsley directed. Robert Brunton gave personal supervision to the production, while Clyde De Vinney is credited with the camera work.

For the month of February, J. A. Berst, president of United, further announces two other releases. These will be forthcoming in the recently completed Florence Reed feature from the studios of Tribune Productions, Inc., the title of which is not definitely determined, and the second of the pictures in which Dustin Farnum is starring for United, "A Man in the Open," which latter is based on Roger Pocock's romance of the Northwest of the same title.

A letter received by Mr. Berst from Robert Brunton of the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, has this to say regarding "Adele" and "A Man in the Open":

"May I take this opportunuity to congratulate you on the general excellence of your super-features, 'Adele' and 'A Man in the Open'? We spared neither time nor expense in the making of these pictures, and I consider them the very last word in motion picture production."

"Tarzan" Ad Competition Expires February 1

With play dates on "The Romance of Tarzan" advanced in many contracts from a month to six weeks as the result of the influenza shutdown, officials of First National Exhibitors' Circuit have changed the date for ending the exhibitor advertising competition on the sequel production from December 29, 1918, to February 1, 1919.

With an extension of practically five weeks it is believed that many of the smaller theatres, in the third and fourth class for capacities, will have shown "The Romance of Tarzan" and submitted their entries, so that the judges will have before them an almost equal number of entries from each of the four classes of houses.

Dorothy Phillips Visits Metropolis for Rest

Dorothy Phillips is in New York for a rest. Her director-husband, Allen Holubar, and Film Editor Frank Lawrence, also came to New York from Universal City, bringing with them "The Heart of Humanity" to the Eastern laboratories.

Mr. Holubar and Mr. Lawrence are working with executives at the Universal office, editing, cutting, titling and pre-viewing "The Heart of Humanity."

Weddige Enlarges Supply Quarters at Detroit

C. A. Weddige, president of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, Film building, Detroit, which disposes of Simplex projectors in Michigan, expects shortly to have a "house warming" in celebration of his enlarged quarters on the second floor of the Film building.

In anticipation of an increase in his business as the result of his plans to push the Simplex products in Michigan, he has provided for more floor space to handle this make of projectors.

Mr. Weddige is well known to the exhibiting fraternity in Michigan and has planned an extensive advertising campaign to keep before them the merits claimed for the Simplex machine by its manufacturers.

As part of his aim to keep the name "Simplex" constantly before the motion picture theatre managers in Michigan, he has begun to advertise heavily.

Jack Rose Keeps an Eye on the Coast

Jack Rose, who will be remembered for his clever work as feature cameraman for the Essanay for over eight years, where he photographed Charlie Chaplin, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn and many other of filmdom's bright lights, has the Coast bee in his bonnet, although he is now in Chicago.

Mr. Rose was the first cameraman in the country to use a triple dissolve and has invented many new devices for motion pictures. The gentleman has made cinematograph work a life study and been associated with such directors as Captain E. H. Calvert, Harry Beaumont, Fred Wright, Chas. Brabin and Theo. Wharton, and has made about two hundred and sixty photoplays, approximating eight hundred reels.

Zukor Sees Triumphant Year

tion picture entertainment just as it does in buying any other article. As a rule the public buys a certain brand of goods, first because it has been brought to his attention by advertising, either in a printed or verbal way, and, second, because that article lives up to all that is claimed of it.

"With peace at Christmas time the whole world will rejoice in thankful expressions of good will. Every industry faces a new era, a time when competition increases, in many instances a hundredfold. In the motion picture industry we are looking toward the future with hopeful expectancy. Surely we have become stronger embedded in the hearts of the entire universe for what our industry has done to save civilization. We are consequently entitled to a year of growth and expansion in a commercial way as well as from the viewpoint of art. The new year is perhaps the greatest in history for the commercial world. If not handicapped it will be the greatest for the motion picture industry and for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

"The Wildcat of Paris"

DURING the time that our boys were in the trenches, when we knew that possibly tomorrow they would be going "over the top" and that days later we might find their names on the casualty list, the public demanded great things in any picture bearing on the war. It had no time to spend on mere "incidents." The producer had to show great battles, the bursting of shrapnel at night, the thousands of men going forward and the Hun put in his right place at the end.

But now it may be said that we are getting down to the "heart" of the war. The public want the heart thrills that come from it—not merely the pageants. The war picture is not dead—not by any means—but we want to know what John did and what Bill did and the sacrifices that little Marie made. For many and many a year it is going to thrill with the little joys and sorrows that come out of the war. And the pictures that carry the human element of the struggle against the inhuman Hun are the ones on which you should turn your best efforts of exploitation.

IN a way "The Wildcat of Paris" is not a war picture. It represents at the most only the part that a few thousand took. Without them the glorious victory might have come just as quickly and just as fully. But it does picture another human element that has been forgotten in all of this struggle—that the spirit of France went into the blood of every Frenchman and that it called forth from the caves and the sewers of Paris even the Apaches to go forth and do battle for their land. You have here a "side-light" against the great crimson of the bigger event, something that you can etch into the soul of each of your patrons if you exploit this picture as it should be done.

Now, before we have any further discussion, let's have an eye on the story of the picture. Collette (Priscilla Dean) is the queen of the band of Apaches, and she lords it over the others while "The Toad" pays her particular homage and constantly presses his suit. It is to the section of Paris where the Apaches live that goes Jean Rovel, a young artist, and there he is attracted by the beauty of Collette. It is while hastily sketching her that "The Toad" steals his wallet. Later in the Apache rendezvous this gives hint of greater loot, and he and Collette go to the apartment with robbery in view. But, while the man escapes, Collette is captured, and it is only when she consents to pose that Rovel protects her from the police.

SHE finds him different from other men that she has known; love is budding. But Collette has a rival for the queenship of the band in Cherron, who herself goes to investigate, and when she glimpses Collette with a portion of her body bare she goes back to report, and Collette is condemned to death as a traitor. "The Toad" is made the avenger. But in the meantime Collette has heard from the artist the story of Joan of Arc —of how she saved France, and a great idea begins to surge through her heart, for the Huns are drawing close to Paris. "The Toad" reaches the artist's apartment, and in the fight that follows Collette escapes and returns to the cellar rendezvous, where there follows a great fight with her rival, "The Toad" only turning up in time to confirm her story.

Now the gendarmes determine on a real raid to round up the Apaches who refuse to fight, and at that moment Collette inspires them with the story of Joan and they rally about her and directly they are off to the front in the blue of the republic. We are taken then to a chateau at the front, where live Aimee and her helpless grandmother. The Huns come and take possession. One of the officers seeks to possess Aimee and Collette puts herself in her place, with death the reward for the would-be despoiler. Then comes "The Toad," now a soldier of France, and after a second officer goes to his death the Apache is killed in the fighting. He dies in the arms of Collette, who is now a French Red Cross nurse.

The French arrive, with Rovel one of the officers. He hears from Aimee, who proves to be his sister, the story of the sacrifice that Collette has seemingly made. And there can be but one ending.

Two-column advertising cut supplied by Universal

YOU have a title here that will attract attention. You have a star that is gaining popularity with unusual rapidity, if the box office reports may be believed. These two things should be played very strong.

Do not advertise that this is a war picture, but make all of your exploitation show that this is a picture with the war as a background, with a great human appeal in the story, with a new light on the reason for the victory of the Allies, with a new story of the heroism of the French.

The war is the greatest event that the world has ever known. We may be tired of the story based on the actual fighting, but the human appeal of its incidents have barely been tapped. And especially is this true when you realize that while the story of "The Wildcat of Paris" is pure fiction, it is set upon actual events. The Apaches did do their part for their mother land and did it brilliantly.

And you have piquancy, but never filth in this story. You may tell the people that here are side-lights on the life in the artists' colony before the way, the pictures of the criminal side of the city, a photograph of Paris before it was threatened by the outstretched hand of the invader.

Don't be afraid to use the war as a setting, but only as a setting. There are too many other appeals to be put over, and if you will merely use them they should get immediate results.

At right Collette as the queen of the Apaches, and at the left their Joan leading them to fight for France

War Only a Background for Stirring Story Here

NO less a person than the President of the United States will help you in the exploitation of "The Wildcat of Paris." His visit abroad will probably be prolonged a couple of months, and even after his return the stories of his visit to the French people will have the right of way to the newspaper and magazine pages.

There has always been in the minds of everyone a fascination about the French capital. In the minds of some of us, before the war, there the impression that there was the center of wickedness, of daring women, of Don Juans, gamblers and cutthroats. But the war has shown us the heart of France and the soul of Paris, and there is all the more interest in everything concerning that city with with added appeal given by the visit of the President.

So we would make the Paris element strong in everything that we did. In the stills, in the paper, in the ready prepared advertising there is that spicy suggestion of the Apaches and of the Latin Quarter that will arouse a thrill, and to bring nobility to the picture there is that background—which you must never forget—which shows the sacrifice of all of France.

WE would adopt a policy of straightaway advertising on this. There might be possibilities in a teaser campaign, but we would ignore these and devote all of the space possible to putting over the big smashes of the picture in every possible way.

This is a production which heavy advertising will pay. For those who design their own displays there are innumerable opportunities, and for those who do not Universal has supplied one, two and three-column displays which may be well used as the basis for larger advertisements.

There is just one thing that we want to warn against here, and that is not to play the Joan of Arc idea too strong in your advertising—that is, without connecting it up with the real way that it comes into the story. Many people are apt to get the idea that this is a costume picture, when it is a modern, red-blooded story of action and love. But you have probably had your experiences recently with costume pictures. As a matter of fact the only time that the impersonation of the actual Joan comes into the picture is for a brief "vision."

"In her little Latin Quarter garret she fought and beat them all"

PRISCILLA DEAN
YOUR THEATRE NAME, DATE, ETC., HERE

This three-column cut is available in electro or mat form

In this section there are four of the scene productions used, and there are other pictures in the advertising section that can be used to your advantage in especially designed displays. We would not be afraid here to use pictures containing a large number of people, provided you can afford sufficient space for them, for they carry out the spirit of the production and give the advertising the "atmosphere." But do not use these unless you have the space, for the result will be little more than a blotch.

Particularly will the picture showing Collette posing for the artist stop everyone in their tracks.

ON the front cover of the advertising section in this issue you will find a most striking head of Miss Dean as she appears in this role, and this may be used in your displays, but we would also use some explanatory matter as the "She purr" line which you will find quoted below.

On the fourth and fifth pages there is a striking picture of Miss Dean bearing the French standard and this will prove one of the most attractive halftones that you have ever used.

The series of heads on the sixth and seventh pages will make a mighty attractive bottom line for the same display. In fact, if you are using considerable space you can use the entire display on these two pages for the basis of your advertisement, but let us advise you to take large enough space so that this will not suffer in the reduction.

LET us sum up a few things not to do, and a few things to do, remembering that you are apt to mislead the public to your disadvantage by placing too much emphasis on things which enter only incidentally into the production.

In the first place this is not a war picture in that it portrays the battles, but rather a reflection of the whole spirit of France that made the result of conflict victory.

It is not an underworld picture, except that it shows the true character of these Apaches and how they were led by higher motives than they had ever known before to cut their villainy behind them and devote their blood to the Tricolor.

And then it is not a mere expose of vice, a mirror of the seamy sides of life, but just enough of the spice of the real Paris before the war that you may appreciate the change that comes over these people and that you may thrill with their sacrifices.

There is a real story here. You never know its result until the last moment. We would play this picture as:

Two of the striking studio scenes in "The Wildcat of Paris." At the left the four principals are all shown

"The story with a little spice, a heart grip—and a thousand thrills."

You never know how it is going to turn out until the very end. Indeed, there is a switch near the last few feet that adds a great deal to the punch.

Don't tell too much about the story. It will create lots of word-of-mouth advertising for your theatre.

THERE is a lot of difference in keeping a picture clean and putting a little "pep" into the exploitation. The picture is clean in that there is no actual wrong done, and this girl of the Apaches comes in the end to her sweetheart as pure and noble as any women ever was. Don't let any temptation lead you from that fact.

It is a story that will not offend anyone. There are incidents in studio life, but none of them are suggestive. The furthest that it ever goes is during one scene where Collette is being persuaded to pose for Rovel in the nude, but this has been delicately handled by the director. Here one scene shows the robe being released from her shoulder, and then the next flash shows her feet and ankles. There is no flash of the nude here, although the point is made clear.

There is a thrilling lot of Apache stuff in the opening scenes, and you have here a picture of a side of Paris life that a lot of your patrons will want to see. The sets are well made, there are scores of people used and there are thrills a-plenty.

We would frankly tell the people that they have scenes in Apache life, but we would bring that in with the greater element of the story—a true incident—how these Apaches were aroused to patriotism in the hour of Paris's great danger and went out to fling back the Hun—how they paid the noble sacrifice, the most of them with their lives.

YOU do not have to do any faking. Here is an excellent selling argument that you can use. Thousands of readers will know that it is true, and you have here the backing of the name of one of the best known authors of today. All you have to do is to connect it up with the picture:

"Irvin Cobb, writing in the Saturday Evening Post (Nov. 16 issue) says:

"'The slum gave up its Apache—and a magnificent fighter he made, too.'

"Do you know why?

"It was Colette, the new Joan, taught by the man she had come to love, who stirred them and went with them to glorious deeds.

"She, too, was a child of the slums, one of the criminal band, until the Great Inspiration came to her, and then she proved as did the first Joan the magnificence of the French character and won with it victory for her people and utter happiness for herself."

Here is another and a shorter one, though possibly not quite so convincing:

"He was an Apache—a woman's voice—a Joan's plea—moved him to fight and he died, a hero, for France.

"And as he died in her arms the gloriousness of his deeds wiped away his sins, as the girl looked up to find waiting for her the love and happiness with another hero."

LOVE interest is one of the striking things about this picture. And when you have the love of man combined with that of love of country, and great sacrifices combined you have a pretty near general appeal.

The Universal has a splendid line for your advertising included in the single-column cut that it supplied. It reads:

"She purr—she scratch—she bite—but, mon dieu, how she love."

You are going to excite a great deal of curiosity with these lines, but after we had used them as the catch lines, as the attention getter, we would go a little further into the element behind the story, the one that he have already pointed out.

Here is one thing to remember. The people of this country, and especially the women, know a great deal more about love for country than they ever knew before. It took the war to cast off the screen of selfishness and to show the wonder work of women. When you put that appeal behind this picture, and it is there every moment of the time, and you will have every woman in your city talking about this picture and not only sending their women friends, but their husbands and sons as well if you go to this as you should.

Don't exaggerate. Don't lead to false consclusions. Simply tell the truth, at the same time leaving the suspense, the outcome of the story, untold.

GO TO THIS

Here is a Chance to Get Them All In, If You Will Work

SOME of the striking paper that has been issued on this production is illustrated in these pages. One and three sheets which are not reproduced carry striking heads of Priscilla Dean as the Apache girl.

Here is a case where the paper will draw more business than is generally in the case. It does not enter into the character of the production, it tells nothing of the story, but it leaves the mystery element strong, romance stands out and your people will expect to see a new sort of a picture and they will not be disappointed. This is an instance in which you can afford to use bill posting much more than is your custom.

The paper includes 2 one sheet, 2 3-sheets, a 6-sheet and a 24-sheet.

For the lobby there are a set of 8 x 10 stills and then another set of 11 x 14 prints together with a 22 x 28 of the star.

For newspaper use there are one, two and three column ready prepared advertising which can be used as the basis for your display or as complete advertisements. The one column carries the line "She purr—she scratch—she bite—but, mon Dieu, how she love."

There is a one column star cut for advertising or news column and two and three column scene cuts.

At the left is a three-sheet, in the center a six-sheet and a one-sheet at the right. This striking paper should be used liberally to get fullest results

Star's Appeal Should Be Played Strong Here

PRISCILLA DEAN was last seen in "Kiss or Kill." A special service section on the handling of this picture was printed here and the suggestions were followed by a number of theatres. The reports that have been received from the managers are that it has been a paying box-office attraction. If you played that picture you will know that it is a good thing to refer to the fact that you have the same star in "The Wildcat of Paris."

Nn the November 23 issue we gave you some general suggestions on how to play up this comparatively new star who has forged so rapidly to the front. You need not be afraid of going the limit on her personality, for she is the sort of an actress that shows this in her pictures, so that one who has seen her will never forget her, but at the same time will find her "different" in each of the productions in which she appears. Her two biggest successes preceding "Kiss or Kill" were "The Brazen Beauty" and "The Two Soul Woman."

You might say that she is just at the start of the big portion of her career, for each of her new pictures is making her all the better known. Especially if you are expecting to play these Universal special offerings regularly we would advise you to keep this girl before your public in every way and to use frequent news reference to her in your program gossip and newspaper matter regardless of whether she is in a current offering.

RIGHT now is the time for you to begin saving the pictures of Miss Dean so that you can make a special lobby display each time she comes along in a new picture. If you will buy outright the stills that are supplied with each picture you will soon have a collection that you can use as they are or as cut-outs. For instance, if you have preserved the stills of her in "Kiss or Kill" you would be able to put these out and recall the pleasure that your public had in seeing her in that picture, and then show them the entirely different sort of a role that she has in "The Wildcat of Paris."

One thing that we want to impress on you very strongly is:

Don't fail to use the name of Miss Dean prominently in all of your advertising.

Remember that the motion picture business does not consist in showing one picture but in building up your business. And no matter whether you are contracting for a series of pictures or whether you are following an absolutely open policy in picking your film you are building for the future, working for the standing of your community.

When they showed "Kiss or Kill" some of the exhibitors played up the name of Herbert Rawlinson the stronger, simply because he was better known to the patrons of the house. In our opinion that is a mistake. You have to take into consideration that the star in the production is COMING BACK AGAIN. And if you are one of those who made the mistake in not calling enough attention to Miss Dean, do not repeat this time.

WITH Louis Barclay, Edward Cecil and LicilleFurness furnishing an able supporting cast—and there are hundreds of others seen in the production—we would use the name of Miss Dean alone in the advertising for the reasons that we have already noted.

There are plenty of other things to talk about in your advertising and reading notices.

You can tell the public that there are many big scenes in this offering, but we would not put any emphasis on the war stuff. As a matter of fact, there is no attempt made to show anything of battle. All the fighting that you see is between individuals in the French chateau. Put this fighting emphasis on the sacrifice that these heroes made for France.

Play the story strength strong. You can go as far as you want in declaring that the patrons of your theatre will never know the ending until the last scene is shown. We have already suggested that you bring out the thrills.

Don't tell the story of the picture in advance. The unusual suspense that is maintained is one of your assets.

TO THE HEART

This Is a Chance for That Sort of Advertising

RECENTLY S. Barret McCormick wrote an article for this magazine called "Advertising to the Heart." Here is a picture on which you have such an opportunity.

Get the humaneness of the production into your displays. Tell the people that here is a story that will give them a thousand thrills and that will satisfy them in the ending. Tell them that it is a great story of heroism and a triumphant love.

Elsewhere we have outlined the story and have given some suggestions. Do not be afraid to go after them, because here is a chance that you have to go the limit without having a dissatisfied patron—if you appeal to the heart.

This striking twenty-four-sheet helps to put over the melodramatic idea

Simplicity Should Mark Display in Your Lobby

WHEN you resort to anything freakish in a picture like "The Wildcat of Paris," you are pretty sure to hurt business rather than increase it. We would advise very strongly against trying to create the Apache atmosphere in the lobby. Doing this outside your theatre and doing it in connection with the presentation of the picture are too entirely different, for when you know that the people are going to see the production you can be sure of the atmosphere of understanding.

One of the most striking displays that you can make is to reproduce the figure of Miss Dean carrying the French flag and leading the Apaches, but use only her figure. Get an artist who can design this properly, bringing out the features and then use a real French flag in her hand. If you can provide a fan arrangement to keep the banner waving, all the better. French flags can be used through your lobby to good effect.

Use the star poster of Miss Dean prominently and also see that every one of the stills are displayed. If you have other pictures of the star in previous pictures, add these to the collection.

"THE Wildcat of Paris" is a tense, but happily-ending melodrama and therefore the balance of the program should be made with comedy.

If you use overtures of the classical character, either with orchestra or organ we would suggest that you employ the work of some one of the French composers or else use Tschaikowsky's "1812" (or "Solonelle" as it is often entitled). This has a counterpoint of the "Marseillaise" and will be very effective.

Vocal numbers should consist of love songs or the rather lighter character.

There is nothing in the feature to interfere with the use of a news weekly, even if it is the Official War Review, or with any scenic or travel picture.

For the end of the bill we would recommend one of the slap-stick or cartoon comedies. That serves to add a lot of laughs to the many thrills.

"Lion and Mouse" Cast Chosen

Vitagraph to Feature Alice Joyce in "The Lion and the Mouse," Released in February

THE full cast for the Vitagraph production of "The Lion and the Mouse," in which Alice Joyce is to be featured, has just been announced.

The players who will support Miss Joyce have been chosen with great care, and both the screen and the stage are giving their talent to the making of what is promised to be a better production even than Vitagraph's "Within the Law."

Miss Joyce will play the role of Shirley Rossmore; Anders Randolf will play John Burkett Ryder; Mrs. John Burkett Ryder will be played by Jane Jennings; Conrad Nagel will play Jefferson Ryder; W. T. Carleton will be seen as Senator Roberts; Mona Kingsley will play Kate Roberts; Henry Hallam will play Judge Rossmore; Mary Carr will be seen as Mrs. Rossmore; William H. Burton plays ex-Judge Stott, and Templer Saxe will be seen as the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley.

The production will be directed by Tom Terriss, who has directed the Alice Joyce productions for many months past.

The date set for the release of "The Lion and the Mouse" is February 10. It will be the third of the Alice Joyce Star Series now being released under Vitagraph's new booking plan and policy. Miss Joyce's first production under the Star Series plan was "Everybody's Girl," which was released November 18; her second production, "The Captain's Captain," will be released on December 30.

The release of "The Lion and the Mouse" on February 10 is looked forward to by Vitagraph as one of the big events of the picture year. As a play, "The Lion and the Mouse," which is from the pen of the late Charles Klein, is declared to be quite as famous as "Within the Law," and is a rival to it in the matter of financial success as a stage production.

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph Star

The play is probably as well known to picture fans and playgoers in general as any drama produced within the last twenty-five years.

It is a woman's story; that is to say, the heroine dominates throughout, and for that reason its selection as a vehicle for Miss Joyce is said to be ideal.

Goldwyn Announces New Dramatic Films

CONTINUING the pace set by Goldwyn since the beginning of its second releasing year in September, the schedule of coming Goldwyn releases bring exhibitors of America a battery of dramas that are expected to even surpass the successful records established by Goldwyn's first eleven Star Series releases.

On December 22, Mae Marsh's second Star Series production, "The Racing Strain," by Tex Charwate, directed by Emmett J. Flynn, will be featured in the country's leading first-run houses. In "The Racing Strain" Miss Marsh is seen in the type of role that first won her fame in Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation."

On December 29 Tom Moore in "Go West, Young Man," by Willard Mack, directed by Harry Beaumont, is scheduled for nation-wide release. Moore's appearance in this drama is anxiously awaited by the fans of the country. As a romantic young Westerner fighting to win the girl of his choice, Goldwyn's only man star will be seen to his very best advantage.

Madge Kennedy in a drama of love and romance comes next. "Day Dreams," written for Miss Kennedy by Cosmo Hamilton, and directed by Clarence G. Badger, is the title of this release. The production was originally named "Primrose," but Goldwyn has selected the new title in its place.

Mabel Normand's third Goldwyn broad comedy production, "Sis Hopkins," from the Rose Melville stage success, follows the release of "Day Dreams."

Geraldine Farrar, successful in her first two Star Series releases, "The Turn of the Wheel" and "The Hell Cat," will be seen in "Shadows," by Willard Mack, directed by Reginald Barker, as her third Goldwyn production. "Shadows" shifts from the wild dance halls of far-off Alaska to the fashionable quarters of an Eastern metropolis. Milton Sills and Tom Santschi appear in a supporting cast of favorably known players.

Gaumont Graphic Shows Our Boys in France

Gaumont Graphic, No. 38, released December 13, showed a big variety of interesting subjects of which the following is a partial list:

Supply wagons keep pace with the boys on the march, because Uncle Sam believes that "an army marches on its stomach."

Billeted in quaint little French homes the boys are entertained by German prisoners and an occasional song by a vaudeville artist.

The advance is continued in open formation as nobody trusts the Hun, then a little sight-seeing trip through an abandoned German trench.

While at Headquarters, Gen. Foch bids Gen. Pershing adieu, and returns to Paris.

50,000 Italians march in victory parade in Chicago.

Japanese Prince visits Washington.

A German supergun captured by the Fourth American Army, is exhibited in the Champ de Mars, at Paris.

The "Empress of Britain" brings home another load of doughboys. Among the number is a lot of New York's own Twenty-seventh; many wounded. Greeted only by the ladies of the Red Cross with their ubiquitous coffee and sandwiches. Off to the demobilization camp.

35,000 Yanks pass in great farewell review at Camp Funston. Major-General Wood and General Hoffman, veterans from France, witness great spectacle of American power. Red Cross trailer.

J. Le Roy Drug Joins Hamilton and Kern

An addition to the scenario department of Hamilton & Kern is J. Le Roy Drug, a veteran newspaper man, having been at one time associate editor of a New York daily, and has had several years' experience in the writing game. It is the intention of Hamilton & Kern of making this department the best on the coast, and Mr. Drug, realizing the importance and the vital necessity of the scenario in the moving picture industry, has resigned as business manager of Grauman's theatre so that he may devote his entire attention to this department, and is now busily engaged writing the continuity on a five-reel story for a well known star.

Pegler Takes Charge of Sherry Publicity

Arthur James Pegler, who for the last two years has handled newspaper and magazine publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, has resigned to assume charge of publicity for the Sherry Service.

Mr. Pegler is well known in newspaper circles and is a contributor to the magazines as well as author of several plays.

Pathe Names Eight Months Releases

Paul Brunet Announces Schedule of Pictures for Distributing Within Thirty-five Week Period—Attractions Already Completed from Comprehensive Program

WHAT is declared to be a permanent schedule and subject only to additions of special releases which will in nowise affect the arrangement, is announced by Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

And the period is for eight months, from December 1, 1918, to July 31, 1919. This provides for monthly releases both of the "Extra Selected" and the Program Features. The attractions embrace the Extra Selected Star Photoplays, the Pathe Program Features and the Pathe Special Features.

It is said that thousands of cards already sent to exhibitors throughout the country announcing the long period releasing schedule has met with tremendous success and most satisfactory results.

This schedule is not an unaccomplished plan, but is a statement of completed work and declared to be done without the rush and incomplete finish that go with what Frank Keenan terms the "machine method of making machine pictures."

Pictures All Made

"These pictures have been made, assembled, edited and titled, with ample time for the best possible results," said Mr. Brunet, "and could be ready for immediate distribution, should such a necessity arise. They comprise under the Extra Selected classification the following: Four features starring Fannie Ward; three features starring Frank Keenan; one feature starring Bessie Love; one feature starring Bryant Washburn; total, nine Extra Selected Star Photoplays.

"The Pathe Program Features are as follows: Five features starring Baby Marie Osborne; two features starring Helene Chadwick; one feature starring Henri Krauss; total, eight Pathe Program Features.

"The specials thus far are 'Infatuation,' the pretentious Eclipse production, directed by Louis Mercanton and starring Gaby Deslys, and 'Common Clay,' with Fannie Ward. The strength of the offerings, which will most favorably compare in quality of all essentials to any other production, may be judged by the following summary:

"On December 1st 'Milady o' the Beanstalk,' a five-reel program feature, story by Elizabeth Burbridge, scenario by Clara S. Beranger, produced by Diando and directed by William Bertram.

"December 8th, 'Infatuation.' Pathe Special, starring Gaby Deslys, based on Marcel L'Herbier's romance, directed by Louis Mercanton. The Pathe-colored scenes of a performance in the big Casino de Paris is said to be one of the brilliant and unusual features in this production.

"December 15th, 'The Narrow Path,' a five-reel Extra Selected Fannie Ward Photoplay, adapted for the screen by Ouida Bergere and Jack Cunningham, from A. H. Woods' Broadway production of the same name, directed by George Fitzmaurice and produced by Astra.

"December 29th, 'Dolly's Vacation,' a five-reel program feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne; written by Mrs. George Griffin Lee and directed by William Bertram.

Starting the New Year

"January 12th, 'The Midnight Stage,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Frank Keenan; produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company from a scenario by Jack Cunningham and directed by Ernest C. Warde.

Pearl White as an Ambulance Driver in "King Coal," Made by Pathe for the Fuel Administration

"January 26th, 'A Vagabond of France,' a Program Feature starring Henri Krauss, the original screen Jean Valjean in 'Les Miserables.'

"February 9th, 'Todd of the Times,' Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Frank Keenan, supported by Herschel Mayall, Joseph J. Dowling, Aggie Herring, Buddy Post, George Williams, J. Morley, Irene Rich, Arthur Millette and Ruth Langston.

"February 23rd, 'An Old Maid's Baby,' a Program Feature with Baby Marie Osborne; the story by Agnes C. Johnson and directed by William Bertram.

"March 2nd, 'Common Clay,' a special feature starring Fannie Ward, and based upon the successful A. H. Woods' stage production of the same name. It is in six reels and was produced by Astra, with George Fitzmaurice as the director.

"March 9th, 'Carolyn of the Corners,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Bessie Love. The story is by Ruth Belmore Endicott and arranged for the screen by Frank S. Beresford. It is a product of the Anderson-Brunton Company and was directed by Robert Thornby.

"March 23rd, 'Go Get 'Em Garrity,' a Program Feature with Helene Chadwick. This is a Western story.

"April 6th, 'The Silver Girl,' an Extra Selected, starring Frank Keenan.

"April 30th, 'The Sawdust Doll,' a Program Feature, starring Baby Marie Osborne. Claire DuBrey and Jack Connelly give fine dramatic expression to the romance.

"May 4th, 'Our Better Selves,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Fannie Ward. Supported by Lew Cody, Mrs. Wise, Leo White, Ray Alexander, Robert Boulder, Charles Hills Mailes and Florence Hauser.

"May 18th, 'Caleb Piper's Girl,' a Program Feature, with Helene Chadwick. W. E. Lawrence is the athletic hero.

Three in June

"June 1st, 'All Wrong,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Bryant Washburn. It is by Mildred Considine, and prepared for the screen by Jack Cunningham. It was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company, and directed by William Worthington and Raymond B. West.

"June 15th, 'The Little Diplomat,' a Program Feature, with Baby Marie Osborne, from a story by Burton George. The scenario is the work of Clara S. Beranger and Jack Cunningham. The production was made by Diando and directed by William Bertram. Baby Marie, as the 'Rosebud,' is supported by Morris Foster, Ruth Kind and Thomas Quinn.

"June 29th, 'Our Enemies,' an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, with Fannie Ward, a story of society, politics, patriotism, and the malign influence of a commanding figure in public life.

"July 27th, 'The Cry of the Weak,' Extra Selected Star Photoplay, also starring Miss Ward. These last two offerings are said to form a high peak of dramatic achievement for Miss Ward and take place among her most important work."

"Cannibals" Gets Special Music Score

George W. Beynon, one of the first musicians to inaugurate orchestral scores with pictures, has prepared a complete musical score for Martin Johnson's production, "Cannibals of the South Seas," which is controlled by Robertson-Cole Company and released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation on December 22d.

The score contains many original numbers prepared by Mr. Beynon and has been pronounced by Mr. Johnson as thoroughly synchronizing with the production. This asset to the service in connection with this picture will undoubtedly be welcomed by the exhibitors who will play this production. Its value is evident, especially in a production of this nature which deals with unknown peoples and countries.

Three Productions on Broadway

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Points with Pride to Three Pictures, Showing Broadway in Same Week

AN official of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that two Paramounts and one Artcraft picture were shown at as many leading New York theatres during the same week.

At the Rivoli, Elsie Ferguson in her new Artcraft picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," was the attraction; Enid Bennett, in the Paramount production, "Fuss and Feathers," was at the Rialto, while at the Strand was Wallace Reid in "Too Many Millions," also a Paramount offering.

Miss Ferguson's picture, "Under the Greenwood Tree," directed by Emile Chautard, is based upon Henry V. Esmond's play of the same title in which Maxine Elliott starred some years ago. The screen adaptation is by Adrian Gil-Spear, and the story deals with the adventures of a jaded English society girl of great wealth who deserts her high social circles to take up the simple life of a gypsy and out there in the forest finds a man worth while.

The Thomas H. Ince production, "Fuss and Feathers," in which Enid Bennett is seen at the Rialto, is from an original story and scenario by Julien Josephson and was directed by the star's husband, Fred Niblo. Miss Bennett appears as the daughter of a miner who has struck it rich, and with him she comes East to establish a social position. A meeting with the profligate son of the purchaser of the father's mine results in a series of exciting adventures.

At the Strand, Wallace Reid appeared in "Too Many Millions," an adaptation by Gardner Hunting of Porter Emerson Browne's story, "Someone and Somebody,"

Marguerite Clark, filling Christmas Stockings for the Stage Kiddies at the Famous Players-Lasky Studios

which was directed by James Cruze. It is a tale of a poor young man who suddenly inherits $40,000,000 and doesn't know what to do with it. "'Too Many Millions' has many chuckles," headlined the World. "Mr. Reid's latest vehicle abounds in laughs. The story is too good to tell; it must be seen," observed Mr. Oliphant in the Mail. "There is never a moment this comedy does not hold interest," said the Evening Telegram. "He gives a capital performance," was the comment on the star by Heywood Broun in the Tribune.

"Lightning Raider" Makes Good Impression

ONE of the most representative gatherings of exhibitors ever assembled for a trade showing was present at the special view of the new Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider," featuring Pearl White on the New York Roof recently. The first three episodes of the serial were shown and were received with intense interest by the many picture men present.

As the theme of this serial was unfolded, the exhibitors were unanimous in their praise of this latest output of Pathe Exchange, Inc. That it is the best of the many serials distributed by Pathe was the opinion expressed by a majority of those present, and they even went farther and stated that it was the best serial that Pearl White has ever appeared in.

These comments were particularly gratifying to the Pathe executives present, as they have gone to great pains to have "The Lightning Raider" reveal itself as a forward step in the history of the continued form of screen entertainment. Every effort has been made in the production of "The Lightning Raider" to get away from the impossible creatures and impossible situations that have been so noticeable in many serials. "The Lightning Raider," according to Mr. Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, is a new idea in serials, since it presents a logical story with a logical heroine. It is a serial based on reason instead of imagination, and not a single adventure in the entire fifteen episodes is one that could not have been accomplished in real life by the leading characters.

In addition to the praise of exhibitors, and the further endorsement of "The Lightning Raider" furnished by unprecedented advance bookings, Pathe is particularly proud of a recent comment on this serial by Professor Thomas O. Masaryk, president of the Czecho-Slovak Republic.

Pathe News Says It Will Broaden Scope

The Pathe News, after December 24, will broaden its national scope, and at the same time come into closer relations to the big centers of population, according to an announcement.

For this purpose, more than ever before, it expects to be operated with the efficiency of an up-to-date newspaper as to rapidity of production and circulation.

Jewel Cites Progress of Mildred Harris

The rapidly increasing popularity of Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charlie Chaplin) is being emphasized by exhibitors from various parts of the country in letters to the New York offices of Jewel Productions, Inc., daily.

In California, Oregon and Washington Miss Harris has developed an unusually large following among the film followers and letters from Porto Rico, and even far off Rio Janeiro, tell of how well "The Price of a Good Time" and "Doctor and the Woman" have been received by Jewel executives.

The following letter from Manager S. M. Kasse of the Empress theatre, Akron, Ohio, and a telegram from the Ree theatre at Wahoo, Neb., tell of the success of Miss Harris' two latest Jewel productions in the respective cities:

Akron, Ohio,
Dec. 5, 1918.

Jewell Productions, Inc.:

Just a few lines to express my opinion on your Mildred Harris productions, especially "Borrowed Clothes."

Without any doubt when I had the pleasure of witnessing the above picture, to my mind it is the best production I ever saw. It is far greater and better than "The Price of a Good Time" and a good many makes of films from different producers.

I am glad to say that I have booked "Borrowed Clothes" for one week for the Empress theatre.

I also think that Mildred Harris is more valuable to exhibitors right now and in the future since she is Mrs. Charlie Chaplin.

Mildred Harris has always been a good money getter for me and I expect to do more so on "Borrowed Clothes." And I also wish to state that I have signed a contract with your salesman, Mr. Saks, for all future Mildred Harris releases. And allow me to congratulate you and your concern for having such a comer in the film industry as Mildred Harris.

Yours respectfully,
EMPRESS THEATRE.
(Signed) S. M. Kasse.

Jewel Productions, Inc.:

"For Husbands Only" was an excellent picture pleasing both myself and patrons.

Yours,
REX THEATRE,
Wahoo, Neb.

Garson and Neilan Receive Big Offers

Producers Reported in Receipt of One Offer of $200,000 for the Negative of "The Unpardonable Sin," Starring Blanche Sweet

IN these days of big productions it seems nothing extraordinary to hear of as much as $100,000 being paid for a negative of some few film productions. But it remained for two independent producers to refuse just twice that sum for a negative of a nine-reel production recently completed.

According to reports emanating mostly from Los Angeles, Garson and Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet, has brought forth many liberal offers for the negative.

Harry Garson declares that he has already turned down a $200,000 cash offer and has not yet rendered a decision on another offer of $150,000, with a sharing contract which might double that sum.

Not a War Film

It is asserted that one particular attraction to the prospective buyer is that the war element does not predominate, and that "The Unpardonable Sin" is one of the really powerful productions of the year.

While some uniforms are worn in the film, the theme is declared to be so intense otherwise that the presence of the brass buttons is scarcely noted.

Messrs. Garson and Neilan announce that territorial rights on this production are not for sale. They contemplate making a big special exploitation campaign and play the larger houses throughout the country.

Beginning New Year's week the production starts a run at Clune's Auditorium at Los Angeles, and it is said that immediately following the showing on the West Coast the eastern premiere will be inaugurated at a leading Broadway theatre for a long run in New York at advanced prices.

Major Rupert Hughes' story of "The Unpardonable Sin" is said to be the biggest seller he ever wrote, and the book is reported as standing forth on all the best sellers of the year.

While not a war story, it is based on the world's greatest struggle, and, from all reports, it is full of intensely dramatic human interest.

Blanche Sweet comes back to the screen after an eighteen months' absence in what is declared to be the crowning achievement of her career. Matt Moore is her leading man, and the entire cast is said to be especially strong and in keeping with the calibre of the production.

Miss Sweet is reported as already on her way back to Los Angeles after her short visit to New York, and will start immediately at work on another Garson-Neilan production.

Now in Nine Parts

After cutting and assembling and also inserting the various sub-titles, the producers find that it will run nine instead of eight reels, originally contemplated. And Messrs. Garson and Neilan both declare that there is no padding, but that the film is full of action and human interest in every foot of its nine reels.

The story starts in Los Angeles, after which the scenes quickly shift to Belgium. Blanche Sweet plays two parts, the wronged sister and the sister that braves everything to save the wronged one.

Walter Beery is cast as Colonel Klem, the German officer who imposes "kultur" upon a defenseless American girl in Belgium.

Miss Sweet is "Dimmy," the young American girl who left Los Angeles for Belgium when she learned that her sister was in trouble. After receiving help in England, Dimmy arrives at the Dutch border, but discovers that her passport is useless.

While attempting to slip over the line at night she attracts the attention of a German officer. He happens to be Colonel Klem, the officer who had mistreated Dimmy's sister, and mistook Dimmy for her sister, Alice, as they looked so much alike; although he has had such a ruthless career with women that he does not even recall the exact circumstances of his original meeting with the wronged sister.

Crosses Belgium Border

Dimmy meets Noll Winsor, a young American, who promises to help her. On his next trip into Belgium he succeeds in smuggling Dimmy across the line. Colonel Klem discovers them and, still unable to recall where he had seen Dimmy before, he decides that she is a spy and has her subjected to the German method of searching suspects.

From then on the many tense situations are said to develop with astonishing rapidity. Dimmy finally foils the machinations of the German Government and is re-united with her sweetheart and sister.

The great difficulties of obtaining the final scenes of this production have already been noted. In one of the big scenes nearing the climax the health authorities in charge of the restrictions during the influenza epidemic stopped work on the production.

It required many doctors and twenty-five nurses armed with inoculators and the entire force wearing gas masks to finally receive permission to take the last stirring scenes of "The Unpardonable Sin."

FOUR MILLION PATRONS STRONG

A Glance Into the Future with Phil Le Noir, of Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Awake! Ye Wizards of the Screen—
Awake! And gaze!—the throng!
Four million men are marching home,
Four million patrons strong.

Think not these men of brain and brawn,
These men of blood that's red
Will squander precious time and gold
On stuff that's weak and dead.

No more the fluff and folderol;
No more the bones, but Flesh
That teems with Life just as it is Just that and nothing less.

Prepare ye then for that great day.
Prepare! For 'twon't be long
Ere those four million men will be
Four million patrons strong.

Herbert Brenon Returns to United States

Herbert Brenon, who has been in England for the past eight months, has returned to America, it was learned yesterday.

Mr. Brenon left this country last January in response to a call from the English Government to make a British propaganda picture. Under the auspices of the Minister of Information, Lord Beaverbrook, Mr. Brenon has been engaged on its production ever since. Immediately upon its completion Mr. Brenon sailed for America, arriving on the S. S. Lapland a few days ago.

Mr. Brenon did not bring his latest production over with him, but he expects that it will be shown in London within the next few weeks. He did not wait for the premiere, however.

Mr. Brenon finds that the British field p esents untold of possibilities for the producer, but just what his plans for the immediate future are he has not divulged.

"Sahara" Nears Completion on Coast

"Sahara," the first of the Louise Glaum feature productions is rapidly nearing completion. According to those associated in the making of it, including the star, the supervising director, Allan Dwan, and the author, C. Gardner Sullivan, "Sahara" will be a protodramatic sensation of the new year.

Intensely dramatic, spectacular in settings and powerfully impregnated with the atmosphere of the East, Miss Glaum's initial super-vehicle promises to establish a new standard of the modern story in an ancient setting.

The dramatic role opposite Miss Glaum is taken by Matt Moore. Edwin Stevens has the heavy part, and Pat Moore, the four-year-old child actor, also plays a role.

Brabin Directs Next for Evelyn Nesbit

Charles J. Brabin, who directed Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife" will direct the next William Fox Standard Picture to be made by Evelyn Nesbit. Miss Nesbit is now finishing "Woman! Woman!" under the direction of Kenean Buel.

The Fox Film Corporation, it is said, is negotiating for the picture rights to a big popular novel, published recently, this story being considered exceptionally suited for Miss Nesbit's style of work.

Rogers Signs Up With Goldwyn

Goldfish Closes Contract at Cleveland While on Tour of Country—To Be Starred in Human Dramas

WILL ROGERS, star of Ziegfeld's "Follies," who scored a personal triumph in Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," recently released by Goldwyn, is the latest addition to Goldwyn's group of personalities.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, placed Rogers under contract during his visit in Cleveland en route to the Coast. The cowboy wit and lariat-thrower will be starred in original dramas, selected or written for him by Goldwyn authors.

Goldwyn has been negotiating with Will Rogers ever since "Laughing Bill Hyde" was released, because his personal success was so instantaneous and unquestionable that there could be no doubt of his future in the cinema. His quaint humor and remarkable humanness have stamped him as the most picturesque star on the screen today.

The contract between the Goldwyn Corporation and Will Rogers was signed while Rogers was playing with the "Follies" in Cleveland. When the news of the affiliation was confirmed by Mr. Goldfish, the Cleveland newspapers featured the story in bold headlines, announcing the acquisition of the new favorite as "another achievement of Goldwyn."

The stories to be provided for Will Rogers will be big, gripping, human dramas of life itself. Following the expiration of his contract with Flo Ziegfeld, Rogers will move his family to Culver City, where he will take up his permanent screen work in the big Goldwyn studios.

Motion picture followers are enthusiastically applauding the acquisition of Will Rogers as a Goldwyn star. The success of "Laughing Bill Hyde" in every locality of the country won for Rogers a following that is equalled by few stars of the stage or screen. His radiant personality and his natural impersonation of the crook who was redeemed by the kindness of others charmed and delighted the most critical of screen adherents.

Hun Fleet Surrender Quickly Distributed

UNIVERSAL executives are claiming the establishment of a new record for the expedient handling of a news film as a result of what has been accomplished in bringing "The Surrender of the German Fleet" before the public.

Having obtained pictures of the surrender of the German fleet, negatives showing the ceremonies were rushed to America on the Adriatic.

After waiting for the arrival of the White Star liner all of two nights and days, Universal representatives were able to get their negatives through the Customs House at half-past four on Thursday, December 12.

Fort Lee laboratories obtained the negative one hour and a half later, and, after editing and cutting, the first print was shown at the Broadway theatre at ten o'clock the same day.

Breaks House Record

The Universal home office, New York, reports that it is in daily receipt of letters of commendation on various Jewel productions, the following being one of many received during the past few days.

Mr. J. W. Kliger, manager of the Hopkinson theatre, New York, played "Borrowed Clothes," November 30 and December 1, and has the following to say regarding business recorded on the feature:

"I think it would be unfair on my part not to inform you how I fared with your Jewel Production featuring Mildred Harris in 'Borrowed Clothes.' The publicity for this picture was a mere trifle compared to what I spent for other pictures.

"The enclosed circular will enlighten you as to how I succeeded in making your feature break the record of the house.

"I ran 'Borrowed Clothes' in conjunction with an old Charlie Chaplin picture last Saturday and Sunday and I wish to state that from start to finish S. R. O. sign was always noticeable."

Blackton Picture Pleases Vitagraph

The reception given to J. Stuart Blackton's new production, "The Common Cause," at its initial presentation to exhibitors at the Rialto theatre, New York City, last week, is said to be duplicated all over the country in the Vitagraph exchange cities.

Private showings for groups of exhibitors have been in progress throughout all of the Vitagraph branch offices and the entire Vitagraph distributing organization is enthusiastic over the reception that is being given the picture.

Following its trade showing in New York, all of the trade papers were favorable in their reviews of the picture and their predictions of contemplated exhibitor success with the production.

Court Decides Suit in Favor of Pathe

In a suit instituted against Pathe Exchange, Inc., for an accounting for the receipts from the Pearl White serial, "The Iron Claw," claiming plagiarism and infringement of copyright, Prince Sarath Ghosh not only lost the case, but the court settled all the costs upon him.

The Prince had written several stories which were published in Pearson's Magazine, and had also prepared a sort of memorandum of ideas which might be inserted in a serial and submitted them to Pathe's scenario department. After the appearance of "The Iron Claw" he claimed that many of these ideas were used, according to report, but the court could not see it.

Universal Laboratory Almost Completed

J. M. Nickolaus, superintendent of the laboratories at Universal City, has informed the New York offices that the rebuilding of the present laboratories is started and that it will be completed within a short time.

The re-built laboratories will occupy a structure 60 by over 100 feet.

Select Pictures Is Exploiting a Big Special Attraction Called "The Midnight Patrol," Produced by Thomas H. Ince. It is Said to be an Unusual Feature

Ann May Learns Stunts Plentifully

How'd you like to suffer three mishaps during one production which confined you to bed and then return to the studio to learn that your "next scene" was—a hospital scene? That was the experience of Ann May, playing Barbara Rand in "The Family Honor," a Frank C. Keeney feature produced under Sidney Olcott's direction. The latter asked Miss May, who is only in her teens, to drop 75 feet from an "inn window" at Edgewood, N. J., and Miss Bay successfully essayed it but fainted upon being taken, unscathed, from the net. While Miss May is not distinguished as a "stunt" actress, her next scene called for a roll down an embankment. She had to be assisted to the top of the bank by "Griff," property man, as progress was not easy in the Vivandiere costume and wooden shoes that Miss May wore. But "Griff's" assistance, though well meant and usually efficient, failed for once and the actress stumbled over a rock and did a "backward fall" that was not in the picture. Gritty, she picked herself up and went to the spot of the embankment, where the "roll-off" for the camera was schedpled. This was over forty feet of ground, some of it very rugged—and Miss May woke up in her own bed at Hotel Bretton Hall, Manhattan, with Dr. Erdman and a nurse close by in the place of Director Olcott and the cameraman.

Film Division Schedules Four

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information is distributing to exhibitors a leaflet announcing the U. S. A. Series, a collective series of two-reelers, each dealing with some vital war activity, illustrating the methods and the successful results attained. The first of the series will be released December 23rd, with a new release following every two weeks. The pictures in the order of their release are as follows: "If Your Soldier's Hit," "Wings of Victory," "Making a Nation Fit," "The Bath of Bullets," and "The Storm of Steel."

"Midnight Patrol" Stars Cop

Ince Is Said to Have Made This Select Production Especially for the Policeman — Exhibitor Has Good Opportunity

THE corner cop has stood for a good deal in his more or less turbulent career, but the millennium dawn for this guardian of the peace is here at last, in the form of Select Pictures special attraction, "The Midnight Patrol." With the distribution of this big Thomas H. Ince production the policeman comes into his own, and also, the exhibitor has one of the richest opportunities for advertising ever contained in any picture.

Thomas H. Ince is said to have produced "The Midnight Patrol" for the policeman. In a recently published story, authorized by Mr. Ince, he declared that "The Midnight Patrol" was written and produced for the purpose of crediting the policeman with a few of his many unheralded achievements. The plot of the story is woven around the life of a young patrolman, portrayed by Thurston Hall, depicting his rapid advance from the rank of roundsman to chief of the force. The scenes are laid in the Chinese section of one of the largest Western cities, while the story itself deals with the life of a Chinese underworld. Throughout the entire picture the policeman is the hero.

Without any known exception there has never been a picture in which the policeman, individually, and as a department, has been shown to such good advantage, and in the face of this it is easy to believe that the average policeman will be a ready champion and willing to aid in boosting for the exhibitors who show this special feature.

There have been several suggestions offered for enlisting the co-operation of the exhibitor's local police department in advertising "The Midnight Patrol." While a few of the suggestions might not appeal to the police in larger cities, there is every reason to believe that the police of the smaller cities and towns will willingly lend their efforts to push this picture.

Mr. Ince produced "The Midnight Patrol" with the welfare of the policeman in mind. It will be an easy matter, therefore, for exhibitors to arrange a private showing for the policemen of their town, and unless the calculations of the shrewdest students of human phychology go amiss, these knights of the night stick are going to be the best advertising medium in town. It will be possible, even, for some exhibitors who are on good terms with their police captain or chief, to arrange a short parade, or to have a squad of policemen stationed in front of their theatre on the day they show this attraction.

World Pictures Reports Great Prosperity

World Pictures reports that it is having the most prosperous period of its existence at the present moment, and that every branch exchange is going at full capacity due to the renewed interest in motion pictures as the reflex of war conditions.

The World is reaching out with perfect assurance that it is seizing the moment at its flood tide. In addition to its regular weekly releases of pictures in which Montagu Love, Louise Huff, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge and Madge Evans are the stars, it has arranged for a number of specials, including "America's Answer," "Under Four Flags" and a picture of the moment entitled "What Shall We Do With Him?"

Nine Companies Active for William Fox

No fewer than nine companies are now at work, in the East and on the Pacific Coast, making pictures for William Fox, three of the companies having begun on new productions last week.

At the Triangle studio in Yonkers, J. Gordon Edwards is staging a super-production temporarily titled "The Scarlet Altars." The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley, and was scenarioized by Adrian Johnson, who wrote the scenario for "Salome."

Why Are We So Optimistic?

A Question Answered by Carl Laemmle

DESPITE the fact that the influenza epidemic dealt us a hard blow and the war brought many restrictions and limitations on film production, it is doubtful if any industry will "come back" so strong in 1919 as the motion picture industry.

Sounds optimistic, doesn't it? Well, there are many reasons why motion picture men should be optimistic.

The armistice has not only brought about peace, but it has created a new, lighter spirit among Americans. It will mean the return of two millions of our boys that have caused us much worry and heartache, from the shell-torn fields of France, heroes every one of them. Their return will mean nothing less than the re-birth of a nation—a nation that has saved the world for righteousness and has asked nothing in return. Certainly this new spirit should create a wonderful change in business conditions.

With light-hearted, alert America again at peace, business should thrive as never before, for America will resume her industrial pursuits with renewed vigor. The motion picture industry will not be found wanting in enthusiams or energy.

Among the returning heroes will be many writers, actors, exploiters. Many new writers with new and novel plots for photoplay production will spring up within the next few months and then there will be many old established authors with an abundance of new and appealing material for the screen.

It is not likely that taxes on various articles used in the production of films will be lifted for many months to come, but with a better market, producers will not hesitate to put more money into productions next year for they realize the future of the industry depends on a better product and better presentation.

The new year will bring motion picture producers aid from many new sources—

among these the Government. The war has proven to Government officials the great good of the screen and as a result Uncle Sam has trained several hundred motion picture cameramen, laboratory men and even scenario writers. Many negatives obtained by army and navy signal corps cinematographers will be obtainable by film producers in the future and it is expected that the Government will give film men help in many other ways.

In speaking of the work of the Universal organization among its initial releases in 1919 will be "The Heart of Humanity," a photodrama produced by Allen Holubar, featuring Dorothy Phillips, and which possesses an unusually strong appeal to the theatre-going public, especially the women. This feature will be the biggest and most impressive Universal ever made.

This proves that we are optimistic.

Universal City Folk to Celebrate Christmas

Universal City will be temporarily forgotten Christmas Day, for employes of the great motion picture center will celebrate this year as they never have before.

Following the annual studio Christmas party December 24, stars, directors, supporting players, carpenters, laboratory men and photographers will scatter all over the Coast for their St. Nick parties.

Dorothy Phillips will spend Christmas with her husband, Allen Holubar, in New York, as will also Mae Murray and her director, Robert Z. Leonard.

Harry Carey will give a turkey barbecue at his ranch at Newhall, Cal., and about one hundred cowboys and their friends will participate in the celebration.

Carmel Myers will distribute baskets of food and gifts to the Los Angeles poor folk before her celebration starts, and Eddie Lyons will provide merriment for newsies at a big Christmas party at the Los Angeles Newsboys' Club.

Lee Moran will be kept busy preventing his two-months' old daughter from chewing up a new speaking teddy bear, and Priscilla Dean will motor over to Riverside to hear Christmas carols played on a mammoth pipe organ.

Edith Roberts and Mary MacLaren are going to celebrate their Christmas with Uncle Sam's boys, the former being hostess to a score of army aviators at her bungalow in Hollywood, while the latter will wait upon her naval proteges at San Pedro.

Monroe Salisbury will share his celebration at his Hemet ranch with chieftains of the Soboba tribe, and William Stowell will hie himself to a mountain cabin to spend Christmas where the snow-covered ground will bring reminders of boyhood days.

Helen Gibson will perhaps be the happiest of the Universalites this Christmas, for her husband, "Hoots" Gibson, will return from a year's service in war-torn France on the twenty-fifth. Ruth Clifford will celebrate with her mother in her home at Los Angeles.

Crowned Heads Enjoy William Fox Film

NOT only has "The Honor System," the prison reform film staged by R. A. Walsh for William Fox, had a big following in this country but in other countries also it is said to be creating a sensation by reason of its strong dramatic qualities and the message it carries. Copies of Christiania newspapers received by the Fox Film Corporation show that the King of Norway, the Crown Prince and other Norwegian notables recently attended a showing of "The Honor System" in the Cirkus Werdensteater, one of the principal playhouses of the Norwegian capital.

The clippings from the Christiania newspapers show that unique honors were paid "The Honor System," as the film was accepted as a text upon which Mr. Morgenstierns, secretary of the Norwegian Department of Prisons, delivered an address for the reform of Norwegian penal institutions.

In its account of the showing the Aftenblatt, the leading Christiania newspaper, has this to say:

"There was a distinguished assembly yesterday at the Cirkus Werdensteater—headed by the King and Crown Prince. Among the visitors were the members of the Storthing, the Chief Justice, the president and several of the university professors, who naturally take a great interest in prison reforms. And it must be pointed out that the film, 'The Honor System' agitates very powerfully for reforms of the prison system."

New Reel a Success

That the Pathe Review, the new film Magazine of Interesting Topics to be released by Pathe every other week commencing January 19th, is going to be one of the most popular subjects ever issued by this firm, was evidenced last week when the first reel was shown to the trade on the Roof of the New York theatre.

Bob Cummings Engaged by S-L Productions

Arthur H. Sawyer, general manager of the newly formed organization known as "S-L Productions," announced the acquisition of another well-known player to the cast engaged for the company's first picture.

Bob Cummings, the actor in question, is known to theatre audiences for his characterizations on stage and screen for the past ten years.

"Little Miss Hoover" Is Clark's Next Film

Marguerite Clark, Paramount star, who will next be seen in "Little Miss Hoover," a release of December 29th, has finished her newest Paramount picture, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and has gone on her long-deferred honeymoon, although her marriage to Lieut. H. Palmerson Williams took place last summer.

Goldwyn Reaches Its Second Birthday

Finds Self with World-Wide Organization and Exhibitor Contracts Numbering Over Six Thousand—Resume of the Business Shows Healthy Condition

ACCORDING to an announcement this week, the chief points of Christmas cheer within the Goldwyn Pictures organization are "expansion and prosperity." The holiday season incidentally finds Goldwyn Pictures and the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation celebrating their second birthday, all the while gaining in weight and importance and believed in and respected by all elements of the industry, especially by the more than 6,000 exhibitor-customers with whom Goldwyn does business under contracts.

In the estimation of Goldwyn officials, the picture industry does not present another parallel to the Goldwyn development. In the fall of 1916 Samuel Goldfish, then lately retired as chairman of the board of Famous Players-Lasky, decided to re-enter the industry on a larger scale.

Selects His Partners

Into his new organization he invited Edgar and Archibald Selwyn and the Goldwyn trade name represents a merger of the "gold" in Goldfish and the "wyn" in Selwyn. The initial Goldwyn policy was to produce and release annually twenty-six productions and the stars of these productions were Mary Garden, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Jane Cowl and Maxine Elliott. Long before the first year of Goldwyn had come to an end, those who ruled the destinies of the organization had seen it attain the important position in the industry that awaited a producer of quality productions and realized that in its second year there would have to be a doubling of production to meet the demands of the theatre owners of the country.

In consequence, the second releasing year of Goldwyn began with an announced production of fifty pictures for the year and the celebrated stars offered by the organization were, and are, Geraldine Farrar, the Rex Beach productions, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore, a likeable leading man whose personal popularity grew to be such that he was elevated to stardom.

On his recent cross-country tour to California, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, while stopping over at an exhibitors' banquet in Minneapolis, dwelt on this point in the following words:

"In Goldwyn we do not profess to be superhuman. Not all of our pictures have been perfect and not all of them will be, for that is an impossibility. But the measure of the big and fine things we have done and continue to do far outweighs the lesser things in which we have not been quite so successful, and everything that we do reveals a sincerity and intensity of effort by fine craftsmen seeking to achieve the better things in the motion picture industry."

Heads Very Successful

Next in rank in the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to Mr. Goldfish comes Abraham Lehr, recently made a vice-president and in charge of the company's California studios in Los Angeles. Thirteen months ago he had never seen the interior of a studio and did not know positive film from negative film.

In the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation Alfred Weiss, one of the best known figures in the film industry, and F. P. Warren, for many years a successful editor and publisher of newspapers in several of the country's larger cities, have been vice-presidents from the day the company was organized. They have given their thought and effort to the creation of a distinctive, wholesome, unusual mechanism in which they have rewarded and advanced from the field the men who showed promise or achieved results for the company. Distributions are by no means formed over night, nor is good will a mere matter of clever exploitation and printed promises. It has to have behind it the strength of promises kept; of business honor and cleanliness. An evidence of the nation-wide regard for Goldwyn is found in the fact that today, in a crowded industry of many companies, Goldwyn Pictures are shown in 50 per cent, and perhaps even more than that percentage of the total number of theatres in the United States.

Goldwyn in England

In Great Britain the Goldwyn distribution is in affiliation with the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., owned by Oswald Stoll, the largest amusement factor in the United Kingdom. In Australia the Goldwyn affiliation is the J. C. Williamson Film Company, Ltd. The three managing directors of the Williamson interests, F. W. Thring, George Tallis and Hugh Ward, are all well known to American motion picture and theatrical magnates.

Gabriel L. Hess is the other member of the Goldwyn executive family. He is the secretary and treasurer of Goldwyn, as well as general counsel of the two Goldwyn organizations.

The biggest step taken by Goldwyn in recent months was the decision to move all production work to California, where the big Triangle plant changed its name to the Goldwyn studios, giving the company one of the finest producing studios in the industry. There, in association with Mr. Lehr, are Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, and J. G. Hawks, one of the most successful scenario men in the industry.

Harry R. Duran, well-known literary man, remains in New York, where at this time he devotes the greater part of his work to discovering and purchasing the literary material used by Goldwyn.

Goldwyn publicity, which has had much to do with the advancement of the company because of its soundness and freedom from fakeries and absurdities, is in charge of Dwight S. Perrin, director of publicity. Louis Sherwin is general press representative in charge of magazine promotion. Mr. Perrin is a well known newspaper man of long experience, and was the first editor of the New York Tribune's graphic section. Mr. Sherwin was for eight years the dramatic critic of the New York Globe, with a record for independence and soundness of view. On the Pacific Coast Norbert Lusk, detailed from the home office organization, is in charge of publicity and exhibitor exploitation.

One of the most carefully developed departments of Goldwyn is its exhibitors' service department, in charge of Hunt Stromberg, a young St. Louis advertising agency man.

Distribute for Others

Shortly after its organization the Goldwyn distributing mechanism announced its readiness to distribute the worthy and reputable productions of independent producers. Coincident with this it was announced that Hall Caine's "The Manxman," would be the first outside picture taken for distribution. "For the Freedom of the World," a Philadelphia-made picture, directed by Ira M. Lowry, came next, being one of the striking independent market box-office successes of the past year.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons conceived the idea of Capitol Comedies, and gave their distribution into the hands of Goldwyn.

Three Selexart productions, "Honor's Cross," "Social Ambition" and "Blue Blood" have met with success during the same period.

A new organization, owned by Philadelphia capitalists, headed by Senator Clarence Wolf and including Ira M. Lowry and Norman Jefferies, has likewise sought the advantages of Goldwyn distribution. This is the Betzwood Film Company, owners of "For the Freedom of the East," a romantic melodrama featuring Lady Tsen Mei, the first Chinese star of the screen, and long known in vaudeville.

The newest and most ambitious step by the Betzwood organization is the production of six Star Series pictures with Louis Bennison as their new and certain-to-be-liked personality. Incidentally, Louis Bennison's screen debut is set for December 22, and his first story is "Oh, Johnny!"

Shown in War Review

The passing of Prussianism, the coming of peace and the era of reconstruction will be among the incidents shown in the Official War Review Number 24, for release December 9. Further scenes will be given of the stirring actions of the armies of the Allies along the extended front. The French baby tanks and the more formidable appearing English monsters are shown in their work of finally crushing the Hun.

Correct Casting Very Essential

King W. Vidor, Author-Director, Believes That the Director Capable of Selecitng Proper Casts is Most Successful

KING W. VIDOR, who wrote and directed "The Turn in the Road" for the Brentwood Film Corporation, believes that if the author of a story is also the director and has real casting ability, the result should be a perfect rendering of the characters in the story.

"It is as difficult to pick the most important item in the entire art of making a feature picture as to name the most indispensable part of an automobile," declared Mr. Vidor.

"However, since the action of the play could not be shown without people to act it should at least be safe to claim for the cast equal importance with other items and to require for the success of a director the combination of directing ability and casting ability.

"The leaders in the directing profession are popularly credited with possessing a sixth sense in choosing their players, but it would probably be nearer the truth to say of them that, like thorough workmen, they learned their art through long apprenticeship, close study and hard work until their trained glance will single out the one person fitted for a part from the many available in less time thaa a beginner could make notes for a careful analysis.

"Since no two persons can, in the nature of things, form identical conceptions of the same story, the ideal condition would seem to be that where the author directs his own picturization.

"This is the condition obtaining in the filming of 'The Turn in the Road,' which was written and directed by myself for the Brentwood Film Corporation, and which is expected to be ready for release very shortly.

"This picture demanded the extreme of realism and naturalness in its treatment, for it deals with life of today as it is known by the average American," continued Mr. Vidor. "Its humor, pathos, suspense, and climax are drawn from every day life. Over action or over characterization would ruin the picture. The utmost naturalness was required in the portrayal of every main part."

Fox Cites Tremendous Audience Growth

THE recent assertion of William Fox that motion picture audiences have increased 100 per cent. in the last two years has caused considerable speculation in the industry, and is reported to have given several producers food for serious reflection. That this estimate of the increase in motion picture patrons is not an exaggeration is borne out by reports on the success of the William Fox Big Six of 1918—a series of past successes which were released by the Fox Film Corporation last summer.

Not only did this group—Theda Bara in "The Clemenceau Case," "The Two Orphans," and "A Fool There Was," and William Farnum in "The Bondman," "The Plunderer" and "A Soldier's Oath"—prove a great success during the summer, but continued through the fall and gave every promise of being a powerful attraction for a long time to come.

Letters from exhibitors to the Fox Film Corporation are said emphasize the very point that Mr. Fox raised—that these pictures, despite tremendous successes in their original form, are new to fifty per cent. of the present motion picture public.

In commenting this week on the success of the new versions of the Big Success, Herman Robbins, asssitant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in charge of the corporation's affairs during the absence of the general manager, Winfield R. Sheehan—who is on a trip to all the Fox exchanges in the country—declared that the record of the Big Six, since the first release, has been an itemized corroboration of Mr. Fox's statement.

"Not only have these pictures," said Mr. Robbins, "attracted the people who did not see them in their original form, but they have brought into the theatres the friends these productions made when they were first released."

Famous Players Makes Staff Changes

A number of changes in the sales force of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have been announced by Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution.

S. R. Kent, formerly associated with Hiram Abrams in the administrative bureau at the home office, and more recently branch manager at Kansas City, has been made special representative to exchanges.

Fred C. Creswell, formerly sales manager at the Chicago office, also becomes special representative to exchanges.

W. R. Scates who, before becoming associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was manager for General Film at St. Louis and Milwaukee and handled "The Crisis" in Middle Western territory and has recently been dividing the responsibilities of the Chicago branch with Mr. Creswell, now assumes full charge of the office.

Albert Austin Re-engaged by Chaplin

Albert Austin, who appeared with Charlie Chaplin as a member of the Fred Karno Company during its tour of England, France and America, has been put under contract by the comedian to play leads in future First National releases, and to assist him in production.

Mr. Austin left the varieties stage for motion pictures when Mr. Chaplin was producing for Mutual Film Corporation, and has continued to work with him up to the time the contract was signed with First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

He's Out of Sight!

There is one official actor in J. Stuart Blackton's newest super-feature, "The Common Cause," now being booked by the Vitagraph Distributing Corporation, who is quite important to the production although invisible. He is Captain Richard Haig, the well-known British author-officer. Captain Haig distinguished himself in the memorable battle of the Somme. He and his "Treat 'em Rough" crew were then sent to America to man the tank "Britannia" in its recruiting work here.

General Reports Inquiries for "Married Virgin"

Since the announcement of the Maxwell production release of "The Married Virgin," which will be at all General Film Company exchanges in a few days, inquiries have come into the General Film Company exchanges regarding the nature of the film.

"If the title arouses that much interest among exhibitors," said Joe Maxwell, the producer, "it ought to arouse the strongest possible sort of attention from the public."

It is stated that the story of "The Married Virgin," which is by Hayden Talbot, mingles thrills with psychology in a strange domestic complication. There are five principal characters and all of them have very strong work to do.

How a rich man's skeleton in the closet steps out to open the door for a social marauder to enter the household forms the nub of the plot. Vera Sisson, Rodolfe di Valentina and Kathleen Kirkham form the trio of stars who figure most prominently in the ensuing complications.

Three Leading People in "The Married Virgin"

Chosen for their peculiar adaptability to the roles which they have chosen to portray in "The Married Virgin," Maxwell Productions announces three leading people in this feature offering.

Kathleen Kirkham, Vera Sisson and Rodolpho di Valentina are seen as principals in the story by Hayden Talbot.

Vera Sisson was formerly leading woman with J. Warren Kerrigan. She has already done pictures for Metro and for Biograph.

Kathleen Kirkham is said to do the best work of her career in "The Married Virgin."

Rodolpho di Valentina, who has appeared opposite many great screen stars, is cast as a new type of villain. Other well known people in the production are Edward Jobsen, Frank Newberg and Lillian Leighton.

Jinx Threatens Filming of "Challenge Accepted"

When Director Edwin L. Hollywood completed the scenes taken at Camp Dix, Wrightstown, New Jersey, for the first Arden photoplay, "The Challenge Accepted," in which Zena Keefe is starring, he sighed in relief, for a jinx threatened the work to the end.

The military scenes required but the work of a day, and Thursday was the day planned. No sooner had they arrived than a heavy rain fell and continued all day. The next day the sun shone bright and everything promised well until the cameraman fell off a fifty-foot platform and crashed through the roof of the Y. M. C. A.

Fox Sees Successful Year Ahead

Having Completed Successful Year, William Fox Is Confident That Coming Year Will Be More Prosperous

William Fox Presents Charlotte Walker in "Every Mother's Son"

HAVING just put the Fox Film Corporation through the most successful year of its history, William Fox is confident that the coming year will be even more prosperous for the motion picture industry.

The end of the war, he states, is bringing a rapid removal of the restrictions which for the last year and a half have surrounded the production and exhibition of films, so that in 1919 the motion picture business will be operating on a peace basis.

"If ever the motion picture producer and exhibitor had a chance to make money, it is in the year now before us," continued Mr. Fox. "The war, with all its uncertainties, its anguish and its hardships, is gone, and the people are getting back to normal.

"It is safe to say that the United States never faced a period of greater prosperity than that which now lies before it. With Europe prostrated by more than four years of war, this country stands as the only one upon which the rest of the world can rely for food and the material necessary to reconstruction. Thus 1919 will see the beginning of an era of development that will be without parallel in the history of the world.

"This commercial and industrial development can mean only one thing for the motion picture—prosperity.

"But if the war has made America dominant among the nations of the earth, it also has worked changes in the people's outlook on life; and the motion picture producer or exhibitor who fails to take heed of these changes will find himself in grave difficulties.

"One of these changes is a transformation in the taste of the public. For a year and a half the American people have heroically deprived themselves of many luxuries—even necessities—to help win the war. Now that the need for this sacrifice is past it is unthinkable that they will be content with the same entertainment that has satisfied them in the past.

"For four years the world has gone down into the depths of sorrow and anguish. The people have been looking at a tremendous screen, on which they saw real heroism, real sacrifice, real drama, real sorrow, real happiness. And it stands to reason that they will demand more than cheap travesties, insipid love stories and picture plays without body or soul.

"The plays the American people will demand are pictures of real, flesh-and-blood human beings, enacting real, human life stories.

"It has long been my contention that the day of the 'prettified drama' was passing; that the American people deserved something better, and the Fox Film Corporation's basic policy is to give these better plays—big, vital stories enacted by stars and supporting casts of recognized talent and drawing power. This policy, needless to say, will be continued during 1919—and will be developed.

"Another factor which will have an important bearing on the motion picture industry next year is the return of some 4,000,000 men to civilian life."

Mix Two-Reel Comedies Released by Fox

In his tour of all the William Fox exchanges in the United States, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has found that one of the big difficulties confronting the exhibitors is that of obtaining two-reel comedy subjects of sufficiently high quality.

Conversations with numerous exhibitors is declared to have revealed also a strong demand for all Tom Mix subjects.

Because of these two factors, the Fox Film Corporation, it was announced this week, intends to release its two-reel Tom Mix comedy subjects, which, as part of the Foxfilm Comedy brand, were among the most popular comedies.

It was these plays that brought Tom Mix before the motion picture public of the country, and, because of his work in them, went a great way to establishing him on his present foundation.

The Tom Mix two-reel comedy releases will be started January 12, a Tom Mix comedy being released every other week alternately with a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy.

A Moment in "Little Women," the William A. Brady Production Which Paramount Has Secured for Distribution

Newest Maciste Film Is Shown

Giant Italian Star Appears in "The Liberator," a Twenty-four-Reel Production Controlled by Raver.

"WHOEVER heard of asking a critic to contemplate twenty-four thousand feet of pictures in one production, much less sit through it all and then try to remember what he saw?" said one reviewer when requested by Harry Raver to attend a press showing of "The Liberator," his newest production starring the Italian soldier-star, "Maciste," who was also the stellar figure in Gabrielle d'Annunzio's "Cabiria," and Mr. Raver's more recent importation, "The Warrior."

Yet the original plan of a complete showing of "The Liberator" was carried out, except that two sessions of two and one-half hours each were allowed the reviewers instead of one long stretch of five hours, the total time of projection. And, according to Raver, the experiment was a success beyond his wildest expectations.

It proved, he said, his contention that the exhibitor should know all about a series of pictures before he books them and should not be kept in ignorance about the quality of any number of episodes of a production.

That there was some slight diversity of opinion among the critics may be accounted for by the fact that they had never before sat through a complete series and that the episodes were not broken up by synopsis titles, as is the custom when releasing such a production.

At any rate, each reviewer had his opinion and none of them agreed, which, as Harry Raver explained, "leads me to believe I have an unusual production, and, without doubt, should arouse comment."

Commenting further on the reviews of "The Liberator," Mr. Raver said: "One reviewer said the production lacked the weirdness and thrills of the American serial, while another said it was the most weird and unusual film he had ever seen. The first reviewer objected to deep sets and massive interiors and said there were too few close-ups.

"Another said a noticeable quality was the massiveness of settings and the minuteness of detail so rarely found in American productions, and that close-ups were used only when necessary to register an important bit of business and not shoved in to satisfy the vanity of a star."

"The Liberator" went into production over a year ago and suffered many difficulties owing to the demands on members of the cast for military duty.

Harry Raver is said to be considering several offers for the purchase of the entire North American rights before giving definite decisions in the matter of selling individual territories to buyers of previous "Maciste" productions.

G. R. Meeker General Sales Manager for World

World Pictures announces the engagement of George R. Meeker, lately connected with the Division of Films, in charge of the distribution of the official Government pictures, as general sales manager of World Pictures. Mr. Meeker will assume his new position on January 1.

Mr. Meeker's entry into the picture business was inaugurated when Klaw & Erlanger entered into an arrangement with the Biograph company, following which he became an exhibitor and specialized on taking over small theatres, building up their business, creating circuits and then disposing of them.

After successfully following this line of endeavor, he was engaged by the Paramount company and put in charge of their short reels, both as regards manufacturing and distribution. Mr. Meeker is credited with having created the pictograph, the first magazine ever projected on the screen.

Peggy Shanor Portrays Egyptian Queen

Peggy Shanor was requested by the Film Division of the Red Cross to appear in its Christmas Roll Call Picture, "The Greatest Gift," which was shown at the Rivoli theatre during the week of Dec. 15.

Miss Shanor was considered the perfect type to portray the character of the Egyptian Queen, in the first episode, and it is reported that immediately following Miss Shanor was engaged by the Famous Players to play an important part in "Here Comes the Bride," with John Barrymore, directed by John Robertson.

Harris Resigns from U. S. Division of Films

Raymond S. Harris, special representative of the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, has resigned to become sales manager of the Outing-Chester Film Company, Inc., producers of the Outing-Chester "camera adventures."

Mr. Harris had charge of the official presentations of Government war pictures in many cities, and by his co-operative work with S. Barrett McCormick was said to be in a measure responsible for the success of the presentation of "Under Four Flags" at the Circle, Indianapolis.

Pathe Names New Toto Release

Handling baggage has long been a fruitful source of humor for the newspaper funny man, the professional humorist and the comic artist, but the invention and the satire of all of them are said to have been outclassed by the riotous comedy creature, "Check Your Baggage," with Toto, "the flexible, fun-making clown," who flip-flapped into screen comedy through the Rolin Film Company. "Check Your Baggage" will be released by Pathe December 22d.

Frank Kirchner, Operator for Watterson Rothacker, and the Directing Staff Filming the "Smiles" Picture at Charlotte, N. C.

Nesbitt Supplies Rhodes Picture

The story of Billie Rhodes' first feature, "The Girl of My Dreams," which is controlled by the Robertson-Cole Company and will be released through the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, was written by Wilbur Nesbit.

"The Girl of My Dreams" is an adaptation of Mr. Nesbit's story of the same name which has been widely read throughout the country. It's construction is such that it readily adapted itself to motion picture form, and in its leading part it gives Miss Rhodes opportunity to display her charms and ability as a full-fledged star.

A cast has been supplied Miss Rhodes which includes Jack McDonald, Lamar Johnson, Golda Mawden, Jane Keckley, Frank McQuarrie, Benjamin Suslow and Leo Pierson.

Goldwyn Shows Faith in Bennison

The prediction that Louis Bennison will be a highly successful screen star and repeat his stage successes received verification this week when Goldwyn managers in every branch office of the company held exhibitor trade showings of "Oh, Johnny!" the first Betzwood Film Company production in which Bennison is to greet the motion picture public.

"Oh, Johnny!" is the first of six Louis Bennison Star Series productions which are to be released exclusively through Goldwyn and on which contract bookings are reported as being very large. This first production will have its premiere throughout America on December 22d.

Universal Films Wilds of Kentucky Mountains

Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal, will shortly head a motion picture expedition into the wilds of the Kentucky mountains where Alice Spencer Geddens Lloyd has built a community center at Caney Creek, in Knott County, and the surrounding illiterate mountaineers live in windowless cabins.

How these uncouth men, women and children who did not know the country was at war are being educated is a story of such surpassing interest as to once again bring home with added force that truth outrivals fiction.

Dembow Returns to Fox Exchange

Honorably discharged from the army after having won a commission as second lieutenant, George F. Dembow, formerly manager of the Philadelphia exchange of the Fox Film Corporation, returned last week to his former duties, succeeding Jack Levy, who has severed connection with the William Fox organization.

Lieutenant Dembow entered the army early last summer. He soon was recognized as officer material, and was sent to an officers' training school. He was commissioned seconud lieutenant just before the armistice was signed.

Ruth Clifford, Bluebird Star, and Mae Murray, Also a Universal Stellar Light. Both Are Presented in New Productions

"Woman" Cites Showmanship of Tourneur

THE remarkable way in which the various territories are selling for Maurice Tourneur's epic production, "Woman," suggests an interesting angle upon the producer. Maurice Tourneur is first of all a showman. This, of course, is the chief essential of the successful man of the theatre or the screen.

Maurice Tourneur productions possessing this quality, are pictures that appeal to that other showman—the imaginative and successful exhibitor. There is always some one element that stands out of them, gripping and holding the interest. This has been apparent from the first in Tourneur offerings. His famous production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Whip," for instance, has a sensational railroad collision, which was the biggest sort of thing in the way of gripping the interest. In a word, it had the punch of the showman.

Step by step, this has been clear in every Tourneur film. His exquisite production of the Maeterlinck symbolical fantasy, "The Blue Bird," introduced to the screen the new impressionistic art of the theatre. Here again was the big thing to appeal to the showman.

"Sporting Life," Mr. Tourneur's adapted Drury Lane melodrama, possessed some remarkable fog scenes in the London streets. Aside from their striking atmospheric beauty, they started everyone talking. How did Tourneur get the startling fog effect in a studio, for the street scenes were built in his Fort Lee studio? Even experts have been puzzled—and the showman's art is once more apparent.

But in "Woman," most of all, is this quality manifest. "Woman" makes the biggest appeal of all the Tourneur productions to the innate sense of the showman. For "Woman" is absolutely unique, unlike anything ever done in the films. Indeed, it completely defies classification. "Woman" is neither a spectacle, a drama or a melodrama. It is something radically new to the celluloid drama and there is no one word to describe it.

Cecil B. DeMille Arrives in New York City

CECIL B. DE MILLE, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studios, arrived in New York from California on his annual business trip, to discuss production plans of the western organization for the coming year. He was accompanied on his transcontinental trip by his brother, William C., also of the Paramount-Artcraft producing organization.

While in New York, it is reported that Mr. De Mille will also consummate a deal with a famous playwright for an original story which he will produce for Artcraft release on his return to California in the near future. The story is said to be of a particularly interesting theme, disclosing an idea unlike anything ever presented on the motion picture screen. William C. De Mille, in collaboration with the dramatist from whom the story will be purchased, will adapt it to the screen.

"I am here purely on business but hope to see a good show or two before I get back," said Mr. De Mille. "My stay here will only be of short duration and there is much to be attended to.

"We are planning greater activities for our West Coast studios than ever before. Things there when I left were resuming their former busy aspect before the epidemic closing order went into effect. At present I am negotiating on a new type of story which I will stage as soon as I get back to the studios. It has always been my ambition to produce pictures that get out of the beaten path both as to story and technique in production."

Gerald C. Duffy Engaged By Bessie Love

Bessie Love, the star who recently became affiliated with Vitagraph productions, has just engaged Gerald C. Duffy, magazine writer and editor, as her personal representative.

Coming Program Offerings

Four Metro Comedies Shortly

A Quartette of Metro Productions in the All-Star Series Will Be Released in January

FOUR Metro All Star Series productions, headed by an equal number of stars, comprise this firm's contribution to screen attractions for the month of January.

While each is announced as a comedy, cheerful in tone, packed with action, and wholesome pathos, great care is said to have been taken by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to supply the exhibitor and public with stories widely different in theme, treatment and locale.

The stars represented in the list are Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Ethel Barrymore, and May Allison, appearing in the order named. Two of the comedies are adaptations from stories in national magazines, one from one of the great stage plays of the last decade, and another is from an original scenario by an army officer writer.

The first of these is "The Spender," starring Bert Lytell. It will be released throughout the country on January 6th. It is somewhat different from Mr. Lytell's recent pictures, being purely comedy and therefore a departure from the robust melodramas to which this young actor has devoted much of his efforts since becoming a Metro star.

"The Spender" recounts the adventure of young Dick Bisbee, nephew of old "Tightwad" Bisbee, septuagenarian boss of the Bisbee tanneries and a millionaire. Dick is "fired" when he propounds the revolutionary theory to his uncle that it is more blessed to spend than to hoard.

Mary Anderson, "Sunshine Mary," plays opposite Mr. Lytell in the sympathetic role of Helen Stetson. The other characters are announced as being in exceptionally competent hands, among the players being Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, as old man Bisbee; William V. Mong and Clarence Burton. "The Spender" is from Frederick Orin Bartlett's original story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker and Albert G. Kenyon. It was directed by Charles Swickard, with Robert B. Kurrle operating the camera.

"Oh! oh! Annice," Viola Dana's All Star Series contribution, is a picturization of Alexine Heyland's novel which appeared originally in the Woman's Home Companion. It is said to be one of the most entertaining, swiftly moving and best rounded features in which this comedienne has yet appeared. It is scheduled for January 13th. John H. Collins adapted and directed the picture.

Ethel Barrymore's newest Metro picture is a photo version of her stage success, "Lady Frederick or the Divorcee," from the pen of W. Somerset Maugham. It will be released January 20th.

"In for Thirty Days," an original story by Lieutenant Adjutant Luther A. Reed, U. S. A., adapted by George D. Baker and T. Jefferson Geraghty, and directed by Webster Cullison, is announced as a fast and sparkling comedy romance. It will be distributed January 27. The story revolves around Helen Corning, a wealthy and aristocratic young woman, who delights in speeding her automobiles.

Gloria Joy Makes Her Bow on Pathe Program

THE Pathe program for the week beginning December 22 introduces the infantine star, Gloria Joy, in the first of three comedies, released two weeks apart, which deal with the surprising and amusing adventures of a precocious and lovable child.

The first is called "The Fortunes of Corinne" and, besides setting an admirable setting for Gloria, is said to be a charming study of rural life and character, not omitting the philosophic tramp, whose stories start the wee heroine in her wanderings into the big, big world.

Toto, the clown, who apparently has no bones in his structure, gives laughing value to the Rolin comedy, "Check Your Baggage."

The eleventh episode of the patriotic serial, "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, is called "Betwixt Heaven and Earth," which title gives a fair indication of the perils faced by the heroine high in the air with no apparent avenue of escape.

Official War Review No. 26 gives a collection of views of the great struggle from the snow-covered heights of Italy to the lowlands of France, and shows some of the very courageous work done by the Americans under heavy fire.

Singapore is one of the strange and populous ports of the seven seas, and, during the war, has come into more than usual prominence. Post Travel Series No. 24, which deals with both the island and the city, is widely instructive and entertaining.

Besides the curious native views of place and people, one is given an impressive idea of how Great Britain has made this a most important port for her shipping.

Five "Mutt and Jeff's"

With five pictures scheduled for release, December is a big month for exhibitors booking the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

"Pot Luck in the Army" is the title of the Mutt and Jeff subject released December 1. December 8 "The New Champion" was released, and December 15 was "Hitting the High Spots."

"The Draft Board" and "Throwing the Bull" are the last two releases for December.

Walthall Special Reaches Screen in January

An announcement probably fraught with more than passing interest for exhibitors is that Thomas H. Ince's production of Louis Joseph Vance's story, "The False Faces," in which Henry B. Walthall plays the leading role, will be released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special January 12th.

This production was directed by Irvin V. Willat under Mr. Ince's personal supervision, and according to Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, it more than measures up to the standard it has been determined shall be maintained in this series of twelve special productions for the year.

Triangle Offers Crook Play by Hill

Robert Hill has written what is said to be an unusually interesting crook play, "Crown Jewels." It is offered by Triangle as the release for December 22, and Claire Anderson is the featured player.

It tells of a King attempting to collect the cash value for his royal gems by shipping them to his banker in the United States.

Wehlen Film Released

Metro Pictures Corporation released as its All Star Series production on December 16th "Sylvia on a Spree," starring Emmy Wehlen. Though widely different from her previous pictures, "The House of Gold," "The Duchess of Doubt," "The Shell Game," "The Trail of the Shadow," in theme and locale, Miss Wehlen's newest vehicle is said to be a worthy successor to those entertaining photo-dramas.

Vitagraph Names December 23 Films

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of December 23rd has been scheduled as follows: Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "Hoarded Assets," featuring Harry T. Morey. From the story by Raymond S. Spears. Directed by Paul Scardon. Serial, two parts, "In the Coils," Episode No. 10 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst. Big "V" Special Comedy, two parts, "Pluck and Plotters," featuring Larry Semon.

New Red Cross Pictures Through General

The newest Red Cross Films which are being released by the Bureau of Pictures of the American Red Cross include three subjects called "New Faces for Old," "Homeward Bound" and "Russia the World Problem." These one-reelers will go through General Film Company exchanges as regular Red Cross program subjects.

"New Faces for Old" has already been reviewed by the Bureau, and is considered the strongest subject of the series. It shows how soldiers in France, badly disfigured, are transformed by the aid of specially modeled silver wire masks to look just like they did before they were mutilated.

"Bug House" Pictured in Nestor Comedy

Universal will release the week of December 30 a Nestor comedy, "It's Great to Be Crazy," which is said to pictorially explain the pleasures of "bug house."

"Caught in the Act"

"Caught in the Act," featuring Peggy Hyland, is announced as the current William Fox Excel Pictlres release. In this play, which was directed by Harry Millarde, Miss Hyland portrays the role of a young society debutante who undergoes a number of adventures.

Norma Talmadge, One of the Most Talented of Picture Stars

J. Stuart Blackton Going Over the Script of "The Common Cause," Explaining a Situation to His Two Children, Violet and Charles

First National-Talmadge Contract Reviewed

THE new contract which Jos. M. Schenck arranged for Norma Talmadge with First National Exhibitors' Circuit is calculated to give this star a wonderful opportunity to do even greater things on the screen. One official of the First National says that she is the youngest screen star in the world to be accorded the honor and distinction of being at the head of her own company.

"Unlike some well known screen folk who are said to have attained prominence through favoritism," he continued, "Norma Talmadge has reached the top rung of the ladder of success through her own personal efforts.

"According to Miss Talmadge's version of her entrance into the film world, it 'just happened.' She was a fourteen-year-old school girl in Brooklyn when she made her choice between a professional or business life. One night she and her mother were attending a Brooklyn photoplay house, when the little actress saw a picture that so impressed her that she decided to become an actress herself.

"'That's what I want to be,' she told her mother, and Mrs. Talmadge knew from past experience that it was all over but the shouting. The next day she and Norma visited the Vitagraph plant, and the latter was given a job. Her years of experience with the Vitagraph in all sorts of roles enabled her, when at last given a real chance, to bloom forth in leading parts equipped with an exceptional technique and fitted to make the most of her opportunity.

"From the Vitagraph Miss Talmadge went West to join the Triangle forces, where she was starred in a number of successful dramas and comedies. Since becoming the head of her own company Miss Talmadge has brought out a number of big successes, among them 'Panthea,' 'Poppy,' 'The Moth,' 'The Secret of the Storm Country,' 'Ghosts of Yesterday,' 'By Right of Purchase,' 'De Luxe Annie,' 'The Safety Curtain,' 'The Heart of Wetona,' and others.

"Norma Talmadge had no previous theatrical experience, except that which falls to the lot of the average girl in school through amateur theatricals, and she is therefore truly a product of the screen—has grown and is growing up with the business, and First National is glad to handle her productions," he concluded.

"Every Mother's Son" Soon to be Released

CUTTING of the film having been completed, "Every Mother's Son," R. A. Walsh's drama of mother love and peace reconstruction, is scheduled for early release, it was stated this week by the Fox Film Corporation.

Persons who have seen the picture at private showings in the Fox home office state that it is the best work Mr. Walsh has done.

Charlotte Walker heads the cast which enacted the play. Miss Walker, as star of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine" and other stage successes, is regarded as one of the leading actresses of the American stage, and it is said that she was obtained for this production at an unusually high salary.

Another member of the cast is Gareth Hughes, well-known young American actor. His work in the Beulah Dix play "Moloch" and other big Broadway successes is said to have stamped him as a player of rare talent.

In connection with "Every Mother's Son" the Fox Film Corporation, it is reported, has prepared exceptionally fine advertising and publicity material.

The Independent Field

Berst Believes in War Pictures

Insists That Present Prosperity of the Box Office Will Be Sustained—Cites Own Film as Proof

COMMENTING upon some phases of post-war conditions, the immediate outlook for the motion picture industry in general, and prospects for exhibitors in particular, J. A. Berst, president of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., strikes a cheerful note, which incidentally includes considerable comfort for those producers who find themselves with film on hand which the swift ceasing of hostilities has led them to regard as not merely untimely but practically out of date.

Speaking first on some of the immediate effects that are following upon the passing of the war, Mr. Berst is reported to say: "One of the most notable effects that the armistice is having on the motion picture industry is diametrically opposite to what many people seem to have expected, that is, if we may take as a criterion the box-office, which, of course, is directly indicative of the prosperity of the industry.

"As to the class and nature of subjects that will be in favor now that the horrid thing is over, there has been a tendency to suppose that the public will refuse to look at pictures that may more or less directly be reflective of the great struggle over there, and producers have consequently been apt to consider their war picturizations as a thing either to be hurried into quick showing or sent to the scrap heap.

"But consider for a moment. Interest in a drama so tragic, so widespread, so democratically vital to a whole world as was this war, cannot cease over night. With the return of the several million American troops who will for a long time be pouring back to home and friends, not in any sudden bunch as it were, but steadily and a few thousands at a time, there will be for the general public and for the individual household in particular a well sustained and lively interest in the picturization of things that took place over there and an eagerness to see, even though fictionally enacted and screened, adventures, romances and thrills that have their locale in France. A post-war intense interest remains and survives and will seek gratification in the best class of stories that have France for their setting, even though such stories still touch upon the war. Another form of this interest is evidenced by the eagerness of the traveler and the tourist to rush abroad and visit the scene of the war the moment a passport can be secured.

"A vast upheaval and a titanic struggle such as the world has passed through in these last years cannot fail to leave its effect on theatre-going people, and must of natural necessity long be reflected in screen plays that have more or less of the locale of the great struggle for background and its theme for story, especially if there be too some touches of comedy relief.

"Of the forthcoming output of United Picture Theatres of America one superpicture, that of Kitty Gordon in 'Adele,' is based on happenings in France, and the splendid demand for that more than bears out my expectations of a continued steady call for this class of offering."

First Two of 10-20-30 Series Announced

THE launching of the Ten, Twenty, Thirty Series, consisting of twelve special productions at the fixed rental prices of ten, twenty and thirty dollars a day, which was interrupted by the influenza suspensions, is now a fact and the first picture will be released this month.

Julius Steger's extra attraction, starring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, is first of the set. This picture was all ready for release when the influenze wave swept over the country, so it can now be booked for immediate presentation.

Second of the series is "Life's Greatest Problem," another production of a special nature, which emphasizes the determination of the company to present the very best pictures available on a fixed price basis.

It is J. Stuart Blackton's pretentious offering featuring Mitchell Lewis, in which Mr. Blackton received the co-operation of Charles M. Schwab and Edward N. Hurley.

Immediate distribution has been arranged for by taking advantage of the recent opening of the Film Clearing House exchanges, which are equipped to handle the pictures of independent producers and groups of producers and also series of special productions.

The Ten, Twenty, Thirty Series will be booked as separate and distinct from all other pictures using Film Clearing House for physical distribution, and bookings will be taken care of by the Independent Sales Corporation, also recently organized and making a specialty of furnishing sales forces for productions going through the clearing house.

Carlton Reviews the Year

"The year just past," says Carle E. Carleton, "has been the most unique in the annals of motion picture history because of the uncertain conditions brought about by the war, the influenza epidemic and other unprecedented and unforeseen occurrences since the inception of the motion pictures, and readjustment is consequently now in order.

"The coming year ought to be, and can be if the exhibitors will bend themselves into a unit as in other commercial and artistic enterprises, the most important year in the history of the film business."

Mr. Carleton does not believe that the coming year will in any manner have a derogatory influence on those pictures with a war background if they are such films as have a romantic or heart gripping interest, as well as a depiction of the life of our boys in the trenches.

Repeat Dates Reported on "Ashes of Love"

On "Ashes of Love," the latest production released by the Graphic Film Corporation, exhibitors are booking "repeat" dates, in many cases in theatres where return dates are not in custom, according to a Graphic official.

The cast includes James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Mabel Juliene Scott, Ruby de Remer, Paula Shay, William B. Davidson, Hugh Thompson, Dora Mills Adams, Thea Talbot and William Bechtel.

Ivan Abramson, its author and director, is busily engaged at the Biograph Studio in making the next Graphic release under the title of "The Echo of Youth."

Gaumont Special in New York to First National

The Gaumont Company announces that its one-reel special, "Driven from the Seas," showing the surrender of the German fleet to the Allied navies on November 21, 1918, will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, 509 Fifth avenue, New York City.

This territory covers Greater New York, Long Island, Westchester, Putnam and Rockland Counties, N. Y., and northern New Jersey."

Leonce Perret Completes "Star of Glory"

Announcement from the offices of the Perret Productions indicates that Leonce Perret, who has bene at work for some months on "Stars of Glory," which features Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, has completed the production and that arrangements for its premier presentation are in progress.

Adolphe Osso, who has been assigned to negotiate the release of the production, and who will handle the exploitation of the contemplated Broadway showing, has already contracted for a prominent electrical display on Broadway advertising "Stars of Glory."

Francis de Croisset Sees Perret's Productions

Among the many visitors to the Metro studio to witness the Leonce Perret Productions was Francis de Croisset, the author of "The Marriage of Kitty," "The Hawk," etc.

It was Lieut. de Croisset's first visit to a film studio in this country, and he expressed his high admiration for the efficient methods employed here in contrast to those in his own country, France.

He also congratulated Leonce Perret and Mme. Alice Balche on their productions and paid his respects to the Italian film artist, Miss Dolores Cassinelli.

Houdini Serial Opens in Southwestern Territory

F. M. Sanford, manager of the B. A. Rolfe Productions of Dallas, announces that the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery, opened in his territory, embracing the States of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, the middle of December.

First run of the serial in Dallas was secured by the E. H. Hulsey interests controlling a large number of theatres in the Southwest. They will also play the serial in their other houses outside of Dallas.

Mr. Sanford reports the Hulsey interests contracted for "The Master Mystery" after seeing the first three episodes.

Good War Pictures Here to Stay Says Rapf

"IT is ridiculous to hear all these wise prophets of the film business, and we only have wise prophets in the film business," said Harry Rapf. "Fortunately I have been connected with the theatrical business for so many years that I have had a chance to listen to all the rail birds, but in no end of the theatrical business do these pessimists come to the fore as in the motion picture business. On all sides you hear the wail—war pictures are through, war pictures are done, no more war pictures; and why?

"The Civil War has been used as a background for plays, vaudeville sketches and pictures, and they have all been successful.

"Since the great war of the world has come it is only natural that pictures with the war as a background should hold attention. The movie is not different from the stage, the newspaper or the magazine.

"Every newspaper today has for its headlines matter referring to the soldiers and to war material," continued Mr. Rapf. "War is the basic idea of every cartoon and every editorial. And so with the magazines. Why should the movie be different?

"I claim for my latest picture, 'Wanted For Murder,' which was written by Mr. S. Jay Kaufman, a newspaper man, has a story which contains a human love romance. This accounts for the instantaneous success of the picture. It is different—it is not just a picture, but a big idea made into a picture."

Film Market Sees Rush for Serials

Current interest in motion picture serials indicate that they will command a very important place in the programs of exhibitors during the next year.

The Film Market, Inc., announces that it has orders from three different producers for serial stories ranging in length from fourteen to twenty episodes of two reels each.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has sent announcements broadcast inviting authors and writers to submit 'scripts. The three types of stories most desired are, first, a mystery serial, involving unique and sensational feats, no matter how difficult to perform or hair-raising, and, second, an international detective story, of at least twenty episodes, which will permit a company to actually tour the world for "local color" and use every conceivable means of transportation or conveyance for escape, chase and follow-up.

Many Foreign Sales Reported of New Houdini Serial

Export & Import Film Company, foreign distributors of "The Master Mystery," B. A. Rolfe's fifteen-episode super-serial starring Houdini, the handcuff king, announces through its president, Ben Blumenthal, the closing of contracts whereby the rights of the serial have been sold in the United Kingdom, Australia, Scandinavia, the Far East, Argentina, the Philippines, Cuba, Porto Rico and San Francisco.

Negotiations are now on for the sale of the rights to the serial in France, Spain and Portugal, and are expected to be closed any day.

A significant feature of this announcement is that Export & Import Film Company has disposed of practically two-thirds of all foreign territory before the serial has been released in New York.

The terms obtained by Export & Import Film Company are said to be higher than any ever paid for a serial before.

D'Annunzio's Works May Be Screened by Perret

One of the recent rumors in film circles is the screening of Gabriele D'Annunzio's works with Dolores Cassinelli as star. The famous Italian poet's works are well known to every lover of the drama, having been presented in this country by the celebrated actress Eleanore Duse.

Traced at the Metro studio, where Miss Cassinelli is working on her third Leonce Perret Production under the direction of Mme. Alice Blache, she would neither admit nor deny the rumor of her appearing in D'Annunzio's works.

She admitted, however, her frequent interviews with Ugo D'Annunzio, son of the famous Italian poet, who is in this country on a special mission from the Italian Government, and has been for some time directing the big Caproni factory in Detroit.

Bookings for Houdini Serial in New York

Carey Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, temporarily located at 1600 Broadway, New York, controlling the New York City and State rights to the new Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," announces that contracts have been closed whereby "The Master Mystery" will be shown over the entire Mayer & Schneider circuit, comprising fourteen houses in Greater New York. The contract is an unprecedented one for Messrs. Mayer and Schneider, who have never before booked a serial to play in all of their houses.

Another account secured by Effano for "The Master Mystery" is David V. Picker.

W. H. Productions Teaches Reissue Exploitation

W. H. Productions Company asserts that it is doing a great deal toward teaching the exchange and the exhibitir that a good re-issue can be put out on an equal basis with the very latest productions. Every step in the presentation and proper exploitation of the reissue is being outlined to exchanges through correspondence, it is said, and through the service sections and advertisements in Motion Picture News.

It is reported that inquiries are being received daily from the most reliable exchanges in this country on the W. H. Productions Co. four series of Kay Bee Western Dramas and Keystone Comedies. The territories are being disposed of so rapidly that in some cases where several exchanges were bidding for the same territory, the difference of a few hours decided the purchaser of these re-issues, according to report.

Gaumont News Reels Set Record

"The best issue we have ever seen!" That is how Gaumont laboratory men characterized Gaumont Grophic No. 38, after screening it for inspection before shipping to the independent exchanges for release on Friday, December 13th. Certainly the editors have set a high mark in the annals of news-reel-dom in this issue, which opens with thrilling scenes in France showing how our boys are marching into Germany.

Another war picture in this issue shows the farewell review of 50,000 soldier boys at Camp Funston, Kansas, saddened because the Hun gave up before they had a chance to cross the ocean. And still another big parade is contained in this number.

Export Section

Good Business—Plus Patriotism

IT is good business for the American film producer to turn to the export field now with every ounce of the energy that has made his success in the domestic market.

And it is also—good patriotism.

It's good business because from the four corners of the earth rich markets are calling to the American producer.

But it is good patriotism because all the commerce and industry of America—on which the health of the domestic film business depends—must look to the far flung markets for sustenance.

And what better carrier than the American motion picture to bring the American message of efficiency, square-dealing and energy to strange climes and foreign countries?

What messenger more able to go forward with the Flag—securing the conquests of Peace as it has helped the winning of War?

IT is good business for the foreign buyer and theatre owner to read the words of American producers and exporters in this supplement. It's good business for the American producer to heed the messages of the reliable exporters advertising in this issue.

And—it's good patriotism.

Because American films are not going out into the foreign market alone—they are going to meet stiff competition, stern competition.

New York is going to cross swords with London, Paris, and Rome in clean business rivalry. New York will meet the desperate come-back effort of Berlin—camouflaged, no doubt, by the good name of neutral nations.

New York must stand by New York. American producers—for good business reasons and for patriotism—must look to and must use New York and New York's exporters.

IT'S good business for the American producer to decide that he must now handle the export field with the methods of good business.

And it's good patriotism.

There are no more "dumping grounds."

The trumpet call of "Quality" is echoing from every distant market. It is the call that American producers can answer—if they will. And it is the word they will respond to, we believe.

Hand in hand, American producers and American exporters must go forward with the slogan, "There are no more dumping grounds."

Hand in hand, American producers and American exporters, ready to clasp the hands of the world's buyers with the good fellowship of Quality and honest business methods, will—

Send the American Film forward with the American Flag—girdling the globe in a Starry Banner.

"Filming Our Way" a Prophecy

Inter-Ocean Globe Reprints Editorial Used in Export Section of Motion Picture News October 12

THE Inter-Ocean Globe, journal of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and described as the "first house organ ever issued by an American film exporting firm," will print the following upon its editorial page in the January issue.

"Late in September the MOTION PICTURE NEWS called on President Cromelin of Inter-Ocean for a statement for the NEWS 'Exporters' Special Section,' then in preparation. Mr. Cromelin contributed some thoughts that were printed in the October 12 NEWS. In the light of recent events these remarks—evolved six weeks and published one month before the signing of the armistice—gave a remarkable line on the disintegration of the German 'home front' and the means that brought it about:

FILMING OUR WAY TO BERLIN

"PRESIDENT PAUL H. CROMELIN, OF INTER-OCEAN, TELLS OF FAR-CARRYING POWER OF OUR FILMS

"While our armies and generals are smashing their way through hostile territory, the American motion picture is carrying the American Idea—of Democracy and Freedom—to the heart of Germany, in Berlin and elsewhere, via the screens of the countries that border on Germany.

"This is due to the wonderful aid given to-American film producers by the Committee on Public Information, who have secured for our films shipping facilities despite almost unsurmountable handicaps. And the committee has not aided us because our films were 'propaganda.' Very few of the films sent to the neutral countries bordering on Germany were of that type.

"But the films that did go illustrated the best American ideals, the highest American thought and spirit of absolute Democracy that reigns here. Where neutral peoples would object to propaganda films they did not object to plain stories from real life. The fact that such stories depicted the high moral standards of Americans didn't make them objectionable—quite the reverse.

"Of course, there is a constant ebb and flow of feeling between Germany and the nations on her border. Despite rigorous passport regulations there is really more border-crossing than in peacetime, for the reason that Germany has so many articles to secure, and she is shut out of all but the few neutral markets. Where she had access every country before the war, her representatives are now permitted in only a few, and the result is that these few never saw so many Germans as they do right now.

"These Germans are necessarily affected by the sentiments prevailing in the countries that they visit. So are the citizens of these neutral countries, who in return visit Germany. And the screens of these neutral countries are crystallizing public sentiment, bringing it to a knowledge of the true aims of America and Americans, slowly but surely removing us from the enemy-conceived role of profiteers and mercenaries.

"We have won the heart of the neutrals through the screen, and across their borders and into Berlin is flashing a new, true picture of men who fight for high principle. This great truth is fatal to the plan of the Berlin militarists. It shakes the morale of their populace, makes them ask questions, diminishes their faith in their leaders and chills the war spirit. Thanks to the screen, we are literally 'filming our way to Berlin'!"

Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation

Export Film Requires Careful Editing

L. H. Allen, President of Foreign Markets Distributing Corporation Declares That Conscientious Translating and Careful Re-editing are vital in holding foreign trade

MANY United States producers are too prone to consider the world market outside their own country as a convenience and the monies received for foreign rights as so much velvet, according to L. H. Allen, film exporter, located in the Godfrey Building, New York City.

"Distributors and exhibitors in foreign countries expect the same personal service from American producers as they receive from Italian and French producers who predominated so strongly before the war and bid fair to come back stronger than ever," said Mr. Allen.

"They should realize that when Italian and French manufacturers receive an order from a foreign country they carefully re-edit the film, including title and sub-titles and translate them to fit in perfectly with the peculiar needs of the particular country purchasing the film.

"Even the lithographs and heralds are furnished by the Italian and French concerns, reprinted in Spanish, if the film sold is going to Spain or South America.

"This is the service that nearly all the American producers neglect and possibly believe that it is not very essential. Some of the American producers make a slight effort to meet this condition, but owing to the ready market they have been enjoying in foreign fields of late they seem content and apparently appear to believe that their film is in such great demand that these services can be passed on for the buyer to perform," continued Mr. Allen.

"But those who neglect this personal service preparation may soon find that the war is over and that fierce competition will face them in the very near future.

"The small army of Italian and French directors here in America at present have absorbed all our ideas, and when the studios reopen in Italy and France there may be quite an exodus of able directors to Europe.

"It is a well-known fact that pictures can be produced in either France, Italy or Denmark at much less cost than in America. They are going to give an international angle to their productions that few American producers are far-sighted enough to present.

"There is an international standard; that is, a picture can be made with the scenes and theme so arranged that the production will be just as valuable in every country throughout the world as it is now in just one particular country.

"Of course, the American producers expect that since they have established the star system they will not only hold their own against all prospective competition, but will gain more business from year to year.

"While the star system will keep the American films from being driven out of the field entirely when the competition again starts, great inroads on the export of American made film will certainly be made, and in a short time their gross business may even revert to what it was in 1914.

"I prefer to be an optimist rather than a pessimist, but I do want to impress upon the producers of America the absolute necessity of preparing their films for the foreign market with the same careful attention that they give the home territory.

"There has been such an overproduction in the United States that it was not so difficult for a foreign buyer to select, out of the great number of films produced, a certain number that might appeal to his own country after careful re-editing and conscientious translating.

L. H. Allen, well known exporter

"American capital will assuredly interest itself in financing foreign studios. There promises to be no lack of capital, according to the various authentic sources of information I have at hand. The competition will return stronger than ever.

"Just to show the careful work necessary to prepare an American propaganda film for a territory inhabited mainly by people who only understand and speak Spanish, I will relate my experience in preparing the Vitagraph production of 'Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation,' for the Philippines.

"In the first place, I needed a title easily comprehended, that would aptly cover the theme. I thereupon invited twenty persons, many of them consuls, and some of them professors who had a perfect understanding of Spanish.

"The title chosen, unanimously, after several were submitted was 'Barbarie,' which title was the direct anthisis of 'Womanhood,' but still the only title applicable for that feature in that particular territory.

"I then had to completely re-write the prologue and afterwards, as the United States had entered the world war, I changed all the sub-titles and added new descriptive matter (all in Spanish, of course) to bring it up to the minute as an effective propaganda film.

"It was the same way with 'Civilization' when I bought it for Mexico. Just because the Mexicans did not care for Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.

Big Field Open, Says Sidney Garrett

SIDNEY GARRETT, prominent in foreign fields, notably in the London and the Paris markets, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and associated in an executive capacity with the Mundus Film Company of Paris, lays stress on the fact that the producers in America must look to the needs of the foreign buyers and specialize accordingly.

"The war opened up big fields in the foreign market for the American producer and it's up to the producer to cover these fields with as much if not more American-made product than he did during the war when there was very little competition to meet.

"According to statistics compiled by experts," continued Mr. Garrett, "only about 65 per cent of the American product reaches foreign lands. All of it should reach every nook and corner of the globe. There isn't a reason in the wide world why it shouldn't. The field is there, the demand is greater now than ever before, but everything won't go. The producer must 'deliver the goods.' When he does—then 100 per cent of his product will reach the most isolated country.

"For some reason or other, the American producer has the impression that many of the foreign countries are not worth consideration. The sooner these producers get this idea out of their heads the sooner will Americans be able to point to the fact that their product is not only 100 per cent quality but is reaching 100 per cent of the civilized world."

Glucksmann Keeps Pace with Times

New Splendid Theatre Near Completion in Buenos Aires While Organization Adds to Its List of Theatres—Owns Twenty-four Outright

FIRST to introduce motion pictures and the phonograph in Argentine was Max Glucksmann, film importer, distributor and exhibitor, with a chain of theatres in South America.

For several years a New York office has been maintained in charge of Jacobo Glucksmann now located at 110 West Fortieth street, and the concern was established in 1891.

It was as early as 1895 (twenty-four years ago), when Mr. Glucksmann was exclusive agent in South America for Pathe-Freres. All foreign subjects and, in short, split reels, formed the entering wedge for the film in Argentine.

The Glucksmann family has watched the film industry grow from a puny baby to a robust man, and they have such confidence in its continual development that they are at present just completing a half-million-dollar theatre in Buenos Aires.

That thriving city has a population of 1,500,000 at present and contains about 150 theatres, of which number the Glucksmanns own several and rent seventy-five.

The new theatre is nine stories high, by 100 feet wide, and has a seating capacity of 2,200. The Spanish people enjoy good music and, besides a huge pipe organ, a twenty-four-piece symphony orchestra has been installed.

"The Splendid" is the name of the new house, and it is an exclusive motion picture theatre, although a complete stage has been built and fitted up. One innovation is that during the extremely hot summer months the sides of the theatre can be manipulated so that the audience is practically sitting in the open air while enjoying the performance.

Max Glucksmann has his headquarters in the building and also maintains exchanges in Argentine at the following cities: Bahia Blanca, Cordoba, Corrientes, Mendoza, Rosario and Tucuman. In Chile exchanges are in Valparaiso and Santiago, while Glucksmann film exchanges can also be found in Montevideo, Uruguay and Asuncion, Paraguay.

When they buy pictures for this South American market the sub-titles are translated and changed into Spanish, which is the language there. The Houdini serial is the latest purchase of the Glucksmanns, and among some of the recent features bought for South America were sixteen Empire and All Star mutuals and eighty-seven five-reel Metro features.

Edna Goodrich and Pearl White are said to be very well liked in that territory. The releases of Balboa, Metro, Pathe, Triangle, American, Selig and Essanay have been bought and are said to be prime favorites with the South Americans.

In Argentine, Chile and Uruguay the Glucksmanns own outright twenty-four theatres. "The Finger of Justice," a six-reel drama, has recently been purchased, and also "The Still Alarm" and "Persuasive Peggy," starring Peggy Hyland. All the Mutual-Chaplin releases have been circulated down there and Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann declares that Mr. Chaplin registers big.

Besides the film exports, Max Glucksmann is sole South American agent for Simplex projection machines and also handles a complete line of North American accessories for the South American trade. The Victor talking machines are also controlled by them for that continent.

Buenos Aires is a cosmopolitan city, and Mr. Glucksmann asserts that many New York people who have visited there state that they would rather live there than in Gotham, and that it also compares favorably with Paris for action, entertainment and life.

What will prove to be momentous and welcome news to all citizens of the United States of America, Mr. Glucksmann reserved to the last; and here it is:

"While before the world war the Italian and French films were the most popular and predominated to the extent that 90 per cent. of the film shown in South America were from those two countries, with America furnishing only 10 per cent., that position has been reversed radically during the past few years," said Mr. Glucksmann.

"At this time it is difficult to get any kind of a crowd out to see an Italian or French film, while the American-made films are packing them in. They have made their choice so definite that at this time the United States producers are furnishing 90 per cent. of all the film shown in the four principal countries of South America."

New Bureau to Aid Exporters

FROM Washington comes word that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is organizing a special statistical service section for the purpose of furnishing regular monthly tabulations of imports and exports in more detail than is contained in the Monthly Summary of Foreign Commerce of the United States.

The plan is, instead of merely listing the total amounts of exports of various articles, to show the various countries to which the exports were made, and so on, giving greater details on all of the information previously furnished.

It is the aim of the bureau to extend this special service as far as facilities will permit. Trade organizations and exporting companies are invited to submit requests for special statistical information.

"Eagle's Eye" Has New Name Abroad

"THE EAGLE'S EYE," the Detective Flynn serial that proved popular in this country is now being announced in England under the title, "Count Bernstorff's Secrets." It is being shown in nineteen episodes, of two reels each.

Little Talks With Foreign Buyers—No. 20

By Paul H. Cromelin
President

BUYERS of "THE VICTIM" WILL BE SURE TO PURCHASE "THE TRANSGRESSOR"

(They will thank the day they read this Talk no less than that on which "No. 13" appeared in The News)

"THE TRANSGRESSOR" is by the producers of the very successful "VICTIM." Therefore we took over the foreign rights eagerly. Especially when inspection showed just as "punchy" a picture. IT IS SUITED TO THE TIMES, as it warns against the extremists of all kinds that the governments and peoples of all lands regard with disfavor: calls for social reform, but of the sensible sort. Like "THE VICTIM" it may be worked with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller. The mob scenes in this picture are said to be the most thrilling ever shown in a melodrama made in the United States.

Little Talk No. 13

A SPECIAL OPPORTUNITY

"THE VICTIM"

INTER-OCEAN has been selected to distribute in all foreign markets a feature play of such unique dramatic appeal that a trial showing has already resulted in several sales. TO SEE "THE VICTIM" IS TO WANT TO EXPLOIT IT. The effect on the spectator is simply tremendous. It is a "repeat" picture. Even the veteran buyer—the "wise" film man—wants a second look. It is just punch! Punch! PUNCH! The priestly hero, in facing the electric chair, risks all for a principle and we all of us care for that sort of chap. The picture is an absolute succession of thrills. THERE HAS NEVER BEEN A MELODRAMA LIKE IT! And it challenges solution up to the last few feet of the sizzling finish. Can be worked as a "special," with Church endorsement, or just as a rattling good theatre thriller.

Will Enlarge "Fulco" Offering in Spring

EUGENE H. KAUFMAN, head of the carbon and accessory department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and the man who introduced the Speer Carbon to the foreign markets, formerly controlled by German carbon manufacturers, is firm in the belief that the American-made carbons are permanent factors in the foreign field.

"They are no longer mere subjects for experiment and they are distinctly not war-time fill-ins. Our information is the direct testimony of foreign cinema men who have bought them. Their own letters to us tell the tale. The American-made Speer product has stood all tests. These foreign purchasers have settled down to permanent use of it. Many of them have made long-time contracts that they knew must outlast the war. These contracts alone establish that the German-made carbon is out, to stay out.

"The figures on Speer foreign sale are little short of phenomenal. Recent items, for instance, are 100,000 sent to Australia, India 160,000, China 10,000 and Brazil 27,000. Of course, the original chance to place them came through the elimination of enemy-made carbons by war conditions. But the market had to be held through sheer superiority of product. Certainly a year is long enough to tell you whether you have that. It was our Speer experience that impelled us to negotiate the recent contract for the foreign rights of the Fulco accessories. The world-market is waiting for good American goods and it wants them permanently."

Mr. Kaufman announced that the first offering of six Fulco specialties on the foreign market would be enlarged in the Spring to ten articles, because of the call for American products Inter-Ocean finds exists. He is awaiting H. G. Harper's reports on the Far Eastern field.

Arthur Lang in Buenos Ayres

On South American Tour

ARTHUR I. LANG, our well-known Nicholas Power friend, has reached Buenos Ayres in his South American girdling tour in the interest of the Power machine.

In a recent issue of Imparcial Film, the Buenos Ayres trade journal, Arthur is given a send-off which would indicate considerable popularity for the Simplex representative in Argentine film circles.

Glucksmann Releasing Holmes Serial

Successfully

ANNOUNCEMENTS from Argentine declare that a cordial reception has been given there to the latest serial released by the house of Glucksmann. It is the successful American production, Helen Holmes in "The Lost Express." Serials of this type have always been popular in this territory, the house of Glucksmann having many successes to its credit, notably in the memory of local film men, the Kalem outdoor serials.

"Maciste" Now Showing in England

THE "MACISTE" serial which Harry Raver is preparing to exploit in the United States, is now being shown to the trade in England, preceded by a bang-up advertising campaign. An eight page two color insert in a recent number of The Bioscope was one noteworthy feature of the advance work. The London and Counties Film Bureau, Ltd., of London, controls the United Kingdom rights.

Ziehm Gives Views on Conditions

Manager of Goldwyn Export Division Thinks Two Years Will Straighten Situations Out to Normal

THE commercial world is to undergo an intensive reconstructive period and the foreign market, as relates to the motion picture industry is to be one out of thousand lines of businesses that will be radically affected—for better or for worse. In the opinion of our foreign trade experts, it is going to be for the better.

But a noticeable change will not be effected, in their opinion, until after the expiration of two or more years because as Arthur Ziehm, manager of Goldwyn's foreign export department, says, "it is going to take that length of time for France, Italy, England and other warring nations, to rehabilitate the motion picture output in their respective countries and place it on a plane where they can supply the demands of their subjects."

"There has been a practicle cessation of productive activities, in all foreign countries, during the war," continued Mr. Ziehm, "and it is going to take the producers two years, or more, to get in the running again. Until the expiration of that time, there is going to be little change in the market as it exists today.

"But when that time arrives American producers want to 'watch their step,' for they have got to meet the strongest kind of competition. The foreign producers can produce pictures much cheaper than the American producer because labor is cheaper, none of the enormous salaries that the American producers pay their stars, are paid in foreign lands and the so-called 'extras" are hired for almost nothing per day.

"All this must be taken into consideration even though they might seem trifling to the producer on this side of the water. Of course, such competition as the cheap labor offers must be met indirectly by the American producer, but it can be met and in only one way—the production of quality pictures in fair and square treatment of the foreign buyers.

"Another phase of the foreign market conditions that must be improved if we are to meet this competition which will surely act as an obstacle to the bettering of conditions, and that is the one that pertains to payments. As everyone knows who has been associated with the foreign trade, everything in regard to payments has always been on a cash basis and was necessarily so because no arrangements have ever been made, except in a few isolated cases, for the foreign buyer to get credit.

"The man who can get thirty or ninety days credit in any line of business is the one who, if he be a good business man, is going to 'turn over' his profits in that length of time and he is the one who is going to operate successfully. In many instances, the man who cannot get this credit, cannot operate at all. And here lies an instance of the commercial end of the foreign export business which can and should be improved for the benefit of hundreds of well-meaning buyers who could and would do business that is, under the present system, lost to the American producer.

"As I said, in some instances such a credit system exists between the foreign buyer and some of the American concerns, in some countries. The money draft is the happy medium through which some of these concerns act but, unfortunately, there exist few such relations between American concerns and foreign financial markets. This, then, is one branch of the foreign business that should be taken up and an exchange system established through which well-meaning buyers in foreign countries could get credit, even though it be only a twenty day extension."

"During the war," continued Mr. Ziehm, the American product found a ready market in foreign countries. Because of this and because of the fact that, in many instances, the Frenchman, the Englishman and the Italian, were given the opportunity to see only American-made film, owing to the cessation of productive activities in their respective countries, there has been a demand for American product created in foreign countries. The foreigner has been educated to the photodramatic value of the American drama, the little touches in production and the peculiar mannerisms of our talent, have all been brought to his attention and he likes the American product for this reason and he is going to insist upon having it.

"You all know what this insistence means—it means that the exhibitor in foreign lands is going to demand the American product and it will necessarily follow that the foreign buyer is going to accept the product because he knows that his trade wants it.

"But, regardless of the demand, if the American producer is not going to do all he can to facilitate matters, if he is not going to work hand-and-hand with the foreign buyer and give him those little considerations which mean so much toward facilitating business in all lines, then French, the Italian and the English and all other foreign producers are going to step in and squash the demand for the American product; that has resulted from the war.

"It is my opinion that the American producers are going to keep the lead that they have taken and they are going to do so by virtue of fair and square treatment of the foreign buyer and the establishment of a foreign exchange system and will help the fellow that hasn't a million dollars back of him but who is shrewd enough to turn his money over and honest enough to meet his debts."

Egypt Needs Help

Supply of Films and Appliances Not Equal to Demand. Call for Assistance from America

By Jos. W. Rowbottom

THE condition of motion picture affairs in Egypt are such that a fine and promising enterprise has been reduced to a state of practical inertia, insofar as concerns progress. Since every industry is conducted on a basis of supply being at least equal to demand, if the supply fails the whole machinery of the industry becomes clogged. Comparatively few films, owing to war exigencies, have been imported into Egypt during the war, and conditions, in the light of future prospects are precarious—so bad that when recently, on invitation from Members of the Trade, I reviewed the industry in Egypt, I made a promise that aid should come from America and England as quickly as conditions would allow. A column in a Cairo newspaper, the Egyptian Mail, was placed at my disposal for review purposes, and in this I said:

". . . and in my next letter to the Home Trade I shall make urgent representations for assistance on behalf of exhibitors in Egypt. . . . I am going to ask the film exporters of England and America to accelerate supply and generally render what assistance is possible in these days of restricted sea accommodation that Egypt may have smooth running, flickerless delectable pictures on a par with those exhibited at home. . . . I consider this is due to Egypt."

Spanish Influenza Reaches Argentine

THE Spanish influenza epidemic struck the Argentine film men about the same time that it did those of the United States. Early in November the municipal authorities in Buenos Ayres ordered all theatres closed as a move to check the spread of the plague.

However, there was a grain of cheer in the situation for Argentine theatre owners. Recent difficulty in securing shipping space from the United States had produced such a scarcity of film subjects that the managers were entirely willing to stand a short shut-down period. Reports in export circles would indicate that within the past few weeks conditions in shipping to Argentine have improved a bit.

Export Films Need Editing

any mention of Christ in any film, I had to eliminate all mention of Christ in 500 feet of the prologue.

"Hand-painted titles are appreciated by most of the foreign exhibitors. There are so many little things that will help America retain this trade that a thorough study of the peculiar needs of each country is very essential if the American producers want to keep this foreign trade.

"It will no longer come to them unsolicited, on a platter. There are lots of red tape also in meeting all the export and import requirements of the various countries. This involves careful study also, as the laws are so varied among the different nations," concluded Mr. Allen.

Probably one of the best versed men on South American film conditions and equipped to appreciate the rapid strides that have been made by the distributors of American productions in these markets during the past two years is L. H. Allen.

Eighteen years of his life have been spent in Spanish speaking countries, such as Argentina, Brazil, Spain, Cuba and Porto Rico; one of the many hard-working though often unappreciated trail blazers for American business.

For the past two years he has been quietly and unobtrusively building up a safe and sound export business with the various brands which he controls for certain of the foreign markets, though giving the greater part of his attention to the distribution of Vitagraph productions to the Spanish markets, in which he specializes.

Some of the most recent films handled by Mr. Allen are as follows:

"The Fighting Trail," a Vitagraph production, for Brazil, Argentine, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Philippine Islands, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

"Vengeance and the Woman," a Vitagraph production, for Argentine, Brazil, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, Philippines, Chile, Peru and Bolivia.

"The Scarlet Runner," Vitagraph serial, for Mexico, and the following four Vitagraphs for Cuba: "The Grell Mystery," "For France," "My Official Wife," "A Game with Fate."

For Chile and Peru, Mr. Allen sold the five following Vitagraph productions:

"A Game with Fate," "Love Watches," "Girl in His House," "Wild Primrose" and "The Business of Life."

"Womanhood, the Glory of a Nation," was sold for Brazil, Chile and the Philippine Islands. This was the Vitagraph special.

D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was sold by Mr. Allen for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay, while "Woman in the Web" was sold both in the Philippine Islands and Mexico.

"American Productions Gain Steadily"

M. H. Morhange, of Argentine, Declares Popularity Will Easily Withstand After-War Competition

"AMERICAN films need not fear after-the-war competition. They will never be displaced from their commanding position in the South American market. Their popularity has been too well established and on too solid a foundation for any of us to shy at the prospect of renewed production activity by manufacturers in other countries freed from the ravages of war."

Such is the opinion of M. H. Morhange, head of the Greater New York Film Service, of Buenos Ayres. Mr. Morhange handles all of the Vitagraph productions in Argentine and Uruguay—fifty-two a year, plus the big specials and the serials. Also, on his recent trip to New York, he staged a masterstroke with the purchase for his territory of "Hearts of the World."

"Naturally," he continued, "American productions will not enjoy the absolute freedom from competition that they have during the four years of war. French productions were once very popular in South America, and it is natural to expect that they will be seen again. The same applies in lesser degree to Spanish and Italian productions.

"But South American audiences have become acquainted with your American stars and American type of production. They like both. And with wide open market conditions they are enabled to get the best of quality.

"You know, the Argentine market is probably the greatest absorber of films for its size in the world. The theatres have a daily change of program policy, modified somewhat to meet a peculiar condition. All of the theatres show two features every day, booking each production for two days, however, and rotating so that there is one new production on the bill each day. The production that is new is made the headliner, the one that is being held over being secondary:

"You can see that with such a policy there is plenty of room for all the meritorious productions that can be offered. The theatres throughout the territory, especially those in Buenos Ayres, are of a very high standard. The rentals secured, while of course not to be compared with those paid in this country, are satisfactory when we consider the quantity used by an exhibitor under the two-a-day plan."

Mr. Morhange estimates that there are about six hundred theatres in the territory served from his Buenos Ayres headquarters.

Quite an unusual distinction for a film man in foreign territory is borne by Mr. Morhange. He is one of the few who received their training and experience in American film producing organizations, having been connected with Vitagraph, Fox and World before entering the Argentine field.

And another distinction:

War broke out on August 4th, 1914. On August 11th Mr. Morhange sailed for his native France.

The plain facts tell the story. Between the lines you may read the story of Verdun and the Somme, and of the wounds that released Mr. Morhange from service in 1916.

Harper Writes from "Somewhere on Board"

INTER-OCEAN FILM CORPORATION has just received a letter from Horace G. Harper, Far East field representative, written "somewhere on board ship," out of San Francisco, en route to Australia, mentioning this paper's account of his send-off.

Readers will recall that Mr. Harper, who before joining the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, was for many years connected with Australasian Films, Ltd., as buyer and exchange manager; was commissioned by Mr. Cromelin to spread the gospel of American films and accessories in New Zealand, India, Dutch East Indies, Japan, China and the Philippine Islands, besides Australia. A fight on junk films, through a campaign of education, is an important object of Mr. Harper's long journey. The "News" told of this and also of the farewell dinner given the traveler by the Inter-Ocean staff.

Mr. Harper writes: "I like the 'News' story of my departure, but there were two names in the list of guests that I distinctly failed to recall as having been present. Are you sure that the publicity department gave out the correct list, or was I so happy that night that I could not remember who was there? But, generally, a happy man on such occasions sees double, instead of making eliminations!

"The photo the 'News' printed, showing the final handshake in front of 'Inter-Ocean Building,' was a good ad for the photo shop next door but not for 'Inter-Ocean Building.' You ought to have gotten a regular photographer like Louis Brock to pose it. As it was, when I saw the picture in the paper I thought you were all a ballyhoo for that photo shop on the right-hand side of the cut!

"The 'News' ran a very faithful interview. I hope that I live up to the plans I outlined about my trip. But there is no reason that the junk dealer should come back. 'By their deeds ye shall judge them.' By my deeds with brand new American films you will decide whether I have routed the junk dealers or not."

Mr. Harper remarked in the letter on the prosperous appearance of the Coast Shipping Industry. He said that the "American flag was back on the Pacific." The Inter-Ocean man's first stop in Australia will be in Sydney, where he will establish headquarters at the Hotel Australia.

Italian Films Invading Argentine

"IMPARCIAL," of Buenos Aires, reports that the scarcity of American films, due to cargo restrictions from the United States, has created a condition enabling Italian productions to secure some attention in the Argentine market. That trade journal is authority for the statement that representatives of Italian companies sold twelve subjects during the first week of November alone. So scarce have new subjects been that this almost sets a record.

Further activity of European producers in the Argentine field is indicated by the organization of a new syndicate represented by A. Pistolini.

Egypt Needs Help

To explain the situation properly, it seems necessary to mark back a little. Compared with conditions at home, the cinematograph industry of Egypt was until quite recently in its happy childhood days, although tremendous progress has been made of late, for its members make up in sheer enthusiasm for what they lack in actual experience. Almost insuperable difficulties stood in the way of the propagation of the screen habit in this land of glorious history, as instanced by the multitudinous tongues and differentiating tastes of its population, the education of the masses into the "way" of pictures, the acquisition of sites and appliances necessary for exhibition and—greatest of all—the importation of film subjects from overseas. But much has been done. Every town of size boasts theatres in varying numbers, some in the larger towns being quite as spacious and comfortable as those we have at home. By the use of a double sub-title and the projection of a third on to a smaller side screen, the language difficulty has in the main been overcome; a couple of local renting organizations are now in active operation, a small printing factory exists, and I have news of a small studio. The dramatic theatre being non-existant and vaudeville undesirable, the motion picture has been received with open arms. It plays such a part in evening life in the cities that one wonders what the average Egyptian really did with himself before its advent. The "picture habit" propaganda produced a craze, and now that craving cannot be satisfied, which brings us the present-day conditions.

Since the time when the war began to affect Egypt, primarily owing to restricted sea accommodation, very few films have reached the country, so that exhibitors virtually have been without new subjects for at least two years. In the country are stocks of films, mostly old ones, and these much battered and torn, scarcely two-thirds their original length, travel on a kind of circular route having no end beyond that of endurance. The term "exclusive" is meaningless, except in cases where there is only one copy of a film in the country, because an exhibitor is only too glad to show any film he can get hold of. No subject, however battered it may be, is too bad to screen, for when films are scrapped there are none others to replace, and present stocks are woefully inadequate. Yet such is the craze for motion pictures that houses are crowded nightly, audiences content to see the same films a second or third time rather than miss their "enjoyment."

War having brought a goodly portion of the British Army to Egypt, patronage is appreciably leavened with khaki—soldiers on leave—and, apart from Chaplin and Keystone subjects, there are no films really suitable. Result: Chaplin and Keystone working overtime; and since the civilian has contracted a severe dose of Chaplinitis, the exhibitor is at his wits' end. Essanay and Mutual-Chaplins are wearing to threads and the old single-reel Keystones are becoming rapidly unrecognizable. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" is the "hit" of the year.

That is Egypt as I write. It can be seen that unless help is sent very soon a promising step in the right direction is going to count for nothing. "Despite the exigencies of war," says the exhibitor, "surely something can be done to help us." And I have promised help, promised that the manufacturers and exporters of our two kindred countries will look to Egypt and do all in their power to help restore normal conditions.

Egypt's requirements are easily stated. She wants everything "Kinematic." First of all, technical assistance to organize the industry on modern lines, then films—loads of them—all lengths, all types. She desires the renting houses of America and England to establish branches in Egypt to co-ordinate action, those placed in charge to be capable and ever ready to advise. She wants publicity—posters, throwaways, trade organs, banners, all manner of boost—she wants to be taught all the tricks of the trade from the box office viewpoint. Projection and general apparatus, up-to-date screens, theatre, fittings and appurtenances.

Taking note of the fact that the majority of exhibitors in Egypt are of French or Italian nationality, it would seem that the cry for help might now have been ringing in other ears, but Egypt is looking to America and Great Britain for succor, sure that it will be forthcoming. And I look to see my promise to Egypt ratified. For I am convinced that in keeping Egypt we should be helping ourselves. Egypt is the gate of the East, feeding many lands, and in opening up trade with Egypt we should discover vast opportunity for development further east.

Foreign Business Will Surprise All, Says Mattsson

ERNEST MATTSSON, export manager for John Olsen & Company, with offices in New York and London, and operating extensively in the Scandinavian countries, looks for big business in the future. Mr. Mattsson is most optimistic and looks forward to a business in the foreign fields that will surprise all concerned.

"It is impossible to leave out of consideration the effect the war has had and will have on the industry," said Mr. Mattsson in discussing the subject of conditions in the foreign market. "Every article that is written swings on the pivot formed by conditions before, during or after the war. It is impossible to get away from it in discussing the outlook of present conditions. The war has affected all branches of business, but on none has it had such a telling effect as on the motion picture industry, and especially that phase of it as is controlled by exporters and importers.

"It is generally conceded that business, from an American exporter's standpoint, has been very good during the war and is, to this day, swinging along at a most encouraging pace. Of course, we exporters had the problem of shipments to contend with during the war and found much difficulty with same. But that was to be expected. Now that this problem has been greatly ameliorated, there isn't any reason why the American producer shouldn't swing into a rapid gait, reach the foreign buyer, deliver the 'goods' and beat the other fellow to it. We can even beat the foreign producer in his own field if we produce quality pictures and look to the foreigner's needs.

"With actual hostilities at a standstill and the signing of peace only a matter of time, the foreigner will naturally look to his own native producer for pictures with which he is intimately acquainted—pictures with native atmosphere and native talent. But if the American producer will spend a little time and try and meet this individual demand instead of trying to shove down the throat of the foreigner that which he does not understand and with which he has nothing in common, then the foreign picture is going to step right in where it left off before the war and the American product is going to be shown only as novelty.

"We are not going to note any immediate change in the foreign market. It will take some time for the foreign producer to get the wheels of his production plant moving in the old rut, but one can gamble that at some time or other those wheels will be started, and then the American producer will have to 'watch his step' and meet the competition that will be presented with better pictures and pictures that meet with the approval of the people of that particular locality in which they are to be shown. Everything and anything is not going to go. There must be quality behind the picture and there must be a clear understanding of what is wanted and what isn't wanted."

Current Activities at Inter-Ocean Building

EXPLAINING their purchase of the Wharton Comedies, featuring Eddie Vogt and Violet Palmer, an official of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation said that the foreign market no less than the domestic one appeared to be especially eager for comedy films. Even the countries that have not been engaged in the war, states this man, have been oppressed by the misery of it, and people all over the world want to "forget" no less than Americans do.

The Wharton pictures acquired in this deal are "Below Zero," "Kute Kids Vs. Kupid," "The Missionary," "The Candidate," "April Fool" and "Marriage A La Mode." A number of the foreign territories have already been disposed of. "The Transgressor," made by "The Victim" people, will be offered to foreign buyers this week by Inter-Ocean. It is expected by President Cromelin that the majority of purchasers of "The Victim" will sign up for its successor. Additional sales on "Victim" are reported for British West Indies, Colombia and Central America.

The distributors of World Pictures in Brazil, Argentine, Chile, Uruguay and Paraguay have renewed their contracts, it is announced. The Argentine rights to the specials, "Wives of Men" and "Inside the Lines," have been alloted.

Inter-Ocean's biggest negotiation of the Fall was undoubtedly the acquirement of the twenty completed negatives of Plaza Pictures. President Cromelin says of this: "We took the Plaza Pictures to fill the needs of those buyers who want a finished-feature programme and want it quick. This line will fill programme requirements in almost any section of the world market, for the stars and the stories have international appeal.

These stars are Anita King, Jackie Saunders, Kathleen Clifford and Gloria Joy."

Fulton Tells Why United States Accessories Should "Go" Abroad

CHICAGO, ILL. (Exclusive to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—"I am offering my American-made accessories for general foreign purchase, inasmuch as they have met the tests of the American exhibitor, than whom I am sure the foreign cinema man is no more stringent in his requirements," said E. E. Fulton to-day, at the new Fulton factory on Carroll avenue. Mr. Fulton enjoys the reputation of being the manufacturer of the largest line of motion picture accessories, produced in this country, now "on" the foreign market, where the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation are offering them.

"I know that German-made accessories found their way to the world market in great quantities," continued Mr. Fulton, "and I am also aware that they were offered at very low prices—ridiculously low in some cases. But as Mr. Harper pointed out in a recent MOTION PICTURE NEWS interview, labor costs in the Central Empire will be vastly higher than before the war, and this will necessarily influence the prices of German-made devices.

"The trade union movement in Germany is pushing up the wage scale all the time, and it must be remembered that devices of this sort are turned out almost totally by skilled workmen who are members of trade unions. Again, the Government subsidy is almost of the past in Germany. This also made for the sweeping price reductions that barred better makes of goods from the world markets.

"When I say better, I say it seriously and in relation to my American line of accessories and supplies that are now for the first time being systematically offered to the world buyer. Every accessory in my list has a reason for existence—improvement. If a Fulco article isn't an improvement on something that the foreign exhibitor has been getting from a distributor of German wares, perhaps for a little less—then we don't ask these exhibitors to consider it. Our carbon saver, for instance, is put out because it economizes carbons and saves replacement cost.

"The reason for the carbon adapter is that it will grip small-size carbons, whereas the carbon clamp usually won't. My lug affords a sure grip, preventing burn-outs due to loose and imperfect connections. And so it goes—the rewind is built to eliminate the danger of damage to the film or catching of the operator's fingers in the gears, while the enclosed rewind is so constructed that rewinding of film is impossible unless the door is shut."

"Do YOU Know What a Picture Is Worth in the Foreign Market?"

If you don't, how are you going to get all that is coming to you out of your splendid American production?

If you don't know how much a picture should bring, you cause the foreign buyers to go elsewhere and they are deprived of your better pictures.

Our specialized knowledge enables us to serve both ends, and we ask only a fair return for our efforts in bringing buyer and seller together.

We guarantee, to their mutual advantage.

Select Claims Edge on Publicity

In behalf of its attractions and the six artists who have made them well known —Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady, Marion Davies and Mitchell Lewis—Select Pictures advances a claim to the perpetual receipt of more spoken or written publicity than is accorded any person, firm, object or product in the world.

Select Pictures this week claims another title for Norma Talmadge, that of the Queen of Versatility, and to prove this star's right to its possession, cites her performances in several of the most recent successes in which she has appeared.

Chinese Pay High to See Kellermann

Exhibitors who are considering an increase in their prices will be interested in the experience of the Olympic theatre, Shanghai, China, which early last month showed the William Fox spectacle, "A Daughter of the Gods," featuring Annette Kellermann, at prices ranging from $1 to $3. Programs of the Olympic, sent to the Fox Film Corporation by Joseph R. Darling, Fox representative in the Far East, show that "A Daughter of the Gods" played November 1st to 4th, inclusive, with two matinees. Unreserved stalls cost $1, reserved stalls $1.50, seats in the dress circle $2 and box seats $3 each.

Comedy Revival Noted by General Film

Since the general resumption of motion picture exhibition a strong revival of demand for the Rainbow Comedies has been noted by General Film Company. These one-reel subjects from the United States Motion Picture Corporation are now considered a standard for product of its kind.

Praise for the consistent quality of the productions is heard, it is said, and the idea involved in all the Rainbow Comedies is a fast, snappy plot without slapstick, with considerable emphasis upon story value.

William Farnum Stays with Fox

Film Star Renews Contract with Fox Film Corporation for Period of Years at a Salary of $750,000 Annually

WILLIAM FARNUM this week signed a contract for a period of years with William Fox at what is said to be the unprecedented figure of $780,000 a year, according to an announcement.

Following the signing of the contract, William Fox issued a statement, in which he said:

"This announcement will set at rest all rumors being circulated throughout the country that William Farnum intended leaving Fox Film Corporation. It is true that he was approached by nearly every producing organization in the field, but he decided to renew his old associations.

"I consider that William Farnum's salary is only commensurate with his wonderful popularity and drawing power at the box-office.

"This new contract places William Farnum in a class by himself. It makes him the highest paid male dramatic artist in the picture world today."

Plans are said to be already under way for several big special attractions featuring Farnum. The Fox organization is said to be negotiating with a number of America's foremost authors for books and stories which will have dramatic power and will afford a magnitude of production for Mr. Farnum's abilities. These stories will be announced in the near future, it is stated, and will be an indication of the importance of the productions in which Mr. Farnum will appear during the coming year.

Mr. Farnum will continue to be a star in the William Fox Standard Picture group, it is understood, as it has been Mr. Fox's policy that only his best stars and his best stories be released under this brand.

The signing of the new contract is declared to have come at the close of the most successful year in Mr. Farnum's career. "Les Miserables," "True Blue," "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," four Farnum releases this fall, have scored successes, and according to Mr. Fox, have proved most convincingly the great drawing power of this star.

Exhibitors Approve Goldwyn-Ford Deal

FROM every section of the United States comes messages of exhibitor approval of Goldwyn's announcement that beginning January 12 it will be the exclusive distributor of the Ford Educational Weekly in the United States, according to report.

"This means," wires a Montana exhibitor, "that there will be a sustained distribution evenly across the nation and that the weekly will be shown in a great many more theatres than ever before." This message is echoed from any sections. Hitherto the Ford Educational Weekly has been well distributed through a series of independent exchanges, but now for the first time its routing and releasing is given the facilities of a great national organization.

News comes from the Ford Motor Company motion picture laboratories that prints of the first five releases are ready and will be going forward to the Goldwyn offices during the present week. Certain physical touches of a new character are being given this fine screen weekly for its Goldwyn releasing premiere. It is to have a new title frame in which both the Ford and Goldwyn names appear, a new sub-title frame and a new style of title lettering. In other words, the weekly, entering upon an enlarged career, keeps abreast of the season by receiving a new "dress."

Tremendous publicity in the newspapers of the country has attached to the announcement of the Goldwyn distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly. Naturally the newspapers of Mr. Ford's home state of Michigan were the first to seize upon the news and editorial comment has been made upon the element of public service that Henry Ford is rendering.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Fox Studio Doings

W. R. Sheehan, general manager of all William Fox exchanges, will arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of this week. Mr. Sheehan is making a nation-wide tour of all the Fox exchanges. It is expected that he will be in the Film Capital during the holidays.

There was a lightning change in directorial circles at the Fox studios this week. Lynn Reynolds, who has been directing Gladys Brockwell, has been selected to handle the megaphone in Peggy Hyland's next picture. Harry Millarde, who has been directing Miss Hyland, will marshal the scenes and otherwise handle important features in the direction of Madelaine Traverse's next picture. Frank Lloyd, who has until recently been directing William Farnum in the East, will direct for Gladys Brockwell.

"Framing the Framers," Gladys Brockwell's latest picture, being filmed under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, will be finished this week.

Madelaine Traverse will begin work on a new subject next week, the title of which has not been announced. Her director will be Harry Millarde. Peggy Hyland will also begin a new picture at an early date.

Paramount-Artcraft

Bryant Washburn has begun work on a new picture, a comedy drama, which has not been titled. Wanda Hawley will be his leading lady. The picture will be made under the direction of Donald Crisp.

Constance Talmadge, who has not been working for some time, will begin the production of a new picture soon for Select, it was announced this week at the Lasky studios. It is not announced whether she will produce at the Lasky plant or at the Morosco studios.

Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, and Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president, are expected to return from New York before Christmas, according to word received at the studios this week from Mr. De Mille. Mr. Lasky has been in the East about three months and Mr. De Mille left for New York about two weeks ago.

Shirley Mason this week finished her newest screen vehicle, and incidentally her first picture since coming West, titled "Jem of Old Rock." It was directed by Robert Vignola, and playing with Miss Mason were Niles Welch as leading man, while Theodore Roberts had a prominent part. Miss Mason will begin work soon on a new picture, which is yet unnamed, under the direction of Walter Edwards. The reason for the change in directors is not announced.

Universal Newsettes

The five-reel production starring Fritzi Brunette, with William Sheer as her leading man, entitled "Sealed Orders," was finished at the Universal studio this week. Douglas Gerrard was the director.

Rupert Julian's "Pirate Bold" is nearing completion. Monroe Salisbury plays the male lead, supported by Ruth Clifford. Other pictures that are in course of production are "The Wild Girl," with Carmel Myers, directed by Paul Powell; "Cherries Are Ripe," with Edith Roberts, under Jack Dillon's direction; "Whose Widow?" a Mary MacLaren production being made under the supervision of Ida May Park.

J. P. McGowan this week continued production on "The Fifth Ace," starring Marie Walcamp. It is a story by Douglas Grant which has been made into an eighteen-chapter melodrama by Hope Loring. It is said that the subject will be produced on a lavish scale.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran this week completed their comedies, "His Body for Rent," a burlesque on "A Soul for Sale," and "The Squared Rounds," a screen farce.

Priscilla Dean has completed her newest Universal production, "The Gutter Rose," under the direction of Ted Browning. Her next picture will be titled "Raggedy Ann," production of which will probably begin the latter part of this week. It is an original story by Charles W. Tyler, which appeared in Detective Stories. The scenario was prepared by Harvey Gates.

Monroe Salisbury's production, "Pirate Gold," was originally written in Hungarian, it is said, by Emil Nyitray. It was translated by Herbert Hall Winslow. The drama was purchased by Universal and Waldemar Young prepared the scenario. The play is being directed by Rupert Julian.

About Metro Players

After much preparation Viola Dana, who recently arrived from New York, this week began production on her newest play "Dian Ardway." Herbert Blache is the director. The story is from the book of the same name, written by Oz Post and scenarioized by John R. Collins.

May Allison is in the middle of her picture, "Peggy Does Her Darnedest," spending much of this week on location. The subject calls for a large number of outdoor scenes, and as an outdoor girl she is called upon to participate in a boxing match in one scene. The picture is being directed by George D. Baker. Robert Ellis is her leading man and Frank Currier plays the heavy. Rosemary Theby is a member of the cast.

Bert Lytell, Metro star, who has been attending an officers' training camp at Fort McArthur, Waco, Tex., has been released from camp, arriving in Los Angeles during the latter part of last week. The present plan of Metro is to start him in a new picture the first of next week, the name of which has not been announced. Three scenarios have been under consideration for his first vehicle upon returning from the ramy.

Maxwell Karger, director general of the Metro studios, has leased a home on Western avenue near the house that was formerly occupied by Mary Pickford, it was announced at the Metro studios this week. It is one of the handsomest residences in that district.

Here and There

Jack Pickford, who recently signed a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, started work on his first production for this concern at the Brunton studios Monday morning, December 9th. James Kirkwood is his director. The title of the play has not been announced, but the vehicle will be a comedy drama. Pickford only recently returned from the East, where he has been in the naval service.

Having recently completed "A Man of the Open," a super-production, Dustin Farnum is planning to begin work on a new subject, possibly next week, it was announced Tuesday from the Brunton studios. The new production will likely be a western entitled "Square Shooting Dan," and will be filmed under the direction of Ernest Warde. Irene Rich will probably be his leading lady, and it is said she will be given a more important role than fell to her lot in Farnum's last play, "A Man in the Open."

"I'll Say So" Is the Name of a New Fox Picture in Which George Walsh Is Starred

Kitty Gordon will start production on a new film play in the near future, the continuity of which is being written by Fred Myton. The picture will be made under the direction of Wallace Worsley. Since Mahlon Hamilton, her leading man in a previous production, has been loaned to Mary Pickford as leading man in her first screen effort for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Miss Gordon is in a quandary as to who will be her leading man in the new picture now contemplated. Studio gossip says that W. Lawson Butt will likely take Hamilton's place.

Actual work of filming her new picture, "Daddy Long Legs," the first production under her contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was begun Monday by Mary Pickford at the Griffith studios. Miss Pickford has completed the cast for the picture, among whom are some of the people who will appear in the production: Mahlon Hamilton, Miss Pickford's leading man; Jarvis Pendelton and Mrs. Pendelton, Eleanor Hancock, Julia Pendelton, Audrey Fair, Audrey Chadman, Charlie McBride, Harry Davenport, Carrie Clark Warde, James Bradbury, May Lemport, Mrs. Sue Semple and William Brown. Mr. Brown will play the part of the butler. A number of real orphans from the Los Angeles Orphanage, under the care of teachers in charge of that institution, have been visiting the lot every day this week, appearing in the orphanage scenes of the plaqy. The children undergo proper medical examination every day before leaving the orphanage for the studio.

A camouflaged German helmet was received this week by Mary Pickford from Bernard Elmes, a former player and at one time a member of Miss Pickford's company. He is serving in France with the British forces. He writes that he will bring back a score of trophies to be distributed among his friends in the Los Angeles film colony.

William S. Hart's newest production, new being filmed and which will be completed next week, has been titled "The Breed of Men." The principal theme of the picture is "careless comedy." Seena Owen is Mr. Hart's leading lady. The plot deals considerably with western life, to impersonate a cynical sheriff of the plains. In this capacity the chase leads him to Chicago, where he visits a mansion in that city and ropes the man he expects to take back with him to the west. "Branding Broadway, a recent picture of Hart's, will be released ahead of "The Breed of Men," it is announced here. When the present production is finished work will begin on a new subject, which, it is said, will be entirely different from anything Hart has heretofore attempted.

Earle Williams, Vitagraph's star, has caused a mild sensation in Los Angeles. He suffered several days from a real old-fashioned cold and not once did he refer to it as the "flue."

William Duncan, Vitagraph's serial star, has had another narrow escape, and again the Duncan luck has been with him. It happened in the making of the fifth episode of "The Man of Might" when Mr. Duncan drove his car over a twenty-five foot embankment, landing safely with the car right side up. He had previously made several lesser jumps with an automobile and felt confident that he could make this one and land evenly on all four wheels at once.

Bessie Love, Vitagraph star, set a new style in novelty feminine dressing, but it went out of fashion as rapidly as it came in. It consisted in wearing one earring made from an Honor Pin presented to her when she graduated from the Los Angeles High School. Bessie considered that she was too old now to wear it as a breast pin and the idea of having it made into an earring and wearing it without a mate on the other side of her head appealed to her. One day was enough, however, for after being stopped about a hundred times by strangers as well as friends and being informed that she "had lost one of her earrings" Miss Love decided that the style was too "advanced" and abandoned it. She is now giving all her attention to "The Enchanted Barn," her next Blue Ribbon Feature.

Blanche Sweet, Star of the Garson-Neilan Production, "The Unpardonable Sin"

Miscellaneous West Coast News

Dorothy Gish and her company have been rehearsing a new picture at the Griffith studios. She began production on Monday, December 9, under the direction of Elmer Clifton. Her leading man will be Richard Barthelmess. The new subject will be a comedy drama, and Miss Gish will play a character part of an English girl.

Robert Harron returned to the Griffith studios this week after a week's illness with influenza. Miss Lillian Gish, who was also a victim of influenza, is back on the Griffith lot.

Blanche Sweet left last Monday for New York for a short shopping trip, taking advantage of the opportunity provided through temporary discontinuance of production by the Clara Kimball Young-Blanche Sweet companies. Clara Kimball Young will leave for New York on December 14, accompanied by her manager, Harry Garson. Miss Young stated this week that with the termination of her contract with Mr. Garson she is planning to go to France for one year. Mr. Garson announces that he will return to Los Angeles about January 1, 1919. He says the Blanche Sweet Company will continue production after the first of the new year.

Lillian Walker, who has for some time been filming scenes in "The Novel Fran," her first production with her own producing company, will complete this production next week, it is announced, this week at the Brunton studios. The story is from the pen of John Breckenridge Ellis, and was scenarioized by Jack Cunningham.

Neva Gerber, Who Appears with Harry Carey in "Roped," Universal Film

W. P. S. Earl is the director. Director Earl has been shooting some big tent scenes this week, and he expects to film some scenes next week in which lions will take a prominent part in the story.

Messrs. Pickford, Kirkwood and Hammer arrived in Los Angeles Friday, and the former two are now working on the preparation of the first story, filming of which will be started early during the coming week. Arrangements have been made for space at the Brunton studios where at least the first subject will be filmed. Prior to coming West, rights on several well-known stories were secured, and these will be put in films following the first original story written by Pickford and Kirkwood.

K. McGaffey was seen about the Alexandria hotel several evenings this week frantically writing telegrams.

We discovered a leading man whose name is Cash, but we won't tell you who he is. We refer all inquiries to Monroe Salisbury.

Bill Ritchey, who is known on the screen as W. M., has had a ten-round bout with the "flu" germs and is back at his Underwood.

Irving Cummings has taken a bungalow, and is again content to be a California resident, inasmuch as he draws his salary out here.

Paul Dowling belongs to the "out again" class, and is again a publicity writer of the west coast colony after a year in the navy.

Bessie Barriscale was seen in the make-up of a dancer and from all reports it's some make-up. Director Friend Husband, Howard Hickman, wore colored glasses.

Ham Beal, chief exponent of Universal Production information, now numbers his news letters, and has attained such speed that the most recent issued is numbered 129.

Bennie Ziedman entertained Adam Hull Shirk and ye ed. at luncheon, because heads and tails didn't match. Bennie is really reckless. Adam enjoyed his coffee and.

Frank Keenan was royally welcomed back to sunkist California, and the greeting he received caused Dustin Farnum to claim that it was Keenan's grey hair that made him so popular.

Bill Russell was not in Los Angeles this week because he took his troop to San Francisco to make a picture, and thereby Santa Barbara and Los Angeles are both losers. Come again, Bill.

Since Ed. Sloman has been spending a week on the desert filming a Margarita Fisher subject, he has come to learn the true meaning of the California phrase, "you can sleep under blankets the year round."

Molly McConnell played with Frank Mayo on the New York stage when he was a bawling brat. Then again he was an aspiring juvenile at Balboa, and now she is supporting him as a Universal leading man.

Bill Sheer is more than pleased with himself, for a little child saw him playing the part of a burglar and refused to make his acquaintance for she thought he really was a burglar, and the child is an actress too.

William S. Hart was seen at the studio wearing a sombrero which was so large that it completely hid his publicity department, which is manned by Paul Hubert "Scoop" Conlon. "Scoop" plans on using the hat for a big top when he opens his circus in the Spring.

Leon Kent has passed out. That mean looking heavy has resumed his family name, Leon de la Mothe. And would you believe it, Leon is a great great great grandson of de la Mothe who was field marshal of Napoleon's cavalry, and now he's playing in "The Fifth Ace," the new Universal serial.

Perfumed stationery from Walraven of Lehrman Sunshine Comedies advises us that Gerald Duffy has been engaged as personal representative by Bessie Love. Yes, this is the same Gerald Duffy who is editor of the Picture Play Magazine, and more recently put in his time keeping William S. Hart's name before the public eye. In addition to that he is said to be a slicker with the pasteboards and Underwood.

About New Pictures

A good old-fashioned "surprise party" marked the completion of the Screen Classics, Inc., feature, "The Man Who Stayed at Home."

"The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's newest superfeature, distributed by the Vitagraph Company, has photographic effects in the allegorical prologue which are promised to prove a genuine surprise, and to many, a conundrum.

Charles Ray, the young Thomas H. Ince star, is at work at the Ince studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Jerome Storm, on a new baseball picture for Paramount, which is as yet unnamed.

"The Path to Victory," No. 24 of Official War Review, released by Pathe December 9, is announced as one of the most thrilling and instructive instalments of the patriotic and educational series.

Irene Rich plays a minor part in "Adele." She plays it so well that her work led to her being chosen by Dustin Farnum as his leading lady in "A Man in the Open." "Adele" was one of the first feature films Miss Rich ever appeared in.

Scenes on a tropical island near the equator, the filming of which is said to have cost the Universal Film Mfg. Co. more than $5,000, are features of "The Nature Girl," a Bluebird picture.

William N. Bailey who recently completed a tour of vaudeville, has signed with the Betzwood Film Corporation, of Philadelphia, Pa., for one of the leading roles in a new feature under direction of Ira M. Lowery.

Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount pictures, whose picture, "Quicksand," is scheduled for release December 22, has returned to Hollywood from her California farm.

Peggy Hyland, the William Fox star, arrived in Los Angeles accompanied by her fox terrier "Jackpots," who enjoyed his arrival in the sunny southland of California as much as did his mistress.

That the "eats" is the basic necessity of an army was shown in No. 2 of "Winning the War," released by Pathe, December 8. The scenario was furnished by the Committee on Public Information and is called "Feeding Our Fighters."

In "Too Many Millions," Wallace Reid's Paramount picture released December 8, Ora Carewe plays the leading feminine role, that of Desiree Lane, and a strong cast is said to support Reid.

"Another 'Polly of the Circus!'" That was the ejaculation of a New York exhibitor following a private screening of Mae Marsh's newest Goldwyn Picture, "The Racing Strain."

When the first assembled print of "The Belle of New York," Marion Davies' Select production, was shown in the projection room at the studio, the continuity of the story and the directorship of Julius Steger is said to have made of it a performance that held its small audience enthralled until the final fadeout.

At the premiere of the Artcraft production, "My Cousin," in one of the loge boxes was Caruso himself, accompanied by his bride. With them sat Mme. Frances Alda, Antonio Scotti, Mr. and Mrs. Gennaro Papi, Mr. and Mrs. Enrico Scognamille, Mr. and Mrs. Pasquale Amato and Bruno Zirato.

United Picture Theatres declares that Kitty Gordon wears a series of wonderful hats and that one of these millinery creations cost $1,000. In addition, they assert, she wears twelve expensive gowns of the latest fashions with her jewels valued at $200,000, and one sable coat that she wears is declared to have cost $25,000.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are under full headway at the Fifty-sixth Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, being engaged in completing their Paramount-Artcraft Special, "When the Boys Come Home."

"Pershing's Crusaders," distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the Committee on Public Information, was the stellar attraction at the recent convention in Providence, R. I., of the Northeastern Dental Association.

John Lynch is said to have written an exceedingly interesting story for Dorothy Dalton's Paramount picture, "Quicksand," released December 22. R. Cecil Smith prepared the scenario and Victor Schertzinger directed the film, which is a Thomas H. Ince production.

Projection Music Laboratory Studio Theatre

You can cut your running expense and get better attendance

THERE are only two ways for you to make more money:—one is to reduce the cost for operating your theatre, and the other is to get bigger patronage—get the people to prefer your theatre and attend it more often. You can accomplish both these desired results at one and the same time by simply changing your present projection equipment to use the Manufactured under Argus Patents by the General Electric Co.

Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter
for Mazda Lamp Projection

The big saving of 50 to 75% in electric current bills each month will soon pay for making the change, and after that the monthly saving will be all "velvet." In addition to this saving, the new equipment will give better screen illumination and eliminate flicker and eye-strain, thereby causing the public to prefer your theatre and attend more often. That will mean additional profits for you right from the start.

The Argus-Sheck Universal Adapter can be installed quickly and easily on any projection machine without disturbing the carbon-arc equipment, by using the Argus Ezy Bracket. Anyone can make the change by following our simple photographic instructions.

With the Big 900-watt Mazda Projector Lamp perfected recently, Mazda Projection may be used efficiently in 90% of all picture theatres; for longer throws and larger screens than formerly.

Hundreds of exhibitors are getting the benefits of using this modern, efficient idea. You, too, should adopt it, if only from the "dollars and cents" standpoint. Mail the inquiry blank below.

Argus Crystal Bead Screen
[Patented]

This wonderful new screen has been installed and is highly endorsed by many exhibitors—it is the last word in screens. The Argus Screen gives added depth of focus and realism to the pictures, and eliminates "fade-away" from angle projection. It may be washed with warm water without streaking. It will insure perfectly projected pictures when viewed from any seat in your theatre. Ask for quotation, giving the size of your screen.

What Do You Sell the Public?

DURING the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers an informal discussion was started between certain members on the best method of bringing about a realization among the theatre interests as to exactly what excuse motion picture theatres had for existing. In other words why should the public go into a picture house? What do they go for? Why pay their money and what do they get?

Have you ever analyzed it? Ask the leading theatre architect of any of the larger cities and see what he says. His answer will be something like this, "Well the picture of course is something but the atmosphere is the thing—the surrounding must be beautiful. The architecture and technique of the building must be of the very best or the house will never be a big success." In other words his fee depends upon how much money he can get the owners to spend on his plans and the carrying of them out. His, as is natural, is a personal feeling, a pride in the finished product. The building is his baby and that to him is the only thing that counts—the excuse for the theatre's existence.

Then we turn to the manufacturer of the organ and request an expression of opinion from him. His answer is also a natural one. "The picture alone will never go over unless the proper music is there. The finest organ made is none too good. It is the music which, in the last analysis, makes or breaks a house." Fine—but the public will not pay to come into a house to hear music only. This we all know.

The installation of an organ costing from $3,000 to $20,000 is made without a thought or at least the price is considered a natural charge. No serious objection is made to it. The theatre man signs the contract and is willing to pay the price.

When we go to the Producer of Motion Pictures and ask him what is sold to the public he answers as is natural, "The ony thing the public wants is the reproduction of the story on the screen. It must be a good story—exciting—full of heart interest with a punch from start to finish." In other words his interest is centred in the studio. His duty is to put on a strip of celluloid film a story which will appeal to the theatre man so that he will rent it, and in time show it in his house to an appreciative audience. This is where his responsibility ends. He considers that the rest is up to the theatre man, and it is.

There is something to be said in favor of all three of these attitudes but they must be combined before we have a platform from which to start.

Good pictures—PROPERLY PROJECTED ON THE SCREEN—accompanied by good music and shown in an attractive atmosphere is our platform.

The main plank in this platform, however, and the one which is lost sight of most often is the actual result on the screen—THE PROJECTION. The theatre man wants a new house. He calls in his architect. Elaborate plans are drawn. The house is started. Where is the Projection Room—the heart of the house—the very excuse for its existence? Why ask foolish questions? That is naturally somewhere above the ceiling line. The angle of throw? What does that mean? "Don't bother us with details," says the architect, "we'll take care of that later." And they do.

New organ? "Oh yes, that has been ordered; a beauty, costs $15,000." Projection machine? "Oh, will get one somewhere. They'll give us four or five for the advertising value the installation will have. Remember this is a great house, and if we use a certain make of machine all the other theatres in the country will be in a mad rush to buy the same kind. Don't bother me about details. When the house is finished we will have plenty of time to pick out projectors."

And yet if it were not for the projector machine and the wonderful results which it produces, the architect, the organ manufacturers—and all the other equipment manufacturers—would be looking for other fields in which to sell their wares. The projector is the heart of every house and the one excuse in the last analysis for its existence.

When the house is built first and projection is considered last something is wrong—and the question is, How can it be corrected? The answer is simple.

The only way to force upon the theatre man a realization of why he is building his house and what he is selling to the public is to have a price fixed on the projection machine which will make a dent in his financial resources. This will do two things.

First—It will force upon the architect the necessity of laying out his projection first and then building his house to conform to it. This is the only way to properly produce that which is sold to the public. THE ACTUAL RESULT ON THE SCREEN—GOOD PROJECTION.

Second—It will force the theatre man and architect to build a projection room which will be large, spacious, well ventilated and in fact worthy of housing the projection which gain this respect simply due to the shrinkage in the bank balance when the bill for them is paid. The machines may not do any better work than they do today, but they will be held in proper respect, which is not the case now.

The projection room is the heart of the picture theatre and the result on the screen brings in the public. Both should be on the same level in order to obtain 100 per cent results. The higher the projection room is raised over this horizontal the more unsatisfactory the results, the worse it is for the patrons' eyes, and the more the theatre should be condemned.

The Function of the Condenser in Projection Apparatus

By Dr. Hermann Kellner

[A paper read at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Cleveland, O., November 20, 1918]

(B) A Perfect Condenser and an Extended Light Source. If the image of the light source is not point shaped, the multitude of rays passing through a transparent point in the stencil causes a spot of light on the screen instead of a point, the size and shape of which is determined by the rays drawn from the object-point through the different points of the image of the source. Fig. 5

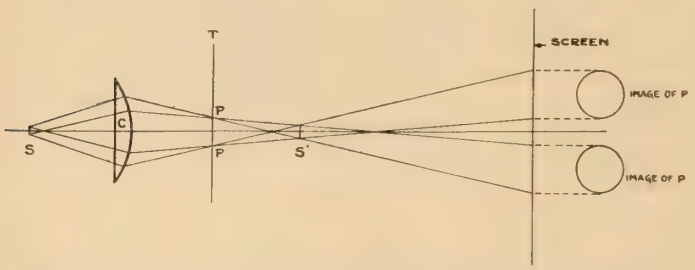

Fig. 5—Projection of a transparent point, P, of stencil, T, by an optically perfect condenser in combination with an extended source. Instead of the point, P, being projected as a point on the screen, it appears as a patch of light, or "circle of confusion," whose size and shape depends largely upon the size and shape of the source shows how the rays forming the image of the source, and crossing at the object-point, pass from the light-source through different parts of the lens. The size of the spot of light on the screen which represents the projection of an object-point will depend on the size of the source, or its image, as well as upon the location of the object-point between the condenser lens and the image of the source. Projection in this simple manner is possible only if the detail of the object is coarse in comparison with the size of the image of the source. For the projection of detail of a minuteness beyond a certain limit, a projection lens will have to be applied as will be shown later. We shall next consider:

(C) The usual case of an Imperfect Condenser in Combination with an Extended Light Source. Instead of having one image of

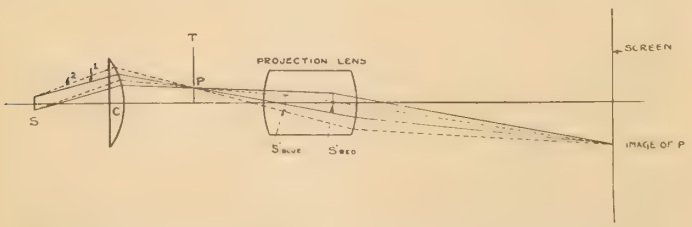

Fig. 6—Projection of transparent point, P, of stencil, T, by a projection lens in combination with an uncorrected condenser. Although the blue image of source, S' BLUE, and the red image, S' RED, are formed at different distances from the condenser, C, the projection lens reproduces a colorless, white, image of P on the screen, provided that both condenser and projection lens are of sufficient aperture the source, each zone of the condenser will produce an image of the source at a different place along the optical axis, and for each color contained in the radiation from the source a different series of such images will be produced. The projection of the point takes place as described under (A) and (B), with the result that the light patch on the screen, the so-called circle of confusion, will have colored fringes, red towards, and blue away from, the center of the field. The spherical aberration will add distortion to the image in the way explained above. The patch of confused light, caused by the size of the light source and by chromatic aberration, which appears on the screen in place of the image of the object-point, can be converted into a true image of the object point by the interposition of:

(D) A Projection Lens. Fig. 6 shows the arrangement, and also offers an explanation why, in spite of the chromatic aberration of the condenser, the image of a white object on the screen is white. We add here that the image of the source must always fall in the aperture of the projection lens, which has to be large enough, but need not be larger than is necessary to transmit all the radiation going from the condenser through the image of the source. The differently colored rays which intersect in the object-point belong to white rays which fall upon different zones of the condenser lens. For instance, of the white ray (1) from the source, a red component is refracted in the direction of the object-point, while of the white ray (2), a blue component, and of another white ray lying between (1) and (2), the green component, leave the condenser in the direction of the object-point.

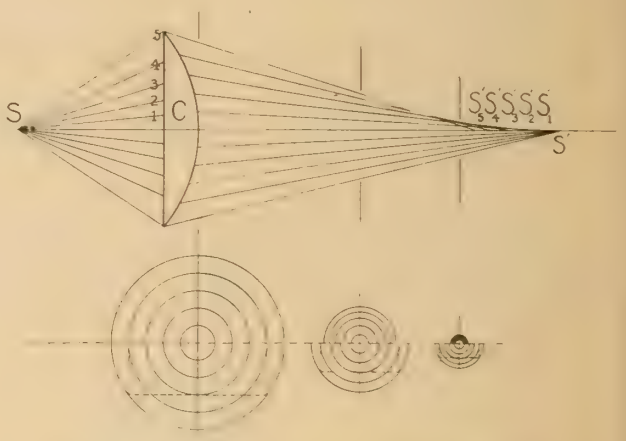

Fig. 7—Below the optical axis is shown the longitudinal section of a beam produced by a spherically corrected condenser, and above the axis the section of a beam producerd by a spherically uncorrected condenser. While all zones of the spherically corrected condenser image the source, S, at S', the zones 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 of the uncorrected condenser produce images of the source at S'_1, S'_2, S'_3, S'_4, S'_5. The three cross-sections through the beam at different distances from the condenser allow a comparison of the light distribution in these sections

This multitude of colored rays passing through the object-point must, therefore, comprise all of the colors composing the light of the source, and when gathered by the projecting lens and brought to the same image-point on the screen, form a white image of the object-point. It is very evident also, that the image on the screen is white only if all of the colored rays which may possibly go through the object-point are united in the image on the screen. If, for instance, the diameter of the condensers were too small to pass the ray (2), the image would appear reddish yellow instead of white, because the blue is missing, or if the diameter of the projection lens were too small to let the red ray pass, the image of the point would be bluish.

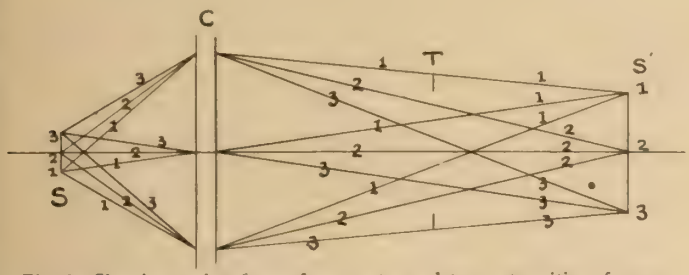

Fig. 8—Showing paths of rays from center and two extremities of source as they pass through condenser toward image of source.
Note: This is a graphical construction, and in this and the two following diagrams the condenser system is indicated by two parallel lines.

As long as we take care not to rob the pencil of rays forming the image on the screen of any of its colored components, we shall have no difficulty on account of the chromatic aberration of the condenser. Of much greater influence is the effect of the spherical aberration. To obtain an even illumination of the screen, the section through the cone at the location of the stencil must be evenly illuminated. The cone of a perfectly corrected condenser offers sections with even distribution of light anywhere between the condenser lens and the image of the source—Fig. 7. There is, however, a slight falling off of the illumination towards the margin, for the same reason as stated at the beginning of this paper. A condenser that has spherical aberration will produce a cone in which the distribution of light is even only in sections near the condenser lens. The sections approaching the image of the source show a more and more increasing accumulation of light near the margin of the section, because there the rays are more crowded together than in the central part of the field, as may be seen from the figure. This is of no significance in lantern-slide projection, because the slide, on account of its size, is always located near the condenser, but is very disturbing when, as in motion picture projection, the stencil is small and is located nearer to the image of the source. If we place the stencil

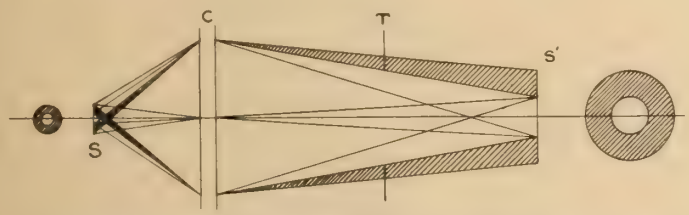

Fig. 9—White circular areas at right and left show the portion of source imaged by the entire aperture of condenser, and the image formed by the condenser of this portion. The shaded annular zones around the white circles represent that part of the radiation from the source which is not utilized, on account of the interposition of the aperture-plate, T

so that its diagonal is equal to the diameter of the cone, we shall have its corners in the marginal concentration of the light and, therefore, an uneven illumination of the stencil (see Fig. 7). To avoid this the stencil has to be moved towards the condenser until its whole area lies in the evenly illuminated part of the cone. This means, of course, the loss of a very great percentage of light. The mere fact that a condenser has spherical aberration does not, however, entail any loss of light if we are satisfied with an uneven illumination, as long as the aperture of the projection lens is large enough to receive all the light passing through the image of the source. The sharpness of the image on the screen is not influenced by the spherical aberration of the condenser, if the illuminating system is so centered that the image of the source (the spot) lies symmetrical to the center of the projection lens. If a slight decentration of the spot, without the spot getting outside of the aperture of the projection lens, causes a deterioration of the image on the screen, the fault lies in the projection lens.

Another factor of influence upon the efficiency of a given combination of light source, condenser and projection lens is the relation between:

The Size of the Source and the Location of the Mat forming the border around the picture, the so-called Aperture-Plate of the apparatus. The actual amount of light traveling from the condenser to the image of the source is embraced in a cone, the base of which is the condenser and the apex the image of the source. If the source is not point shaped, the cone will be truncated.

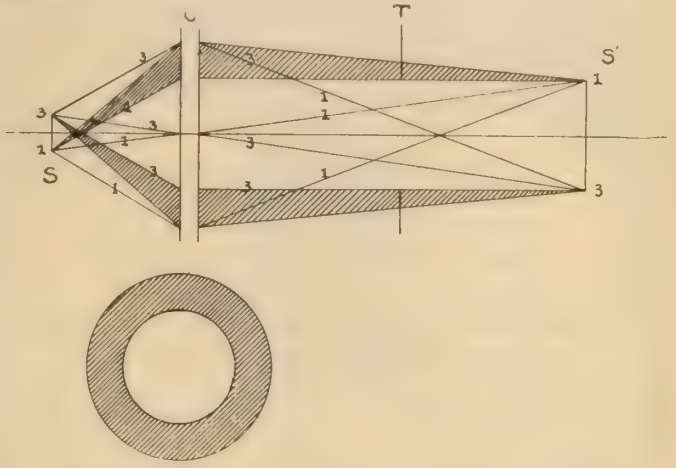

Fig. 10—Shaded portion shows part of solid-angle of radiation from extremities of source which is diaphragmed by aperture-plate. Radiation from extremities of source falling upon shaded marginal zone of condenser is not fully utilized, by reason of diaphragming action (II) of aperture-plate

We consider first a point-shaped source. If the stencil is of rectangular shape and its diagonal equal to the diameter of the light cone at the position of the stencil, the four segments of the illuminated circle outside of the stencil do not contribute to the illumination. We shall refer to this in the following as diaphragming action (I). This effect is perfectly self-evident, and there is no remedy for this loss unless we make the stencil circular in shape (see, in Fig. 7, the half rectangles inscribed in the sections through the lower cone.) Rectangular condensers have been suggested, and are re-suggested now and then, but instead of saving light they merely cut out the unused light at a different plane of the optical system. They serve no useful purpose and are more expensive to make and to mount than the ordinary round condenser.

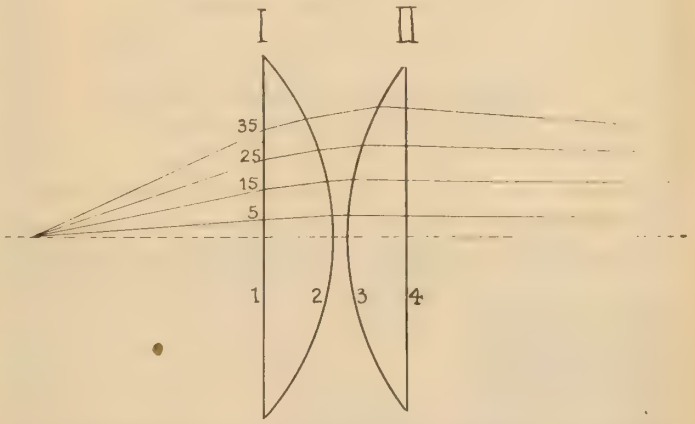

Fig. 11—Showing the relative lengths of the paths of rays through zones at distances of 5, 15, 25 and 35 mm. from axis of ordinary condenser system

In the case of a light-source of extended area, the aperture-plate not only cuts off these four segments, but also screens off parts of the condenser, or of the light-source, in such a way that while the radiation from the central parts of the source, which fills the condenser aperture, reaches the image of the source and is therefore utilized, the radiation from the extra-axial points of the source, although it passes through the condenser, only partly reaches the image of the source and contributes to the illumination of the object point. We shall call this in the following diaphragming action (II).

To simplify the drawings the light-source and the aperture-plate in the following are assumed to be circular. Fig. 8 shows the path of the light rays from the center and from the two ends of the source as they pass through the condenser towards the image of the source. S and S' are two conjugate points of the source and its image; the rays connecting them are designated with the same figures (1), (2), (3).

Fig. 9 illustrates how the ray from point 1 through the lower margin of the condenser does not reach the image-point 1, and how the angle of useful radiation is reduced (as indicated by the shaded portion) by reason of the diaphragming action of the aperture-plate. Only the portions of the middle part of the source send forth cones which fill the aperture of the condenser, while all the shaded parts of the pencils of rays from points 1 and 3 are intercepted by the aperture-plate, as illustrated by the next drawing, Fig. 10.

We have to consider next the Losses by Absorption and Reflection. The amount of light lost by absorption in a piece of glass depends upon the absorption coefficient of the material and on the thickness of the piece. The absorption coefficient varies from 0.3 per cent. per cm. for clear glass to about 4 per cent. per cm. for very bad glass. The loss of light in a lens varies with the zones through which the light passes, depending on the differing lengths of the path between the surfaces.

The loss by reflection depends upon the index of refraction of the glass, and upon the angle of incidence under which a ray strikes the surface. It increases, therefore, towards the margin of the condenser, because the angles of incidence are greater there than nearer the center of the lens.

The following two tables show for 4 different zones of an ordinary M. P. condenser, the path-lengths and the mean losses by absorption and reflection in these zones for the absorption coefficients 1.3 per cent. and 3.9 per cent. per cm., which are about the limit values for glasses available for this purpose. Fig. 11 illustrates approximately the paths of the rays through the middle zones of the condenser.

PERFECTED PROJECTION

PERFECTED Projection plus portability—that's the DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector. Entirely self-contained, weighs but 20 lbs., takes standard size reels and film and projects a 12 ft. picture at any throw up to 80 ft.

Equal in performance within its prescribed limitations to the best professional projector, yet so wonderfully light and compact that it can be carried with greater ease than the suit case it resembles.

Adopted by the United States Government in all Departments where motion pictures are used, and by the American Red Cross, at home and abroad. Used also in all Y. M. C. A. work, on transports, at home and "over there."

A New Photographic Mordant Dye Process

By Frederick E. Ives

[Bulletin from the Hess-Ives Laboratories, Philadelphia, Pa.]

THE first photographic mordant dye process to attract attention was the silver-iodide process of Dr. Traube (U. S. Pat. 1,093,503, 1914). Metallic silver photographic images converted to silver iodide and immersed in solutions of basic dyes become strongly colored. If the dye is then fixed by tannin, the silver-iodide can be dissolved out, leaving a transparent dye image. Traube's method was improved upon by Tauleigne and Mazo (U. S. Pat. 1,059,917, 1913), who showed how to produce a silver-iodide image having a stronger affinity for the basic dyes, and incidentally that by first hardening the gelatine with alum and then treating the silver-iodide image with a strong solution of potassium iodide it was made so transparent that for most purposes it was unnecessary to dissolve out the silver-iodide image. The step of hardening the gelatine in alum to prevent it from softening and dissolving in the strong potassium iodide solution was omitted in the U. S. Patent specification, but was published in the British Journal Photographic Almanac, 1912, page 653. Hoyt Miller (U. S. Pat. 1,214,940, 1917), as a result of experiments with the process without alum hardening, declared the process unworkable and broadly claimed the production and dyeing of a transparent silver-iodide image, hardening the gelatine with formalin instead. I have myself operated the Tauleigne-Mazo process with perfect success.

Incidentally, it had been discovered that silver ferrocyanide, silver chromate and some other silver salts could be similarly dyed, but not with satisfactory results. Fox (U. S. Pat. 1,166,123, 1916) disclosed the fact that a vanadium-toned silver image mordanted basic dyes, and Crabtree and Ives (priority to Crabtree) independently discovered that a copper-toned image had the same property to a very notable and useful degree. The copper-toned image, like the transparent kind of silver-iodide image, is sufficiently transparent for most purposes without "fixing out," but can be made perfectly transparent by fixing in "hypo" without first fixing the dye image with tannin. It has the disadvantage for some purposes that the copper-ferrocyanide image is itself colored (red-brown) and will not serve as the base for pure blue and green images. It has proved perfectly satisfactory for the production of orange-red images in combination with a cyanotype print in the same colloid layer in my colored moving picture process, U. S. Pat. 1,278,668, 1918.

Recently I have discovered a new method of producing mordant-dye photographic images, which I think is superior to any heretofore known. The mordant is a chromium compound, the exact nature of which I have not yet determined, but it is not silver chromate, which is of a deep red color, while the image which I produce previous to dyeing is of a very pure, though pale, yellow color. It is produced very simply, quickly and cheaply, by bleaching the silver image in a solution of equal parts of potassium ferrocyanide and chromic acid, the action of which is analogous to that of potassium iodide, in that if the solution is weak the image is not transparent; but if the solution is strong, the image is perfectly transparent and of a pale, though pure, yellow color. It is necessary to wash out the free chromic acid after bleaching. The pale yellow image thus produced has a much stronger affinity for some of the basic dyes than either silver iodide or copper ferrocyanide. In fact, the silver image, for the best results, must be thin and superficial.

My bleaching solution is made with one ounce each of potassium ferrocyanide and chromic acid in one gallon of water, at which strength it acts very quickly and produces a transparent yellow image. Transfer to running water should be made immediately when the image is completely bleached to avoid over-hardening of the gelatine by the chromic acid. Long washing is necessary to clear out the free chromic acid, but it discharges rapidly in water containing a little soda bicarbonate, and the image also dyes up quicker and clears more rapidly after dyeing if the soda bicarbonate is used. I always use it, but too long immersion whitens the image, reduces its transparency and produces a weaker, though still strong and brilliant dye image.

A typical dye bath is made by dissolving 10 grains of saffranin in 4 ounces of alcohol and adding to it 1 quart of water made slightly acid with acetic acid. For complete dyeing, an immersion of half an hour or more may be necessary. This will stain the entire film deeply, after which it may be cleared by washing in water containing a very little acetic acid. Other very active dyes are malachite green and auramine.

The images which have been whitened by long soaking in soda bicarbonate solution have the same appearance and transparency as silver ferrocyanide images, but have many times more mordanting power—even more than silver iodide.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Two samples of motion picture film, dyed according to the above procedure, accompanied Mr. Ives' article, one being colored green and the other the complementary shade of red. The film samples show vivid coloring and the dye images are very transparent.

An Inorganic Process for Tinting Motion Picture Film

[U. S. Patent, No. 1,279,276, J. I. Crabtree, assignor to Eastman Kodak Co.]

INASMUCH as present conditions in the dye-stuff industry render it difficult to obtain the necessary organic dyes for staining motion picture positive films to give special color effects, a cheaper way of obtaining the desired result has been sought after in the motion picture industry, and the process described in the following paragraphs is well adapted to stain such film.

Motion picture positive film ordinarily comprises a flexible transparent base on which is a layer of transparent gelatin, and in the gelatin are the small particles of silver constituting the image, this silver image being substantially opaque in its gradations. Color effects in such film have been obtained chiefly by two methods: First, toning the silver image by changing the color of the particles thereof without appreciably or intentionally changing the color of the gelatin; second, tinting the gelatin itself. This second method has been performed hitherto by using expensive organic dye-stuffs as the agents for staining the gelatin. The method which will be here described relates chiefly to a modification of this second method, in which inorganic coloring matter is substituted for the more expensive organic dyes. It is to be understood that even if a certain extent of toning or alteration in the color of the silver image should incidentally take place in the new method, it is usually indetectable and in any event is not noticeable to any material extent.

Broadly stated, colored metallic salts are precipitated within the colloidal gelatin layer. To this end two solutions are used, one containing a soluble salt of the metal which is to enter into the precipitate, and another containing a soluble salt which furnishes the acid radical which is to enter into the precipitate. The metals which furnish the best compounds appear to be iron, uranium, lead, copper, bismuth, cadmium, tin, tungsten, molybdenum, silver, mercury, cobalt or nickel. The best acid radicals appear to be those which form ferrocynanides or sulfides depending, of course, on the metal ion employed.

First Example—Blue Tint

Using any usual or preferred apparatus for fluid treating motion picture film, the film strip to be tinted is immersed for five minutes in a 1 per cent solution of ferric-alum, then rinsed and next immersed in a 1 per cent solution of potassium ferro-cyanide until the desired tint is obtained. The film is then well washed for 10 to 15 minutes. A blue tint due to colloidal ferric ferrocyanide is obtained. The control of the tint is obtained by regulating several factors.

The depth of the tint obtained increases with increasing concentration of the ferric-alum, and the strength of the solution which may be employed, of course, can be varied to suit the operator's needs. It is found, however, that a 1 per cent solution is sufficiently strong in practice, and is usually preferable to stronger solutions which tend to give a tint too deep for ordinary projection.

The depth of the tint increases with the time of immersion within certain limits, and with solutions of the strength given, prolonged immersion after 3 to 5 minutes has very little effect.

The time of rinsing is, however, an important factor. Using the solutions given, one or two minutes washing it necessary for weak tints, while for stronger tints a mere quick rinsing is all that should be given. While the practice is not usually to be recommended, the rinsing may sometimes be dispensed with.

The nature of the final tint is independent of the concentration of the potassium ferrocyanide solution, provided the film be immersed for a sufficient length of time; the maximum effect with a 1 per cent solution being usually produced within five minutes. A shorter immersion will, of course, give lighter tints, although this way of modifying the tint is not as desirable as the varying of the time of rinsing, because it tends to cause intensification of tinting during subsequent washing.

The temperature of the coloring baths has a considerable effect, a shorter time of immersion being necessary in the ferric-alum at high temperature. Too high temperatures, however, tend to produce reticulation or puckering of the gelatin, and a temperature of about 70° F. is more satisfactory.

Second Example—Orange Tint

The film is immersed in a 1 per cent solution of uranium nitrate, rinsed, and then immersed in a 1 per cent solution of potassium ferrocyanide in the same manner as outlined above in the first example. The factors which affect the tinting are similar to those described in connection with the blue tinting and need not, therefore, be repeated. An orange tint due to colloidal uranium ferrocyanid is obtained from this bath.

It may be here noted that the first and second tinting methods may, to a certain extent, be combined to produce darker tints, a small amount of ferric-alum being added to the uranium nitrate bath.

Third Example—Sulfide Tint

The film is immersed for a suitable time, say two minutes, in a 1 per cent. solution of lead nitrate, rinsed, and then immersed in a 5 per cent solution of sodium sulfide for a suitable time, which may be about two minutes. To avoid softening of the film with these particular solutions, the temperature should not exceed 70° F. A tint due to colloidal lead sulfide is hereby obtained.

Other nitrates, such, for instance, as cupric nitrate and bismuth nitrate, may be substituted for the lead nitrate in this method, and the factors of control are the same as those of the previous examples.

It is important on economical grounds that the baths should not quickly deteriorate, and it has been ascertained experimentally that the baths recommended possess long life and are insensitive to light.

Folding tests have indicated that the wearing qualities of the film are not affected by this method of tinting, while tests (exposure to light) have also shown that the tints do not materially alter within periods of time corresponding to the commercial life of the film.

The iron and uranium ferrocyanides, which are formed in the first and second examples given above, are soluble in alkali, such as alkali carbonate, caustic alkali, etc. This is a valuable feature as it enables the operator to remove the tint wholly or partially should he find the color unadapted to the particular subject portrayed by the film. Furthermore, he may tint the film for one exhibit and decolorise it for another exhibit where different lighting conditions prevail. Since the silver image is not materially altered by the above solution, it will not be dissolved or altered when the tinting salts are dissolved out. It will be noted from these examples that this tinting process is carried out independently of any light action, making slow printing operations unnecessary.

The tint is quite uniformly distributed throughout the gelatin; consequently the method may be used not only to tint an even layer of gelatin, but may also be used to tint gelatin layers of varying thickness, such as are produced by printing bichromated gelatin under a negative and dissolving away the soluble gelatin in the well-known way to form a gelatin relief image. A monochrome image of desired tint can thus be obtained.

The theory of the method seems to be that colloidal substances, such as gelatin, have an enormous number of minute or capillary passages therein, into which diffuses the first solution, which contains the ions of that metal that is to enter into the precipitated colored particles constituting the tint. Rinsing removes such solution from the surface of the gelatin, and, if prolonged, diminishes the concentration of the metallic ions in some or all of the passages of the gelatin. When the gelatin is next placed in the second or precipitating solution, containing the anions which are to enter into the precipitate, said solution diffuses though the passages in the gelatin and the anions combine with the metallic ions. The result is a precipitate of colored particles wherever the two ions meet, and, due to the minute passages in which they are formed and to the so-called protective action of the colloidal gelatin, these particles cannot agglomerate, but remain dispersed in a finely divided or colloidal state. The individual particles cannot be seen by the naked eye or under a low-power magnifier, the tint appearing homogeneous. Washing removes the soluble salts which remain after the precipitate is formed and it may also check overtinting. While this is the theory of the action as now understood, a knowledge of the true theory is, of course, not required in practising the process.

It will be seen from the examples given that this tinting process is particularly applicable to colloidal layers having a definite image already formed therein. The colloid is still transparent or light transmitting after tinting, but the light which can pass through it will, of course, be colored, and this is particularly important in projection work. Thus with the ferric ferrocyanide blue tint, bluish light will be transmitted, and if the incident light is white, certain wave-lengths, or components thereof, will be absorbed or modified by the colored particles in the tint, so that only the wave-lengths or components corresponding to the blue color will pass through.

Local 181 of Baltimore Puts New Wage Schedule Into Effect

WE are advised by Mr. G. Kingston Howard, business manager of Local 181, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Baltimore, Maryland, that a new schedule of wages was recently adopted by that organization, becoming effective on December 16.

The terms of the revised wage schedule and working agreement are as follows:

(1) One Operator, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $21.00 per week. (a) With one Matinee per week beginning at 2 p. m. or later, including one hour or more relief for Supper, not less than $23.10 per week. (b) Without Supper relief, not less than $24.15 per week.

(2) Open-Air Theatres, night work only, five hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $21.00 per week, regardless of Weather Conditions.

(3) All Matinees, opening at 2 p. m. or later, and closing at 5 p. m. or earlier, not less than $2.10 extra each Matinee.

(4) One Operator, eight hours or less, including one hour or more relief for Supper daily, not less than $29.40 per week. (a) Without Supper relief, not less than $35.70 per week.

(5) One Operator, nine hours or less, including one hour or more relief for Supper daily, not less than $33.60 per week. (a) Without Supper relief, not less than $39.90 per week. (b) This also applies to Vaudeville or other Houses playing two or more Shows daily.

(6) Theatres running 12 hours or longer shall require two Operators and time shall be divided equally between them.

(7) Two Operators, each working six hours or less daily, no relief, not less than $25.20 each per week. (a) For longer hours Operators shall be paid pro rata.

(8) Operators shall not work more than their Regular Daily Shift without permission from this Organization.

(9) Overtime, consisting of Supper Hour, and (a) all work above Eight Hours, except keeping Operating Room clean, not less than $1.05 per hour or fraction thereof. (b) All work between 12 Midnight and 8 a. m. shall be at overtime rates. (c) Operators shall report for duty at least 15 minutes before opening of Show.

(10) Entertainments, such as Churches, Lodges, etc., One Operator, five hours or less, not less than $5.00 each Performance. (a) For putting up Machine, Booth, etc., not less than $1.00 extra. (b) For taking down Machine, Booth, etc., not less than $1.00 extra.

(11) Carrying Reels at overtime rates. The Members of this Organization do not care to carry Film at all, and believe that this service can be performed better by any other Employee.

(12) A Manager must give an Operator one week's notice in writing before discharging him, otherwise he forfeits one week's salary, which is paid to the Operator. This rule may be waived with permission in writing from this Organization.

(13) An Operator must give a Manager one week's notice in writing before quitting, otherwise he forfeits one week's salary, which is paid to the Manager. This rule may be waived by permission of the Manager in writing.

(14) Managers insisting on less than five minutes Intermission each Show, will furnish a Boy to rewind the Film. (a) Operators shall not rewind Film while operating machine, unless Machine is Motor-drivin.

(15) Regular Operators may lay off one night each week, providing they furnish Union substitute, at no extra expense to the Management.

(16) Six week-days shall constitute a week. (a) Sundays and Fourth of July double time. (b) Christmas, New Year's and Thanksgiving, time and half.

(17) The Union agrees to furnish Sober, Competent and Reliable Men.

(18) An Authorized Inspector of this Organization shall be permitted to visit the Operating Room at all times while the House is open for business, to see that the Operator is properly performing his duty.

(19) In the event that any conditions arise that are not covered by this Agreement, the controversy shall be submitted to a Board of Arbitration, consisting of one representative of the Management and one representative of this Organization. A third Member, if found necessary, to be mutually agreed upon by these two.

(20) Should the undersigned Management be declared Unfair by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators, and same is endorsed by the Baltimore Federation of Labor, this Agreement shall become null and void upon two weeks' notice in writing.

De-Luxe Motiograph Highly Praised by Leading Coast Exhibitors

ABOUT one year ago the Enterprise Optical Co., 564-572 West Randolph street, Chicago, Ill., introduced a new and elaborate model of their well-known Motiograph projector, this model being termed the Motiograph De-Luxe.

A number of prominent theatres which opened at just about that time, including Roth's California theatre, Market and Fourth streets, San Francisco, installed De-Luxe Motiographs as their leading projection equipment, and the Enterprise Optical Co. have just received, through their Pacific Coast representative, Mr. Edward H. Kemp, a report on the De-Luxe Motiographs installed in the California theatre, which covers the entire year throughout which the projectors have been in use.

Mr. Eugene H. Roth, manager of the California theatre, wrote as follows concerning the performance of the De-Luxe Motiograph:

"The Motiographs you installed here at our opening have served us every day, continuously, operating thirteen hours daily, without having had the slightest delay by reason of any faulty mechanism.

lines of the De-Luxe Motiograph itself, but also with the magnificent picture thrown on a screen twenty feet and six inches by twenty-four feet and six inches, at a distance of exactly one hundred and four feet.

"The simplicity of the mechanism of the Motiograph has never caused any of the extra operators, called in from time to time on the relief shifts, the slightest embarrassment in immediately mastering its operation."

High praise of the De-Luxe Motiograph is also contained in a letter received by the Enterprise Optical Company's Coast representative from Mr. W. F. Krahn of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., operating, among others, the Lorin theatre at South Berkeley, California, who says:

"Six months have elapsed since purchasing two of your Motiograph De-Luxe Model projecting machines, and I want to say at this time that they have given us 100 per cent satisfaction.

"The picture projected by them at our Lorin theatre is second to none, in that it is flickerless, clear, and as steady as a rock. I speak from experience when I state that these machines run smooth and noiseless, as I do relief work now and then, and I look forward to that time with a great deal of pleasure.

"There is also a great saving in carbons by being able to trim two full lengths of carbons at one time."

Progressive Musical Director

THE manager of the New Garrick theatre of St. Paul, Minn., Theo. L. Hays, realizes the importance of featuring music with the presentation of the silent drama, and has acquired the services of a very efficient musical director, William Warvelle Nelson, who has very ably carried out Mr. Hays' plans.

The musical program for the week of December 5 demonstrates the ability of Mr. Nelson and the prominence which music holds in the theatre. The following compositions are a partial list of the numbers employed during the presentation of the feature, "The Kingdom of Youth," a Goldwyn production.

Overture, "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Narcissus ..... Nevin
Valse Lente "Springtime" ..... Drumm
Heart-Wounds ..... Grieg
La Comedienne ..... Hosmer
Gondoliera ..... Saar
In Summer Fields ..... Brahms
Serenade ..... Cesek

Keeping the Lips in Condition for Trumpet Playing

THE term "embouchure" refers to a condition of the lips of a performer on a brass instrument. When the lips are tough and offer continuous resistance to the pressure of the mouthpiece, and shape themselves to it, bandsmen speak of a good embouchure. When, on the other hand, the lips are soft and tender, and soon become weak and offer little or no resistance to the pressure of the mouthpiece, the embouchure is bad and the performer is of little use to the band while this conditions obtains, or, in the case of trumpeter, cannot properly carry out his duties.

There is nothing more humiliating than when a performer on a trumpet endeavors to sound a call and his lips give out.

When a trumpeter's lips are inclined to be tender he should, by constant practice, endeavor to get them in good condition, that is to say, get them shaped to the mouthpiece and thus make them tough at the same time. It is not a bad idea to practice with the mouthpiece itself, when in the barracks, by pressing the lips firmly against it and simulating the sounding of calls as though the mouthpiece were attached to the instrument. This practice will help considerably toward obtaining a good embouchure, and will cause him to not encounter that awful give-way feeling of the lips, which makes the performer feel so entirely helpless. For a person may be skilled in sounding calls, or one may be a good cornetist and have a thorough knowledge of music and fully understand how a call should be rendered, yet, when the lips are soft and tender and have reached that stage where they give out, no power in the world can replace that numbness and helpless feeling which may very properly be likened to a nightmare when one is trying to run, but the feet feel as though they were weighted with lead and cannot be moved from the spot.

Bandsmen claim that a good embouchure can be obtained much better by playing sustained notes, slowly going up and down the scale, rather than by playing rapid music, because the former method taxes the endurance of the lips to a much greater extent. Of course, it is equally essential to practise rapid scales in order to acquire a skillful rendition of music generally. With the trumpet, however, where the scale cannot be played because there are only open notes possible of production, a judicious combination of the two methods would seem to be more beneficial to the average trumpeter, that is, a succession of slow notes alternating with rapid music so far as they can be produced on the trumpet.

It would be advisable to supply all trumpets with cornet mouthpieces, which are rounded instead of having a rather well-defined edge like those of the regulation trumpet, as it will be found that the former give better results, are not so fatiguing to the lips because they adjust themselves more readily to the conformation of the mouthpiece than the one with a flat top surface and edge, and besides, the notes produced can be more advantageously controlled.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"Till We Meet Again," one of the most beautiful songs ever written. Played and sung everywhere. A big waltz ballad success arranged for dance. (J. H. Remick & Co., 220 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

2—"My Baby Talk Lady." Fox-trot. Featured in the Passing Show of 1918. The hit of the show. Introducing the Galli-Curci Rag. (J. H. Remick.)

3—"Arya," fox-trot. An Oriental jazz fox-trot—something different from anything published. (J. H. Remick.)

4—"I Found the End of the Rainbow," one-step. The best one-step published, bar none. It's as good a one-step as is "Hindustan," a fox-trot. (Forster Music Pub., Inc., 736 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.)

5—"Mammy's Lullaby." A dreamy lullaby in waltz time, a bit on the style of "Missouri Waltz." (Forster Music Pub., Inc.)

6—"Ostrich Walk," fox-trot. Real "Jazz," by real jazzers. This wonderful "Jazz" number is played by the original Dixieland "Jazz" band and recorded by the Victor Talking Machine Co. (Leo Feist, 335 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

7—"A Little Birch Canoe and You," by Lee S. Roberts, composer of the big hit "Smiles." It's the dreamiest, dreamy waltz published, and acknowledged by everybody to be the only legitimate successor to "Missouri Waltz," not the old-time stereotyped waltz. It's different and in a class by itself. (J. H. Remick.)

8—"Kentucky Dream," by the writers of "Indianola." A jury of noted musical authorities has pronounced a sentence of life-long success on this charming waltz. (J. W. Stern, 102½ W. 38th St., N. Y.)

9—"Bleeding Hearts." Musical geniuses are never judged by their brilliant works, but always by the simple, beautiful melody handed down to posterity. For example, Schuman's "Traumerei," Rubinstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," and later works such as "Hearts and Flowers," which, of course, all musicians know, is really Czibulka's "Love and Roses." Mr. Sol. P. Levy, a musician of ability and reputation, has just finished a composition which those musicians who have tried it in manuscript form believe will be a future "Traumerei" or "Hearts and Flowers." The title of this composition is "Bleeding Hearts," a floral poem, and it is one of the simple, broad, beautiful melodies which however frequently repeated, seems to fascinate and charm the listening ear more and more. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

10—"Laddie in Khaki," by Ivor Novello. An Andante 4/4. A beautiful simple melody by the composer of "Keep the Home Fires Burning," makes an excellent theme. (Chappell & Co., 41 E. 34th St., N. Y.)

11—"Myrra," Valse Orentale, 3/4, by G. H. Clutsam. Founded on the well known McCormack song, "I Know of Two Bright Eyes." Full of Oriental splendor. (Chappell & Co.)

12—"Roses of Picardy," Andante 4/4, by Haydn Wood. A melody from the historical plains of Old Picardy, full of tender loving memories. Always useful as a beautiful theme. (Chappell & Co.)

13—"Any Place Is Heaven if You Are Near Me," Andante Con Moto, 4/4, by Herman Lohr. A heart-interest theme. Sung by John McCormack with great success. (Chappell & Co.)

Estey Builds Organ for Capitol

AN organ of unusual interest, from a theatrical standpoint, is now being built for the Capitol theatre, New York, by the Estey Organ Company, and those who are familiar with the specification predict that a new standard for theatre organs is about to be established.

The theatre is being erected on Broadway, at 51st street, the auditorium occupying the entire block from 50th to 51st streets. The Capitol will seat about sixty-five hundred people. It is highly appropriate, therefore, that this building should house the largest theatre organ ever built.

The modern tendency to borrow pipes from one stop to make another stop has been resorted to as little as possible in the scheme of this organ, and while in number of stops this instrument will not compare with some other organs, in point of actual number

FOR years it has been the custom to play, wherever an opportunity presented itself, the old Lohengrin and Mendelssohn Wedding Marches. The Wedding March composed by Mendelssohn, who was born in Hamburg, Germany, and also the Wedding March from Lohengrin, composed by Wagner, who was born in Leipzig, Germany, are to my knowledge the only two wedding marches which have been perpetually played throughout the entire country.

Since the war broke out, as is natural, American sentiment has become very much prejudiced against music written by German composers.

The Boston Music Company have been the first ones in the publishing business to realize the necessity of a substitute and have published a Wedding March by Reginald De Koven which is a composition of strongly marked rhythm and thus bearing a processional character. The composition is of exceptional musical merit and is destined to replace the former official wedding marches which have been in common use up to the present day.

The fame of the writer of this Wedding March is sufficient to prove its merits. The course of musical history has confirmd and endorsed De Koven's skill as a composer. He ranks amongst the most famous writers of comic opera. Some of his older hits in comic opera form are "The Little Duchess," "Maid Marian," "Foxy Quiller," and many others, and some of his later comic operas "The Algerian," "The Fencing Master," "Rob Roy" and "Robin Hood."

The musical construction of Mr. De Koven's last masterpiece, "The Wedding March," proves again that he has upheld his reputation, has created another everlasting number and has added another gem to his already long list of famous works.

of pipes, tonal variety and power, it will far exceed anything yet built for theatrical use.

There are to be sixty complete registers, and it will be fundamentally an organ, having no less than seven Diapasons of various scales. A generous fundamental tone was considered a paramount necessity, both from a musical viewpoint, and the enormous tonal requirements of the building. The orchestral phase of the instrument has been well considered and an abundance of strings (including an entirely new stop called First Violins), Oboe, Flutes, Clarinets, etc., together with numerous high-pressure reeds, will produce an ensemble which for tonal capacity and variety will excel any instrument of the kind yet attempted.

The four-manual console will be specially designed for ease and facility in registrating, and will embody many new features, planned solely for use in theatre organs.

The Modern, Beacon, Exeter Street, Shawmut and Dudley theatres in Boston are a group of theatres containing large Estey organs, and this installation in the Capitol makes a most auspicious introduction into New York theatrical circles.

Songs for "Hearts of the World"

A FEW days after D. W. Griffith launched his supreme masterpiece, "Hearts of the World," he was besieged by numerous composers and song writers offering compositions bearing this name. Of all the songs submitted, it was finally decided that the one composed by James W. Casey of New York City, was most admirably suited to "Hearts of the World," and it was accordingly adopted in conjunction with the presentation of the picture.

"Hearts of the World" as a song was first introduced at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre in New York, by Miss Grace Minich, a Boston vocalist, and immediately became a success. In every city where the Griffith production is offered, the fame of the song seems to have reached.

The chorus of Mr. Casey's song is especially appealing and the music is of a character that lingers in the mind forever. It is published in three keys, Low Key A flat, Medium Key C, High Key E flat. The words of the chorus are as follows:

Hearts of the world are crying out in pain,
Sorrow creeps on—it seems an endless chain,
Pray that tomorrow will end all sorrow.
Hearts of the world, when will you smile again?

Mr. Casey has also dedicated to D. W. Griffith, generalissimo of the film, a beautiful melodious waltz entitled "Hearts of the World," which was introduced with great success in Mr. Griffith's film production. These two numbers are published by Echo Music Publishing Company of New York City and we would strongly recommend every earnest musician availing himself of these compositions which will be a valuable addition in interpreting certain situations on the screen.

"57 Varieties" Hardly in It with Fulton

IF there is anything used in a theatre that is not put out by the E. E. Fulton Co., Chicago, under the "FULCO" brand—what is it?

A recent visit through the model plant, located at 3208 Carroll avenue, was not only a revelation, but interesting and educating. It proved that Mr. Fulton aside from being entitled to be called a dean of the industry is a "wizard" at inventing. There has not been one detail overlooked in equipping this plant, which enables them to make the intricate and multitudinous articles required in the projecting room; right straight down the line, from the smallest item to the largest and then some extras—in the shape of film carrying cases and film shipping cases, etc.

To adequately describe the maze of specially constructed machinery used in this plant, would fill a book. Suffice it to say they have it, and manufacture and carry a full line of Fulco Products, comprising the best and most scientific made accessories and specialties for use in the moving picture theatre, and for projection of pictures such as Enclosed Fireproof Rewinds (approved by Underwriters' Laboratories), Bench Rewinds (2 styles), Stripping Flanges, Wire Terminals (2 kinds), Carbon Savers (2 sizes), Carbon Adapters, Ticket Holders (2 styles), Ticket Machines, Special Tool Kit, Oil Filter, Slide Writer Stencil, Slide Writing Compound, Colored Slide Inks, Film Shipping Cases (made according to I. C. C. specifications), Film Carrying Cases—Metal (Suit Case and Square Styles), Safety Waste Cans, Stereopticon Color Wheels, Approved Film Boxes, Film Humidors, Exit Signs, Metal Booths, Metal Tables (Rewind and Inspection), Film Patchers. Film Cleaners, Film Cement, Perfumes, Perfume Disseminators and continually adding to their line.

Mr. Fulton is a great believer in system as evinced by the orderly way that things are conducted in every department.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors' Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to September 15, 1918.

HE COMES UP SMILING (ART) FAIRBANKS (SEPT. 15)..SEPT. 21
"This picture is a 'knockout' with surprise after surprise."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Best Fairbanks. Extra big for three days." "Average business four days." "Influenza scare hurt business." "Extra big during Spanish Influenza. Great cast. Good story. Will stand a return." "Extra big business for seven days." "Typical Fairbanks picture. Doesn't please the way formerly did." "Perhaps the most unsatisfactory of Fairbanks pictures. The kindly human of Fairbanks is gone and has been supplanted by an overgrown ego which shows in every foot of the film. Mr. Fairbanks should know that the public has sympathy for the underdog. Scratching matches on the tramp's face was not funny. It was simply a demonstration of abnormal egotism."
Consensus—"A great picture with extraordinary drawing powers under normal conditions."

HELL CAT, THE (GOLDWYN) FARRAR (DEC. 1).....DEC. 14
(Six Parts)
"Melodrama showing skillful treatment in every scene."—M. P. News.

HER COUNTRY FIRST (PARAMOUNT) MARTIN (Sept. 22).SEPT. 14
"A Comedy indulging in too much superficial patriotism."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture." "Good average patriotic picture well liked." "People tired of war stuff." "Average business."

HER GREAT CHANCE (SELECT) ALICE BRADY (NOV. 17)..NOV. 2
"Human characters put this over for a hit."—M. P. News.

HIDDEN FIRES (GOLDWYN) MAE MARSH (OCT. 7).....NOV. 16
"Star in dual role which should please the whole country."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Mae Marsh's best characterization." "Best Marsh in a long time." "Very good picture."
Consensus—"Excellent production with strong drawing powers."

HIS BONDED WIFE (METRO) EMMY WEHLEN (NOV. 18).NOV. 23
"Average dramatic offering that depends on plot."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent; pleased patrons in high-class downtown house three days."

HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS (METRO) LYTELL (DEC. 9).DEC. 21
"Comedy near the end saves this picture."—M. P. News.

HITTING THE TRAIL (WORLD) BLACKWELL (DEC. 2)...NOV. 30
"Melodrama with unusually realistic underworld atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average program picture."

Exhibitor Comment—"Average business two days." "Splendid picture, average business." "Very good."
Consensus—"Fine picture with good drawing powers."

HUGON, THE MIGHTY (BLUEBIRD) SALISBURY (NOV. 18).OCT. 26
"Will give splendid satisfaction with star in sympathetic role in Northwest story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Business fair."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

I'LL SAY SO (FOX) GEORGE WALSH (DEC. 22).....NOV. 16
"Walsh fans will like it but it contains no other appealing elements.—M. P. News.

INFATUATION (PATHE) GABY DESLYS (DEC. 1).....DEC. 14
(Six Parts)
"Has good possibilities in Gaby's name."—M. P. News.

IRISH EYES (TRIANGLE) STARKE (DEC. 15).....DEC. 21
"Opinion may vary in regard to this as entertainment."—M. P. News.

JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE, A (PATHE) WARD (SEPT. 22)..SEPT. 7
"An artistic production of a good story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Beautiful settings, good story, but epidemic killed business." "Big business two days." "Outside of settings, poor. Failed to please." "Fair Picture. Poor business."
Consensus—"Good production with fair drawing powers."

JOHANNA ENLISTS (ARTCRAFT) PICKFORD (SEPT. 29)..SEPT. 14
"This sure fire light comedy should please all without distinction.—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Gee, but this picture took my patrons like Uncle Sam is going to take Berlin and the Kaiser. Some picture and some Mary." "It pleased. Box office was pleased." "Pickford never made a better one." "Characteristic, Pickford at her best. Went over big." "Big business for seven days." "This is better than the average Pickford and well liked, but not big as to receipts." "Average business three days; influenza." "Best Pickford for some time. Business light account influenza scare. Quarantine just raised." "Star still big favorite and picture pleased." "Extra big card, pleased them all." "Stood up fine for a week and well liked." "Mary pleased her following."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with wonderful drawing power."

JUST FOR TONIGHT (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE (SEPT. 16).SEPT. 28
"Romantic comedy which should satisfy everyone, but nothing extraordinary."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very fair picture. Star still to be made." "Fair story." "Pleasing picture. Drew fair for two days." "Tom will work out into a comer. Picture nothing wonderful, but pleased. Well staged and beautifully photographed." "Very good." "Fair. Got a big opening night but dropped the second night. Tom Moore has done better than this." "Tom Moore coming strong. Ladies like him. "Fine picture." "Big business." "Very pleasing."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture with average drawing powers."

JUST SYLVIA (WORLD) BARBARA CASTLETON (NOV. 18).OCT. 19
"A comedy drama that sums up as average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture only fair. Average business."

KAISER'S FINISH, THE (WARNERS-ST. RGTS) (NOV. 17)..OCT. 26
(Seven Parts)
"Intelligently produced 'Kaiser' subject with a new twist."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent production." "Big business."
Consensus—"Excellent production with big drawing powers."

KEY TO POWER, THE (EDUCATIONAL) (DEC. 22).....DEC. 14
(Six Parts)
"Human touches make this interesting."—M. P. News.

KILDARE OF STORM (METRO) EMILY STEVENS (SEPT.16).OCT. 5
"A powerful drama with some unpleasant scenes."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business four days." "Very good in a three-day run in a high-class down town house." "Pleased our patrons"
Consensus—"Good production and draws fine where heavy dramas and star are liked."

KINGDOM OF YOUTH, THE (GOLDW) KENNEDY (SEPT. 23) OCT. 19
"Splendid attraction, artistic, wholesome entertainment for any audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not so good as some she has made." "Big business for seven days." "Fine picture and patrons liked it." "Big business." "Well liked." "Extra good. Big business with strong opposition." "Very pleasing comedy drama. Although Madge Kennedy is starred we did all our advertising on Tom Moore as leading man and got the business." "Very good. Goldwyn's pictures can't be beat." "High-class light picture." "Average business."
Consensus—"Fine production with very good drawing powers."

KING OF DIAMONDS, THE (VITAGRAPH) MOREY (OCT. 14).NOV. 2
"A strong feature of great dramatic intensity."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair."

KISS OR KILL (UNIVERSAL SPEC.) RAWLINSON (NOV.18).OCT. 19
"Thrills abound in this 'crook' play intelligently produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Priscilla Dean has pinned her hair back and we now put our official 'O. K.' on her as a star." "Very good. Priscilla Dean is a comer. In fact, she is here."
Consensus—"Excellent production with big drawing powers."

KULTUR (FOX) GLADYS BROCKWELL (SEPT. 22).....SEPT. 14
(Six Parts)
"Extremely dramatic pre-war intrigue with tragic ending."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brockwell great in this picture and was going good until 'Flu' hit hard and all theatres closed." "A good picture, pleased." "Very good but drew poor." "Good title. Star not popular."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture with very good drawing powers."

LAFAYETTE, WE COME (AFFILIATED) E. K. LINCOLN..NOV. 23
(Six Parts)
"Perret production will no doubt have universal appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This with 'Mirandy Smiles' did not draw them. War stuff is dead. Picture fair." "Fair picture, direction and cast but attendance disappointing. Presume the public is tired of war subjects."
Consensus—"Good picture with fair drawing power."

LAUGHING BILL HYDE (GOLDWYN) ROGERS (SEPT 30).OCT. 5
"Star's film debut looks like genuine success."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Went good until 'Flu' hit the city, then it was all off." "Good story, star, direction, photoplay, and best of all, good business." "Will Rogers is great. Subtitles worth price of admission." "Very good, but for some unknown reason business took a slump the second day." "'Flu' scare still on. People not going to shows. Picture well liked. Should draw big business." "Big business seven days."
Consensus—"Fine production with very good drawing power."

And Index to The Complete Plan Book

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

LAW OF THE NORTH, THE (PARA) RAY (SEPT. 23).....SEPT. 21
"Literally speaking, this is a carnival of blood."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture good. Star all right but would do better in Hoosier parts." "Average business three days." "After doctoring it made a good picture." "Pleasant story with strong characteristics." "Sjlendid production but story did not please Ray's following."
Consensus—"Not a pleasing picture but has fair drawing powers."

LIGHT OF THE WESTERN STARS, THE (UNITED) DUSTIN FARNUM (JAN. 5) .....OCT. 26
"Works up well in rugged outdoor atmosphere."—M. P. News.

LITTLE MISS GROWN-UP (GENERAL) JOY (NOV. 18)....OCT. 19
"Picture is not up to star's past performances. Story handicaps."—M... P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Nice kid. Average business."

LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE (PIONEER) COLEEN MOORE (DEC. 22) (Six Parts) ..... DEC. 21
"They don't make them more touching than this one."—M. P. News.

LOVE NET, THE (WORLD) MADGE EVANS (DEC. 30)...DEC. 21
"Star in story of childhood and second childhood."—M. P. News.

LOVE'S PAY-DAY (Triangle) MORRISON-THEBY (DEC. 1)..DEC. 7
"Characters fail to win sympathy but production work is good."—M. P. News.

LURE OF LUXURY, THE (BLUEBIRD) CLIFFORD (OCT. 7).OCT. 12
"Intelligent acting of star saving an average feature program offering."—M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Average business two days."

MAKE BELIEVE WIFE, THE (PARA) BURKE (NOV. 17)..NOV. 9
"Fairly good picture with steady action and good scenes."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business five days." "Just a pleasing little picture. Billie Burke a well-liked star." "A very satisfactory picture."
Consensus—"Satisfactory picture with average drawing powers."

MAN FROM FUNERAL RANGE, THE (PARA) REID (OCT. 6).OCT. 19
"Illogical and unconvincing melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Did not have a full house and many of our patrons did not like this Reid picture as well as some with a lighter plot." "Very good picture."
Consensus—"Fair picture with ordinary drawing power."

MAN OF BRONZE, THE (WORLD) STONE (DEC. 9).....DEC. 21
"Another Stone picture presenting appealing story."—M. P. News.

MANTLE OF CHARITY, THE (PATHE) FISHER (NOV. 17).OCT. 12
"A good clean farce that should please everyone."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture." "Very fine picture to big business." "Very good comedy drama. Done good business for three days during epidemic."
Consensus—"Good picture with good drawing powers."

MAN WHO WOULDN'T TELL (VITA) WILLIAMS (DEC. 9) DEC. 14
"Here's a spy subject that should deliver goods."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleasing picture."

MARRIAGE (SHERRY-GENERAL) CALVERT (NOV. 18)...NOV. 16
"A good clean picture that holds the interest and entertains."—M. P. News.

MARRIAGES ARE MADE (FOX) PEGGY HYLAND (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"A good thrill in a 'Spy' melodrama of average value."—M. P. News.

"Lacks heart appeal although plot action is steady."—M. P. News.

MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING (PATHE) FISHER (SEPT. 28).SEPT. 28
"Absurd, but joyfulness will please your audience."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Picture lacks punch. Good business first day, top notch second day—Saturday and Sunday—when public will patronize 'any old picture.' Fisher too old for these 'peaches and cream' holes. Her work in 'The Devil's Assistant' has not been equaled since. Better try another along those lines." "Good." "Good picture."
Consensus—"A light picture with just fair drawing qualities."

MY COUSIN (ARTCRAFT) ENRICO CARUSO (NOV. 17)....DEC. 7
"Caruso is an instant success and the story is good."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Utterly impossible." "No drawing power at all. Very good picture." "Star not acceptable as motion picture actor to public." "Booked for a week, took it off after run four days. Caruso may be good for New York but not for such weak stories."
Consensus—Ordinary picture with just fair drawing powers."

MYSTERY GIRL, THE (PARAMOUNT) CLAYTON (DEC. 27).DEC. 7
"One for the imagination with lots of real entertainment."—M. P. News.

NARROW PATH, THE (PATHE) FANNIE WARD (DEC. 15)..DEC. 7

(Six Parts)
"Starts and ends in fight with many punches between."—M. P. News.

ONE WOMAN, THE (SELECT) (NOV. 16).....NOV. 30
(Six Parts)
"Production excellent; entertainment depends on politics."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Excellent cast. The theme of the story 'Free Love' will kill it for some exhibitors." "Big business seven days."
Consensus—"Excellent Production with good drawing powers."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ON THE JUMP (FOX) GEORGE WALSH (OCT. 6).....OCT. 19
(Six Parts)
"Clean picture with acrobatic stunts that thrill."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Extra big. A crackerjack to open up with after epidemic." "Star unusually good drawing card but fell down this time." "Pleased. Big business." "Average business." "Average."
Consensus—"A production of fast action and star that draws them in."

PALS FIRST (SCR. CLA.-METRO) LOCKWOOD (OCT. 13)..OCT. 5
"Best Lockwood offering in a long time. Everybody will like it."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A real knockout, biggest business we ever had and a classy picture." "One of the very best." "Very good. Will repeat." "Played two-day return to big business." "A very good picture, well liked. Did not draw. People will not stand for dead stars." "Fine picture, deserves a big crowd."
Consensus—"Most excellent production with wonderful drawing power."

PERFECT LADY, A (GOLDWYN) KENNEDY (DEC. 8).....DEC. 14
"Star blends the tear and the smile delightfully."—M. P. News.

PRETENDER, THE (TRIANGLE) WM. DESMOND (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Star registers good in clean Western picture."—M. P. News.

PRIVATE PEAT (ARTCRAFT) HAROLD R. PEAT (OCT. 13).OCT. 26
"Faithful treatment of a famous book should put this over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. Out of the ordinary." "Bad business. People care nothing for war pictures now." "Pleased but patrons were a little disappointed." "Patrons walked out on this." "Poor. Public doesn't seem to want war pictures after the war. Poor business seven days."
Consensus—"Good production with good drawing powers."

PRODIGAL WIFE (SCREENCRAFT) BOLAND (DEC. 22)..DEC. 14
(Six Parts)
"Sex play considered remarkable by interviewer."—M. P. News.

RAINBOW TRAIL, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM (OCT.13).OCT. 5
(Six Parts)
"Farnum scores again in Zane Grey sequel to 'Riders of the Purple Sage.'"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture, to great business." "Not as good as 'Purple Sage.' Over 1,000 feet of repeat scenes from 'Riders of the Purple Sage.' Advertising issued is very misleading. Farnum saves it." "Here is a real star in a real production." "Average business." Wonderful picture. Book it if you have to borrow money."
Consensus—"Excellent production with strong drawing powers."

RECKONING DAY, THE (TRIANGLE) BENNETT (NOV. 17).NOV. 2
"Snappy action to this tale of those familiar German spies."—M. P. News.

RETURN OF MARY, THE (METRO) ALLISON (SEPT. 23)..OCT. 12
"The quality of this program offering does not exceed average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business three days." "Pretty love story but May Allison will never make a star." "Very good." "Above average."
Consensus—"Just fair as a picture with just about average drawing powers."

Exhibitor Comment—"Big business."

ROAD TO FRANCE, THE (WORLD) BLACKWELL (Oct. 14).OCT. 12
(Seven Parts)
"Absurd melodrama but title should draw the crowds in."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Other than patriotic sentiment this picture has not much to recommend." "An ordinary melodrama with some extra good shipbuilding scenes. Would have been better in five reels. Business so-so." "Great, went over big, first show after 'Flu' ban was lifted." "Lacks interest, no story, ordinary. Patrons displeased."
Consensus—"Just a fair picture with good drawing power in some sections."

ROMANCE OF TARZAN, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) ELMO LINCOLN (OCT. 13) .....NOV. 2
"Loads of action and thrills make this fitting sequel to 'Tarzan of the Apes.'"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Extra big business seven days." "Fair picture. Did not go as well as first 'Tarzan.'"
Consensus—"Excellent production with big drawing powers."

ROSEMARY CLIMBS THE HEIGHTS (PATHE) MINTER (OCT. 13) ..... OCT. 26
"Good dramatic story which should give splendid satisfaction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine picture to big business." "Fine picture. Poor business. 'Flu' scare."
Consensus—"Fine picture with good drawing power."

"CAUGHT IN THE ACT"—FOX

Rather Spare Plot and Not Well Treated

IT is too bad that the full value of Fred Jackson's stories cannot always be caught by the motion picture camera. He writes so amusingly that his fiction has almost become a vogue. "Caught in the Act," which presents Peggy Hyland in the principal part, turns out to be a rather tiresome affair—a romance done to the tune of comedy and comedy attempted more by grimaces and much running hither and yon than by situations.

Really the best memory of the picture is the performance rendered by that sterling old actor, Walter McEwen, who plays the hero's valet. His ability is rare—one day impersonating Bernstorff, the next a comedy butler! Mr. McEwen is really funny, the bright spot of "Caught in the Act."

Much cannot be said of the manner in which the subject has been treated. The "sick-bed" scenes in particular are over-done. A closeup of a man receiving a dose of oil, a very messy dose of oil, is not at all conducive to tranquillity of the digestive organs. And the title writer who used puns and slang and Joe Miller jokes in every nine subtitles out of ten should reserve his wit for the Lehrman comedies. —Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 5.—Peter Milne.

SUGGESTIONS

The Fox publicity department evidently compiles its press sheets, from the original script of a production. This often results in anachronisms that the exhibitor should be warned against. In "Buchanan's Wife," the story told in the press sheet was rather remotely removed from that told in the picture, both in essentials and incidentals. While the synopsis given on "Caught in the Act" is more in accord with the picture than was the case with this previous release it differs in a number of respects. The exhibitor is advised therefore to follow the matter given in the plan book herewith, matter which was written from the screen.

The picture is a light romantic-comedy and should be billed as such with Peggy Hyland doing the stellar honors. Don't fail to mention Walter McEwen, who appears in a supporting part. While his name is unknown to picture-goers in general, they will appreciate your intelligence in mentioning him after they have seen the picture which presents one of the cleverest of his comedy performances.

AD TALK

Peggy Hyland, the young Fox star, whose name is always associated with the best in popular comedy-drama, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when "Caught in the Act" is shown for the first time in this city. As regards plot, there is not much to tell about "Caught in the Act." Its main essentials are romance and comedy and while there is sufficient drama to link these elements together into an enjoyable whole, the story, such as it is, counts for little. But we feel sure that patrons of the ——— theatre will be well repaid by a trip to the house during the days that "Caught in the Act" heads the bill. It is just the sort of a feature that is of real entertainment value in these days.

Miss Hyland plays the role of a young society girl with her accustomed sincerity and vigor and the result is a distinct character, one that will long be remembered. She receives valuable support from Leslie Austen who appears opposite her as an editor bent on exposing the rather crooked practices of her father in the financial world. Of course the young lady is unaware of her father's dishonesty, else she wouldn't be so ready to receive the attentions of the editor. But only after the romance has progressed apace does she find it out and then it is too late. And so then father has to reform.

Included in the supporting cast is Walter McEwen, an English character actor of note. As the hero's valet and perpetual alibi when that gentleman finds himself in trouble, Mr. McEwen gives a rare comedy characterization, one well fitted, although in exact juxtaposition to rank with his recent portrayal of Bernstorff in another Fox picture.

THE STORY

Priscilla Kane's hat blows off in the street and is damaged. She enters a mending shop and hands the bit of millinery to the lady in charge of repairs. She remains in the outer part of the shop while the said lady goes within to render first aid to the injured. Then there happens along Pennington Wright, an editor, just through with a stormy interview with Priscilla's father. He has called the old gentleman all kinds of a crook for packing bum beef and is very wrathy indeed. His ire grows by leaps and bounds when a nail gets in his way and tears the nether part of his trousers. Hence his entrance into the mending shop and hence the beginning of the romance. For he falls in love with Priscilla and quite naturally believes her the lady that runs the place.

Priscilla is keen enough to carry this deception through and as a consequence she calls later at Pennington Wright's apartments to do mending. She has a high old time with the valet, Willis, a thorough going valet if ever there was one. When Pennington's supposed fiancee calls, Willis attempts to pass Priscilla off as a relative from Walla Walla but when Pennington himself looms up he passes her off as Willis' "gal." There is a high old time. The supposed fiancee suspects, as well she might, and leaves in a huff.

Later old man Kane decides to get something on Pennington to make him cease his pennings. He decides to use a woman and a camera to do the trick. All is set for the affair but it so happens that that very night Pennington has 'phoned Priscilla, saying that he is desperately ill and needs her attention. She has come with her maid to spend the night and to administer first aid to the injured. When the plotters plan to do the blackmail stunt there is a general mixup—which ends, need it be said, with a marriage ceremony?

"A LADY'S NAME"—SELECT

Polite Comedy of the Popular Constance Talmadge Type

CONSTANCE TALMADGE is certainly building a reputation for herself as a comedienne. In "A Lady's Name" she gives further proof of her ability to project her refreshing, buoyant personality over and through five reels of film, lending a life and color to every scene that holds the spectator with an irresistible charm.

It is true that Miss Talmadge has had vehicles better suited to the screen than "A Lady's Name." But to condemn the present picture would be a gross error, resulting only from comparing it with her previous brilliant successes. The piece is so original in conception, so bold in fancy and pretty in treatment that it is safely able to match itself with any other light comedy of the day—and come out the winner. Amusing is the word that fits it. The spectator finds himself chuckling and smiling inwardly and outwardly and constantly.

The one fault that the writer had to find with the production was its closeups. Whether or not the story was spare for the footage is a question, but there are many closeups of the star that should not have been. However, we can even excuse padding with respect to "A Lady's Name." In all other respects it is so delightful. And the production is little short of exquisite. The producers of the Constance Talmadge pictures endow them with an air of refinement, a refinement that is obvious in settings, photographic work, support, properties, everything, a refinement that places them in a class of enviable supremity.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

After a vacation of two months Constance Talmadge is to be with us once more in a spick and span new comedy, "A Lady's Name," which Select Pictures will offer to the ———— theatre on ————. "A Lady's Name" is taken from the play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt, that accomplished weaver of light comedy situations.

The effervescent and always delightful Constance, whom Lewis J. Selznick presents, plays the role of a young and fascinating woman novelist in this new picture, not the short-haired, bespectacled type of writer, but a buoyant, whimsical young woman whose search for literary material leads her to insert an ad in a daily newspaper for a husband. She intends to study the applicants as they arrive, but events do not happen just as she expects, and the result is a rapid unfolding of humorous events with Mabel Vere, the young woman played by Constance, as the chief figure.

Included in the exceptional cast assembled to support Miss Talmadge are Harrison Ford, a leading man who has been prominent in all of the star's recent pictures, Emory Johnson, Vera Doria, James Farley and Lillian Leighton. The scenario was the work of Julia Crawford Ivers, a scenarist well known for her work in Select and Paramount pictures, while the direction was in charge of Walter Edwards, the same man responsible for the delightful comedy-dramas that Miss Talmadge has appeared in this season.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been playing the previous Constance Talmadge productions you need no hints on this one, other than to be told that it will safely stand a good lot of boosting. The box office reports printed in the NEWS show that this star is constantly drawing bigger crowds. This is the result of her own fetching personality and the superior type of production that the Select Company has been providing her. Don't fail to cash in on this exceptionally high class product that Select is offering you,—clean, polite, high spirited comedy—practically the best that the market has to offer. It is to be hoped that you have popularized these pictures and that when you announce Constance Talmadge in "A Lady's Name," your task is just about done. It will be if you have shown her previous releases. But if you haven't and if, when you have, you haven't made as much of them as you should have, don't wait but start right in plugging "A Lady's Name" as the fine picture it is.

As it is taken from a play by Cyril Harcourt, author of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," which Miss Talmadge also appeared, you should announce it.

THE STORY

Mabel Vere is a young and popular writer. She shares a pretty little flat with Maud Bray, a suffragette of determined character. Mabel is engaged to be married to Gerald Wantage, but she has become aware of growing dissatisfaction with her somewhat priggish fiance. However, she tries to ignore this discontent, working off her unrest in her own original ways. One of her "ways" is to advertise for a husband. She hopes to obtain good copy from the applicants, and she invites three of them to call.

Adams, a butler, arrives, in whom Mabel sees prospects for a good story. She accepts his invitation to tea for the following afternoon at the house where he works, telling her that his master will be out. Noel Corcoran is the third applicant, to whom Mabel does not show the interest that she feels in him.

"HOARDED ASSETS"—VITAGRAPH

Harry Morey Will Please in This One; Diversified Story

BEING a crook play, and as a matter of diversity of entertainment, "Hoarded Assets" should give satisfaction, especially among the Harry Morey followers. It has been rather a long time since this star has been given a role of this character; and he does justice to it.

The hero is introduced as a river pirate, owner of a motor boat, who lives by appropriating the other fellow's property. Because he does his work cleverly, he is able to avoid detection.

One day he overhears some rival crooks planning to steal some gold that is to be shipped in nail kegs. By clever substitution, he is able to get the gold, hiding it at the bottom of the river.

He marries the girl he is in love with and moves to a lonely house by the river bank.

Through a certain clue, detectives come to suspect him for the theft; although they catch him in the act of opening one of the barrels, are unable to arrest him, as, upon examination, they find it contains nothing but sand. They get the remainder of the barrels, however, which they find a little further away.

Realizing now that the narrow path is preferable than the broad, he reforms.

The story in places is not quite logical; also there are a few technical errors in it, but I am inclined to think spectators will not overexamine them.—Released Dec. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

CATCH LINES

Twenty kegs of gold—one million dollars—turned to twenty kegs of sand!

Harry Morey in by far the strongest role he has enacted during the past year.

He was a criminal in the eyes of the law—he was a criminal in his own eyes—but his wife held him innocent and she proved to be right! A weird trick of Fate intervened.

He had reformed, but the shadow of his past buried in the river bed near his home ever disturbed him—in that river bed there were twenty kegs of gold—so he thought. But when it came to a show-down when he thought the law had him fast in his clutches, the kegs were brought out and proved to contain ———.

AD TALK

Harry Morey, whose name is merely another way of spelling virility, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Vitagraph picture entitled "Hoarded Assets." This is one of the most unusual dramas that has come from the Vitagraph studio in many a month and it offers Mr. Morey still another opportunity to display his ability as an actor of forceful parts. In "Hoarded Assets" he appears as Jerry Rufus, a river pirate, otherwise a likable man. He is in love with Claire Dawson, a girl courted by many wealthy men. In time Jerry gets the false idea that she is playing for "big money" and not the big love that is his to offer. So he commits a daring robbery in her behalf and then buries his treasure in the bed of the river near his cabin.

He returns to offer Claire marriage and is astonished to find that she loved him all the time. They live in his cabin and are contented until one day a detective appears. He tells Claire his suspicions with the result that she pretends to be discontented with her lot. As a result Jerry digs down for one of the buried kegs in which there is stored his unlimited treasure. And as he is about to open it the detective appears and appoints himself an audience of one to witness the proceedings. Jerry goes on opening the keg and when the cover comes off there is ———

Just what there is in this keg, and in all the nineteen others that Jerry buried in the river bed will not be disclosed here. It is done so dramatically in "Hoarded Assets" that none of ——— patrons will want to miss it. Mr. Morey is supported by an excellent cast, including Betty Blythe, Robert Gaillard and George Majeroni.

THE STORY

Jerry Rufus, a river pirate who has committed a number of crimes for all of which a detective has never been able to get the goods on him, is, despite his life, very much of a man. He is in love with Claire Dawson, a girl courted by many wealthy men. So Jerry makes the pardonable mistake of believing she wants "big money" and not the big love that he has to offer. He leaves her and decides to go up the river on his boat, but as he is about to embark he overhears other river pirates planning to rob a shipment of a million dollars contained in twenty kegs. His desire for the girl again triumphs and, by a cleverly devised plan, he substitutes twenty kegs of sand for the gold and then buries the stolen kegs in the river bed near his cabin. He returns for Claire and learns that she wanted him for himself all along—cared nothing for money.

"THE SEA WAIF"—WORLD

Love Story Made Sustaining by Skillful Handling

A LOVE story so constructed that the interest is well sustained throughout its run is offered in "The Sea Waif," the current World picture starring Louise Huff. Whereas the plot itself is more or less conventional and at times means of a like character have been employed to move it forward, a well wrought continuity and direction of a good calibre serve to contribute to it a quota of suspense not usually found in stories of the same kidney.

Miss Huff registers appealingly in the title role and receives support that is suitably convincing, with the exception of one poorly played character part. The five reels also include a number of attractive seascapes, while the interior settings give ample proof that the producers have sought elsewhere than the storeroom for properties. They are of a realistic and attractive substance.

Harry O. Hoyt was the scenarist and his script was based on a story by Lieut. Howard Irving Young, while Frank Reicher directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 30.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

The story of a musical comedy star who lost his voice—at the seashore it was restored to him, but he found something else even more precious in this place far away from the Broadway footlights.

Louise Huff is the waif of the sea. And a dainty, adorable little waif she is. No wonder that men fought for her hand!

A story of modern pirates of the Atlantic seaboard—who posed as honest fishermen—but who pillaged and plundered under the cover of night.

The musical comedy star lost his voice one night in the very middle of his great song hit. He found it again in a little fisher village on the coast of Maine—but he found something else far more precious.

Here is a sweet and appealing love story—a story written by Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, of the A. E. F.—but a story as remote from the seat of war as the Maine sea coast.

AD TALK

Louise Huff will be the star at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her second World picture entitled "The Sea Waif." In this production she is seen in the role of Nancy Potter, a girl of a little fishing village, who lives with old Cail Potter. He poses before her as a fisherman, but in reality plunders the homes of the wealthy along the coast in company with a gang of renegades. The first gentleman that Nancy ever met comes to her in the person of Harry Caton, a musical comedy star, forced to seek rest and quiet by the sea because of the temporary loss of his voice.

Thus does the love story of "The Sea Waif" commence. The complications it leads to are many and highly interesting, not the least of which is the fact that Nancy discovers she is really the daughter of Colonel Brett and no relation whatsoever to the coast bandit. Of course the story ends happily, but really the plot of "The Sea Waif" is developed along unusual lines and the entertainment provided in its five reels is of more than average worth.

The author of the piece is Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, A. E. F. Lieutenant Young was formerly (and still is) well known in the scenario field. Special interest, however, is attached to "The Sea Waif" as the script was forwarded to the World Film Corporation from France. Needless to add the company rushed his check back to him in record time! Harry O. Hoyt and Hamilton Smith made the scenario from Lieutenant Young's original work, while Frank Reicher, one of the most artistic directors in the field, took charge of production details. John Bowers will be seen as Miss Huff's leading man in this offering.

SUGGESTIONS

From her many appearances as co-star with Jack Pickford, Louise Huff has gained a country-wide reputation. As the star of "The Sea Waif" she appears to good advantage. Certainly she should be featured as a real attraction. John Bowers, who is opposite her here has appeared opposite June Elvidge and other World stars in many pictures produced by that company during the past year or so. He is a popular leading man and should be referred to in all advertising.

You have a good angle to work from in the fact that the story of the picture is the work of Lieutenant Howard Irving Young, who served his country in France. Many exhibitors will remember him as a scenario writer, but "The Sea Waif" is the first story he wrote while in service. The World Film Company received his 'script from France. Play up this in your newspaper publicity and use his name in the advertising also, but be sure to mention the fact that it is not a war picture. There is a chance that by using his name you might falsely create this impression. Guard against it by stating plainly that the picture is as far distant from the recent seat of war as the Maine sea coast, its locale.

THE STORY

Harry Caton, a musical comedy star, loses his voice and goes to a secluded spot on the seashore to rest, in the hopes of regaining it. Here he has occasion to rescue Nancy Potter from the drunken attack of Silas Jones, a renegade bent on marrying her. Nancy lives with old Cail Potter. He poses before his daughter as a fisherman but in reality plunders the homes of the wealthy along the coast with Silas Jones. After Caton first rescues the girl a strong friendship springs up between them which soon ripens into love on the girl's part, but which is held only lightly by the actor.

One of Cail Potter's excursion leads him to the home of Colonel Brett. The loot he gets from the safe there acquaints him with the fact that Nancy is really the Colonel's daughter. He recalls the time when he saved her from a wreck eighteen years before. A locket he finds bears the likeness of her mother and is identical with the girl's face. She procures the locket, but from whence it came is not explained to her. Friends of Caton's eventually find him and take him aboard a yacht on which is the wealthy Mrs. Chester, an admirer of his. Nancy goes in search of Caton and discovers him aboard the yacht in company with the widow. She is heartbroken and returns to her home, promising to marry Silas in time.

"ARIZONA"—ARTCRAFT

Fairbanks Slips a Cog But Production Should Please

THAT Mr. Fairbanks is alone in the high-speed comedy field—a class by himself, in fact—no one will question. But when it comes to appearing in heavy drama, that is different. Then he is in shallow waters. In the latter case, either the star's ability to entertain will suffer, or else the dignity of the drama. In "Arizona," both suffer. Firstly, because the plot does not give the star the opportunities he is seeking for, displaying his particular talents and which the public is accustomed to expect; secondly, because he attempts to introduce some, anyway, and in doing so, he lowers the dignity of his role—that of a U. S. Army officer.

Perhaps those who have not seen "Arizona" as a stage play will not find much fault with it, but most of those who did, no doubt, will be somewhat disappointed.

As far as the drawing powers is concerned, the fame of the play and the popularity of Mr. Fairbanks may go a long way in helping. The satisfaction it will give, however, is problematical.—Released Dec. 8.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Any announcement that heralds that coming of a Douglas Fairbanks picture is always welcome and, in order to insure this welcome, let it be said that the agile star is to be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— for a run of ——— days. Additional interest will be created in the announcement that Mr. Fairbanks' latest vehicle is "Arizona," an adaptation of Augustus Thomas' play of the same name, a play which was in great vogue only a few short years ago and which is still the favorite of many stock companies throughout the country. Seasoned picturegoers may remember that some four or five years ago "Arizona" was made into a picture—but not with Douglas Fairbanks. The old "Arizona" of the celluloid, good as it was in its day, is gone and nearly forgotten, but four or five years from now Fairbanks' "Arizona" will still be a treat.

The story of this play is too well known to relate in anything approaching detail. Suffice it to say that the adventures of the young Lieutenant of the United States Cavalry, his romance, and his great self-sacrifice in protecting the name of the wife of his superior officer makes ideal picture fare as presented by the Artcraft pictures. A cast of exceptional excellence is seen in support of the star. Theodore Roberts takes the role of Canby, the rancher, the same role that he created on the stage when the play was first presented. Frederick Burton, a well-known and able actor of the stage, was secured to play the part of the Colonel, while such well-known screen personalities as Frank Campeau, Harry Northrup, Marjorie Daw, Kate Price. Raymond Hatton and Kathleen Kirkham take other prominent parts.

THE STORY

Lieutenant Denton, of a detachment of the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed in Arizona, loves Bonita, daughter of Mr. Canby, owner of the Canby Ranch in the Aravaipa Valley, Arizona, and sister of Estrella, the wife of Colonel Bonham, commander of the detachment. Estrella secretly loves Captain Hodgeman, a man whose record is dubious and who is attracted to her by a desire for her fortune. Colonel Bonham is thirty years older than his wife, but he lives in the hope that she will one day return his love for her in like measure. The detachment comes to the ranch and Denton is amazed the same evening to find Estrella in Hodgeman's arms. At a dance given to the cavalrymen, Denton overhears Hodgeman and Estrella discussing their proposed elopement, just as Colonel Bonham leaves for Los Angeles on military business. Denton threatens to kill Hodgeman for his rascality and after forcing him to give up Estrella's jewels which he had appropriated, he kicks him off the place. Estrella goes sobbing to her room followed by Denton and he is pleading with her to give up Hodgeman when Colonel Bonham appears unexpectedly. Unable to explain his presence in Estrella's room to his commanding officer, Denton resigns his lieutenancy, he refusing to tell how Estrella's gems came into his possession. Denton becomes foreman of Canby's ranch and when the Spanish-American War breaks out, he organizes a company of Rough Riders. He is about to win Canby's consent to the marriage of Bonita to himself when Hodgeman appears and poisons the mind of Canby against him. Denton refuses to explain the incident at the dance. Hodgeman is shot by the father of a woman he had wronged, and before dying he accuses Denton of his murder. This is proved false, and Colonel Bonham, who has learned the story of Denton's chivalrous sacrifice from Estrella, exonerates him. The colonel is made happy by the love of his wife and as the bugle is sounded, he leavs with his troop, her rose pressed to his lips.

CATCH LINES

A great star plus a great play—what more could be asked?

Douglas Fairbanks in a picturization of Augustus Thomas' great play, "Arizona"—the ideal romantic-drama of the screen.

"Arizona," as pictured by the Artcraft Company, is typically a Fairbanks picture—a picture that has thrills, humor and romance—a picture that you will enjoy and remember long after you have left the theatre.

The absorbing story of the young Lieutenant who walked in the shadow of disgrace in order to save the name of his superior officer's wife, holds as dramatic today as it did when first produced on the stage.

For this great play, Douglas Fairbanks secured the best support available. Cast your eye over this list of celebreties: Theodore Roberts, Frederick Burton, Marjorie Daw, Raymond Hatton, Frank Campeau, Harry Northrup, Kate Price—why go further?

SUGGESTIONS

When it comes to a Douglas Fairbanks picture there is little to offer in the way of suggestions to the exhibitor. The mere display of the star's name and the crowds will come. With the case of "Arizona," however, the showman has the added attraction of a great play besides a great star. Probably "Arizona" was one of the greatest successes the American stage has ever seen. In fact, it is still being played. Don't miss out on this. In your enthusiasm over the star don't relegate the name of the picture entirely to the background. And don't forget the author, Augustus Thomas, one of the best known of all American playrights.

In addition, you also have a wonderful supporting cast to work with. Theodore Roberts appears in his original role of Canby which he created on the stage. Then there are Frederick Burton, Raymond Hatton, Frank Campeau, Marjorie Daw and others, equally well known to regular picturegoers. Don't neglect them. A line in your advertising mentioning their names would not be amiss even though you have Fairbanks, "Arizona" and Thomas to boost in big type.

"THE SEA WAIF"

The yacht party lands at Colonel Brett's place. There, by a portrait of his late wife, Caton discovers the resemblance between her and Nancy. He tells the Colonel and then sets out to warn the girl, as the other man intends rounding up the robbers. He is set upon and made prisoner by Potter and Silas, but the Colonel with the marshal comes to the rescue. Potter is mortally wounded in the fight and confesses that Nancy is the Colonel's daughter. And only then does Caton realize his love for the Sea Waif.

"SYLVIA ON A SPREE"—METRO

Sylvia Glimpses a "Fast" Life That Is Extravagant, Anyway

EMMY WEHLEN is always attractive and particularly so in "Sylvia on a Spree." Not only does she shine like a sun arc in various pretty poses and various pretty gowns, but neither is she the least dimmed by the exceedingly extravagant production meted out the film by Metro. The settings are excellent from the standpoints of realism and power to dazzle, and the cabaret scenes include some good dancing (not the least of which is an attractive bit of terpsichore rendered by one of Egypt's maidens).

As for the plot, which concerns Sylvia's fling at the "fast" life in order to find out what she has missed, it is a light bit of fluff, a little too episodic to successfully hold the interest. Sylvia discovers that she has missed a raid and a trip to Jefferson Market Court and while her adventures are lightly humorous and never at all unsavory, they are rather lacking in punch as well. Miss Wehlen receives ample support from a well selected cast.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 16.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Patrons of the ———— theatre may prepare themselves for an unusual comedy on ———— of ———— week when "Sylvia on a Spree," the latest Metro picture starring the charming Emmy Wehlen, is shown for the the first time in this city. This tells the story of Sylvia Fairponts, a young woman who has been reared in the very best of homes, who has had everything that money could possibly bring her—except one thing, a real, honest-to-goodness spree. She has never been in a Broadway cafe or a roadhouse, or looked upon the wine when it was red or smoked a cigarette. All these things she longs to do for just once.

So Sylvia asks the man of her heart, Jack Bradley, to take her on a spree—in fact she threatens not to marry him unless he grant her greatest desire. And Jack decides to cure her once and for all. As a consequence he proceeds to arrange a real time for the young lady. He enlists the services of nice, quiet chorus girls and asks them to act naughty just for the night—he gets an old actor who hasn't eaten a square meal in many a day to play the role of a man-about-town and then he manages to secure a number of men to dress as policemen and raid the place when the revelry is at its height.

You can imagine the consequences—how Sylvia feels about it all. But just imagine how Jack feels when the real policemen decide to raid the place. Then there is the very dickens to pay! The ending of this engaging comedy we will leave for the screen to tell. Miss Wehlen in the part of Sylvia gives a most attractive performance and is ably supported by W. I. Percival, Frank Currier, Eugene Acker and many others.

THE STORY

Sylvia Fairponts is dissatisfied with her lot. She has had everything proper that money could possibly buy, but she has never had a glimpse of night life in a big city. She wants to go on a spree and she wants to very badly. The nearest she ever got to it was a vain attempt to smoke a cigarette. Her mother caught her at it. One day Jack Bradley rescues Sylvia's pup from the hands of a tramp—and there is a case of love at first sight. Immediately they decide to get married. They were meant for each other all along—they just know it. But Sylvia exacts one condition and that is that Jack take her to "the wicked Beaulieu Inn" on one spree.

Loathe to do so, Jack finally consents and decides to give Sylvia such a taste of the fast life that she will never want any more. He hires two dining rooms at the inn, one for himself and Sylvia, the other for an old actor and a flock of chorus girls, whom he instructs to act like regular vampires. When Sylvia reaches the inn her idea of fast life suffers an immediate shock. She doesn't much care for the gyrations of the Hawaiian and Egyptian dancers and when she looks into the next room and sees the girls giving the old actor a champagne shampoo she is thoroughly disgusted. She is just about ready to go home when the fake cops employed by Jack to give color to the affair arrive and start to act like raiders. They don't get much of a chance, however, for the real cops soon come and hustle all the people in the place down to the station house.

After an aggravating experience in the night court, Sylvia decides that she has enough of a spree and is quite ready to settle down to the comparative quiet of married life.

CATCH LINES

The story of a society girl who went on a spree and ended up in the night court—horrors!

Jack had it all planned to cure Sylvia of her longing for a spree. He had arranged for fake cops to raid Beaulieu Inn. That, he thought, would be Sylvia's finish. But he almost met his own finish when the real cops showed up. At any rate, there is some gay finish to "Sylvia on a Spree."

The story of a girl blessed with everything but freedom—and the humorous way in which she found it.

The night life of New York brought to the film in all its original glitter and extravagance.

Sylvia wanted freedom—she wanted to go on a spree—but she wound up in jail instead—a nice place for a society girl from a perfectly respectable family!

Emmy Wehlen in her latest and best Metro picture—a dazzling, beautiful star in a dazzling, beautiful and thoroughly entertaining comedy-drama.

SUGGESTIONS

Anything suggesting the light and merry character of this production will be suitable in either newspaper or lobby advertising. The title is attractive in the first place and if you can carry out the suggestion it conveys in the further wording of your advertising copy you will arouse the spectator's interest. The catch lines have been written with this end in view—to carry the spirit of the title through the rest of the advertising. Make use of them.

"Sylvia on a Spree," the polite comedy that it is—polite, yet in many of its essentials amusingly spicey—offers you the opportunity to dress your theatre front with specially made paintings or drawings. Something that brings out the flavor of "night life" that is part of the production would be suitable and, at the same time if attractively drawn, would draw the eye of the passerby.

"HOARDED ASSETS"

They are married and live in Jerry's cabin. But as time goes on Jerry notices that he is being watched by Detective Ryan. Ryan enlists the aid of James Barr, a disappointed suitor for Claire's hand. Together they plan to attack Jerry through her. She is told that they suspect him. She refuses to believe them and, to prove her point, resolves to play a game of her own, which is just what the plotters want her to do. She makes believe that she is unhappy with her lot and so one night Jerry goes down to the river and unearths a keg. He is about to break it open when he is pounced upon by Ryan. But there is something peculiar about the keg. He opens it and discovers that it contains sand!

And so does every one of the twenty kegs. Jerry realizes that in some way, forever unexplainable, he double crossed himself when he sought the million in gold. The detective is forced to admit defeat and Claire is happy once again.

"DOLLY'S VACATION"—PATHE

Riot of Laughter Makes This Very Good Picture

SINCE "Told at Twilight" was released, I don't think Marie Orborn has appeared in a better picture than "Dolly's Vacation." Barring the opening and the closing scenes, the picture is one continuous riot of laughter. The pranks the heroine and her little pal, the colored boy, play on her uncle, are the cause. You will split your sides with laughter at the eel-like elusiveness of the little darkie.

The substance of the story runs as follows: Thinking she is a gifted artist, the mother abandons husband and child and goes in search of fame in painting. His employes being about ready to strike, and fearing lest harm should befall his child, he sends her to his brother on a farm up the country. The colored nurse and her little boy go along. When they reach there, the trouble starts. The chickens and the geese and the ducks and the goat all lose their peace of mind. One day the children get lost. The word is spread around and everybody goes in search for them. But the mother, who happened to be spending with a gay party the week-end, finds them first. When the father arrives on the spot, a reconciliation takes place.

The introductory and the closing scenes are not quite logical; but such has always been the trouble with child pictures—something must always be out of tune. Since the whole is an entertaining offering, however, these minor faults, I am sure, will be overlooked.

The picture is clean.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Baby Marie Osborne will be the featured star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when her latest Diando-Pathe photoplay entitled "Dolly's Vacation" will be shown for the first time in this city. Baby Marie is a favorite at the ——— theatre due to her many fine performances in the past. In "Dolly's Vacation," she gives another clever rendition of the leading part and at the same time the story provided her in this latest release is one of real entertainment value. Dolly's vacation, so disastrously begun, turns out to be the best thing that could possibly have happened. For she gets lost in the woods and a country-wide search for her is instituted. Among the searchers are her father's striking workers and her mother who has for some time been estranged from her husband. The search and the ultimate finding of Dolly result in a settlement of the strike and a patching up of the differences between husband and wife as well.

In this picture as in previous productions in which the little star has appeared the chief support is furnished by Little Black Sambo, the clever fellow who is apparently the most unsophisticated child player on the screen today. The comedy between these two is one of the most pleasing elements in the entire picture. They are a constant source of delight. And yet with all their fun they are distinctly human children—in their play and their acting they are always children—never young studio artists all too obviously taking direction from a man behind the camera.

And so "Dolly's Vacation," like the many other Baby Marie pictures which have gone before is still another treat for all, both young and old.

SUGGESTIONS

With "Dolly's Vacation," as with all Baby Marie Osborne pictures, the exhibitor has the opportunity of offering children's matinees. These pictures are molded specially for children, the youngsters, and their appeal is directed primarily to them. The comedy of the star and her side partner, Sambo, is sure comedy before children and it is harmless besides. So if you operate a neighborhood or community house arrange matinees of "Dolly's Vacation" and urge your patrons to bring the children. To do this, circularize your regular patrons and make a point of stating that you have secured the picture specially for the children's benefit. In your newspaper advertising also bring out the fact that it is a "special" of this sort. You will gain many more satisfied patrons if you handle the subject in this way than you would if you made a big noise about the picture that was also a false noise. And don't forget in both this special circularization and newspaper advertising that you have the name of a well known child player to feature. She has been doing pictures for some time now and, in company with Black Sambo, has gained considerable popularity through her many appearances and the various publicity stories written regarding her.

THE STORY

John McKenzie is a factory owner. His wife, believing herself to be a gifted artist, has relegated home and loved ones to the pursuit of "Fame." Dolly McKenzie, their daughter, is thus left to herself. Separation from his wife has caused John McKenzie to relax his grip on business, his employees have become disorganized and dissatisfied and a strike is threatened, so he sends Dolly to his brother's farm until the labor troubles have been settled. Dolly, her colored nurse and the nurse's little son, Sambo, all arrive together at her uncle's farm, "Peaceful Acres"—and then the fun commences.

Uncle's housekeeper threatens to resign her position owing to Dolly's pranks. Things come to such a pass that John's brother writes him suggesting that he shall exchange the two children for the strikers at the factory, alleging that these arrangements would bring much more peace to "Peaceful Acres!" And then Dolly and her ebony side-partner get lost in the woods. Everything else is forgotten and a thorough search is instituted in which even the strikers take part. While the searching party is combing the woods for the missing children, Dolly's mother comes that way as one of a party of Bohemian artists out for a gay time. Mrs. McKenzie learns a little girl has been lost in the woods and is frightened when she learns that it is her own little Dolly.

Eventually Dolly's mother recovers the two children, frightened almost to death by fearsome visions which their childish imaginations have conjured up. The film ends with a general rejoicing. Mary McKenzie decides that home is the best after all—John is so pleased with the manner in which the workmen turned out to help find his little girl that when thanking the foreman he gives him a message to the effect that he will fix up the little difference with his men the next morning. So after all Dolly's vacation, despite its almost tragic ending, turned out to be a blessing in disguise.

CATCH LINES

Remember that old riddle, "Black and white and red (read) all over?" Well, it's changed now to "black and white and seen all over," applying this time to Baby Marie Osborne and her principal support, Black Sambo. They are seen all over the country and everyone is the better for the seeing. Don't miss them in "Dolly's Vacation."

It's some Baby that can settle a strike and reunite her father and mother—and come out of the whole thing none the worse for wear. That's what Baby Marie Osborne accomplishes in this picture.

Baby Marie Osborne again—and again supported by Little Black Sambo—they make a combination that can't be beat for sheer cuteness.

After Uncle had entertained Baby Marie and Sambo on his farm, "Peaceful Acres," for a few days he voiced his preference for a group of strikers. The name of his place would be more suitable then, he thought.

"ALL OF A SUDDEN NORMA"-ROBERTSON-COLE

Bessie Barriscale Plays Within the Law in Society Drama

THIS picture of a society girl who, suddenly bereft of father and fortune, sought successfully to play a game for monetary rewards that placed her dangerously near the wrong side of the law, is at times interesting and amusing, although at other times the spectator gets the impression that it presents rather a futile story. He cannot help but think that the author sat himself down to write with no definitely shaped ends in mind, merely to pilot the lady through to a triumphant finish in her salamandering game. Speaking in other terms, the production seems to lack the vital spark, seems to lack a seasoning of that element of heart interest which is regarded as invaluable.

Bessie Barriscale plays the part of the lady with a zest and spirit that is not to be denied, although by comparison the rest of the cast appears rather deliberate in its actions. The settings and exteriors are well in keeping with the locale of the story itself and the photography gives promise of good effects in prints other than the sample copy shown for review.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Dec. 29.—Peter Milne.

SUGGESTIONS

In addition to the advertising value of your star, you have here a story that probably offers you more original advertising opportunities than are provided with the average feature. Stress the unusualness of the plot by relating portions of it in your advertising copy and using some of the catch-lines provided that bring out the startling nature of the role the heroine takes it upon herself to play. This course if intelligently followed will certainly serve to arouse an amount of curiosity in your audience, and if you follow it out in the way of lobby advertising you should meet with results that are better than the average, to say the least.

Don't forget that Miss Barriscale has considerable following. She is an actress above all else. Play up the fact that in "All of a Sudden Norma" she has a role well suited to her. In the past she has been given ingenue parts for which she was not fit, so be sure to mention the fact that in her present vehicle she is well cast. You may also find names of players well known to the patrons of your house in the cast assembled to support the star.

AD TALK

Norma Brisbane determined to win money by gambling. The game fascinated her and since her father died without a penny, she readily chose this course, preferring it to an alternative of office drudgery or starvation. And so she set about her game at a fashionable house party. Her first trick was to examine the family jewels of the Duke of Duffield whilst all the party slept. The next day she offered to bet the owner that they were merely paste. And Norma won. But the Duke wasn't so much of a fool after all. In fact, he knew that she had grasped the opportunity to examine his worthless gems and he exacted a return for his silence. So it was that it became Norma's difficult task to procure a package of letters he once wrote to a woman with whom he imagined himself in love.

How Norma Brisbane accomplished this trick and the startling revelations that its very accomplishment showed her, are events attractively told in "All of a Sudden Norma," a picture of adventure, romance, thrills and comedy which will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, with Bessie Barriscale as its star. Miss Barriscale appears to particular advantage in this highly unusual story. She lends a life and zest to the stellar role that makes it attractive to the last degree.

The story of the picture was written by Thomas Edgelow, while Jack Cunningham, a competent scenarist, adapted it for the screen. Howard Hickman, Miss Barriscale's husband, took charge of the direction, while the cast includes such players as Albert Colby, Frank Leigh, Melbourne McDowell, R. Henry Grey and Joseph Dowling. The picture was tastefully produced and is as great a delight to the eye as it is to the senses.

CATCH LINES

In which a society girl turns burglar for the sport of it—she keeps out of jail but has a close shave.

The story of a young woman who played the game just within the law and won out by a hair's breadth!

After her father's death Norma Brisbane discovered herself penniless—she sought a way out of her troubles and resolved to gamble to earn her living—a more fascinating gamble was never shown than that pictured in "All of a Sudden Norma."

She wagered the Duke that his family jewels were only paste and won twenty thousand dollars!

In which blackmailers are outwitted by a society girl.

The startling career of a girl who played the salamander in the underworld and beat its denizens at their own game.

Bessie Barriscale plays a role in this picture that is exactly suited to her varied talents.

THE STORY

Norma Brisbane, a high-spirited society girl, is bereft of father and fortune at one blow. When the details of her estate are settled and she finds herself without so much as a red cent she enlists the aid of Cuthbert Van Zelt, an idle son of the rich, who has been her suitor since childhood, but who has been cut off by his father without a penny. She demands from him a marriage license, though not a marriage ceremony, and with him as her escort and posing as Mrs. Van Zelt she attends a week-end party given by wealthy friends. At this party is the Duke of Duffield, who is engaged to marry the hostess' daughter. He proudly displays the family jewels that his wife will wear at the wedding.

Norma doubts their genuineness and, with the help of Cuthbert, secures them in the dead of night and finds them paste. She replaces them, but is apprehended by the Duke. She then feigns sleep-walking. The next day she bets the Duke one thousand dollars to his twenty that the jewels are paste—and wins. Then the Duke informs her that since she is such a clever sleep-walker she may of assistance to him in securing some compromising letters he once wrote to a girl—letters which are now held by Emerson Trent, the man responsible for Hamilton Brisbane's financial crash and death.

The amateur Raffles enters on this enterprise with enthusiasm and not only secures the letters but gets the "goods on" Emerson Trent. She is about to turn him over to the law out of revenge, when she discovers that he is the uncle of the man she loves. So she relents. She has served the Duke and won money—gambled to win it in the fashion of men. And so she is satisfied in her new-found love. As for Cuthie, he, frankly speaking, "gets the gate."

"A LADY'S NAME"

The next day she keeps her engagement for tea, only to find that the butler works at Noel Corcoran's house. He informs her that her fiance is making bets with the men at the club that she will not answer any more letters in reply to her ad. Mabel decides to punish him, so she answers two of the newly arrived, lurid letters. Wantage discovers it and after a quarrel they break their engagement. When Noel learns of the broken engagement he calls and succeeds in impressing Mabel with the fact that he is the right man for her.

CATCH LINES

Constance Talmadge advertises for a husband in "A Lady's Name" and receives a whole table full of replies—two of them, one from a butler and the other from the butler's employer, are particularly interesting.

A rather ungentlemanly butler and a rather gentlemanly rich man are rivals for the hand of a popular young novelist—it is an interesting situation, particularly, as the gentlemanly rich man happens to be the ungentlemanly butler's employer!

Another bright and sparkling Constance Talmadge comedy by Cyril Harcourt, author of "A Pair of Silk Stockings," in which this actress scored a previous hit.

Constance Talmadge's name stands for the best in original, delightful, romantic comedy. Don't miss "A Lady's Name," it is her latest feature along these lines and up among the best.

There is something about a Constance Talmadge production that is different. The Select people always give her good stories but they go further than this even. The productions are realistic and bright and clean, the supporting casts are well suited, the photography is excellent—and all these merits coupled with Miss Talmadge's charming personality! Don't, by any chance, miss "A Lady's Name." It's her latest.

"QUICKSAND"—PARAMOUNT

Reviewer Thinks Picture Wrecked at the Start

A FALSE accusation of forgery and an overheard conversation wreck this picture, in my opinion, right at the start. Other improbabilities follow in quick succession.

A family of three, consisting of the hero, the heroine and their little son, is the first thing ushered at the beginning of the picture. He is a bank clerk; she keeps a good home for him; their child is their greatest pleasure. They are happy and contented. But the villain, a city politician, as usual, wants the heroine and sets out to get what he wants. So the arrest and conviction of the hero for forgery is the result. The balance of the picture is built on this idea. It chiefly deals with the clearing of the hero, due to the heroine's efforts, and the villain's reform.

The first thing that wounds my feelings is the conviction of the innocent hero. This becomes more intensified on account of the extra pains the picture takes in awakening sympathy for him by presenting his home life; the second, is his conviction without any proof whatever. He is simply convicted—that is all. Another, and which jars you somewhat, is the much employed overheard conversation, which occurs twice in this offering. It fails to either arouse interest or convince; and still another, is that, after the preliminary introductions, almost every one of you can tell what the whole story, even to the finest detail, is going to be.—Released Dec. 22.—Length, 5 reels—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

How a young woman played a dangerous game and forced a guilty man into a confession that freed her innocent husband from jail.

The inside story of a cabaret girl's life—proving that all that glitters is not gold.

Dorothy Dalton in a role that taxes her emotional ability to its utmost.

The story of a married woman who became a cabaret performer in order to find evidence to free her innocent husband from jail.

It was a bald frameup that sent Jim Bowen, a cashier, to jail—his wife suspected the guilty man and by playing her cards carefully, forced a confession from him—a climax of great dramatic intensity.

All the gilt and the tinsel of New York's cabaret life—and all the reality and drama that lies back of it—there are others besides Pagliacci who feign happiness when all is sorrow.

AD TALK

John Lynch has written an exceedingly interesting story for Dorothy Dalton's new Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture, in "Quicksand," which will be presented at the ———— theatre next ————. R. Cecil Smith prepared the scenario and Victor Schertzinger directed the film. In this picture Miss Dalton returns to the emotional role in a drama of the city, showing the trials of a young wife whose husband is falsely accused of forging a check on his firm and is sent to prison for five years.

To provide a livelihood for herself and her little girl, the wife gets work in a cabaret conducted by a ward boss who admires her. To this place comes the junior member of the firm for which her husband worked and is smitten with her charms. Believing that she may find out something to advantage, she leads the young rounder on and on the very night her husband escapes from prison and is in hiding, the former follows her to her apartment. There, too, comes the ward boss and in a fight, he is struck down by the younger man. The wife makes him believe he has killed the man and extorts a confession of the forgery for which her husband is being punished. Then the cafe proprietor comes to and orders the arrest of the profligate and promises to exert his influence in behalf of the wrongly accused man.

The story is said to afford Miss Dalton abundant opportunities for splendid emotional acting. A good cast supports the star, with Ed. Coxen as leading man.

THE STORY

Mary Bowen is the wife of Jim Bowen, a trusted cashier employed with a firm of insurance brokers. John Boland is a district leader and keeper of a cafe and restaurant frequented by Alan Perry, the wastral son of Bowen's employer. Taking advantage of Bowen's position, Perry obtains Bowen's indorsement to a fraudulent check. The check is cashed in Boland's cafe and Bowen, who is unconscious of the fraud, is arrested, convicted and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Mary believes her husband is innocent and suspecting Perry, she applies to Boland for a position as singer in his cafe. He having known her since her childhood, reluctantly consents and she enters upon her new mode of life.

Boland loves her secretly and nourishes the hope that she will obtain a divorce from her convict husband and marry him. Perry becomes infatuated with her and one night he follows her to her apartment and drunkenly seeks to force his attentions upon her. Meanwhile, her husband, having escaped from jail, seeks refuge in his home. Boland, who has been warned of Bowen's escape, notifies the police and the house is surrounded. Boland arrives at the house to find Mary struggling with Perry and when he seeks to rescue her, is knocked down and apparently killed by Perry. Threatening to turn him over to the police for murder, Mary extorts a confession from Perry. The police break into the house and arrest Perry, while Boland, who has recovered, goes surety for Bowen and pledges his political influence to the task of exonerating him.

SUGGESTIONS

Aside from Dorothy Dalton, an emotional actress of the first water, you have a peculiarly fascinating story to advertise in connection with this production. Make an endeavor to get the "sob" angle into your copy. The heroine takes up the life of a cabaret girl in order to get the "goods on" the villain. Working with this as a basis you can use lines in your advertisements (you may find suitable ones among the catch lines furnished on this page) that bring out the fact that behind the glitter and tinsel of a cabaret performer's life there may, perhaps, be considerable tragedy.

If you can succeed in bringing this angle forcefully home in all your advertising you will stand a good chance of having unusual results. For the sort of picture that such lines will suggest, the unknown life of those who appear in public for purposes of entertainment, always holds a certain glamour for the people who work in offices and at routine jobs. Of course play Miss Dalton up to the limit for she is a worthy actress. Besides possessing an emotional ability that is praiseworthy she has an air of wholesomeness and good-nature about her that has earned her many friends among the picture fans.

"The Spender"

(Metro—Five reels—Released Jan. 6)

METRO has a production it may well be proud of in "The Spender," Bert Lytell's latest picture. Taken from a Saturday Evening Post story by Orin Bartlett, it raises the quality of human interest to the nth degree and sets forth clear, wholesome philosophy in entertaining fashion. In New York at present there is a play called "Lightin'," generally acknowledged the hit of the season. "The Spender" is of the same calibre as this play. No fast and furious action but appealing, human action, action that is divided evenly between comedy, romance and that note of sincere human interest that never fails to appeal.

The story tells of the manner in which a crabbed old business man who has amassed a fortune through stint, is brought to a realization by his young nephew that he has found no happiness in life. Thereupon, under the guidance of his young nephew, he sets out to spend, and to enjoy life, to find happiness himself and to bring it to others. A simple idea indeed and a wholesome one and one which the producers have caught with a spirit that even the author must praise.

The comedy furnished by the old gentleman's rejuvenation is rich. Thomas Jefferson who appears in this important character part gives a performance that will linger in the memory. His character is one of the principal realistic ingredients that go to make the whole so thoroughly enjoyable. Bert Lytell's playing is even and subdued. He is a star who doesn't claim the center of the lens in every scene. We thank him for this! Mary Anderson as heroine fits well into the general surroundings of the picture and William V. Mong contributes another appealing character study. Clarence Burton and Rosemary Theby are a smooth pair of plotters.

To venture the opinion that "The Spenders" will score heavily for the exhibitors is by no means a hazardous statement. It is our opinion that it may be played as a "special," that is advertised more than the average, spoken of in superlatives and heralded with the prospect of an unusual run. Certainly it will not be disappointing for here in "The Spender" is the sort of story the great majority of the public has shown that it wants.—Peter Milne.

"The Great Victory, or Wilson or the Kaiser"

(Screen Classics—Five reels)

THE long heralded Screen Classic production which has been successively named "Wilson or the Kaiser," "The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" and "The Great Victory" makes its appearance at last, after the producers have succeeded in bringing it up to the minute by inserting a picture of the George Washington departing for France with President Wilson on board. The picture is in the way of a pictoral history of the war, a history made tensely dramatic by a liberal imagination. If the big fight was still in progress in Europe the picture would serve as propaganda of the best sort. It is a question now whether the public wants to see the outrages of the Germans enacted on the screen. Such things as murder, crucifixion and rape, vividly pictured, are not exactly pleasant.

As a piece of production "The Great Victory" stands as one of the best of its sort. The picture opens with the events of the ex-kaiser's birth and follows with the events of President Wilson's birth. A contrast between the ideals of democracy and autocracy is thus furnished at the outset. Entering on the war the picture shows individual episodes concerning the Edith Cavell case, the sinking of the Lusitania and other passenger ships, the deportation of Belgian citizens, the rape of the country's women, and an episode showing the outrages meted out to the owner of a French chateau, his wife and daughter.

Probably the Cavell episode is the most prominent in the entire picture. How the military governor of Belgium, Von Bissing and a captain proceeded to trap the nurse when she was innocent, court martialing and executing her despite American protest is all pictured dramatically. The execution details are morbid to an extreme degree. Joseph Kilgour as Von Bissing, Earl Schenck as the Captain and Margaret McWade as the martyr give memorable performances in this episode.

The film is brought to a close with the abdication of the kaiser and his flight into Holland, a few flashes of the boys coming home and of the peace ship departing and "The End" is written across the screen.

As the kaiser Henry Kolker contributes a performance in which arrogance and cruelty are the dominating factors. Frederick Truesdell appears as President Wilson and gives a sincere performance that is aided by some similarity of feature to the head of the nation. Again, though, it is a question as to whether the public will accept him. With your kaiser impersonator it is all right. An accomplished actor will makeup well for the part and his conception of the role will generally stand as authentic. We know too much of our President, we have seen him too often to seriously countenance an actor playing him and playing him presiding over the cabinet and in private life.

The picture was exceedingly well photographed and the subtitles well written. The story was written by Maxwell Karger, scenarioized by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino while Charles Miller directed.

"The Fatal Marriage"

(Lehrman Comedy—Fox—Two reels)

HENRY LEHRMAN'S wild circus tricks were never more amply displayed than in his latest comedy "The Fatal Marriage." He starts out with a separate comedy in which dogs, a kitten and an orang' are the principals and then switches into a story of rivalry for a young lady's hand that entails wild chases, smashups, various skiddings and the final plunges of two automobiles off the end of a pier.

The cast is headed by Billy Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Sylvia Day. All of them enter into the comedy with a spirit that is remarkable. Miss Day is an ingenue who gives great promise.

"The Nature Girl"

(Bluebird—Five Reels—Released Jan. 6)

THIS offering may be classed as just above the average. The plot is not out of the ordinary; but it has been so constructed as to unfold itself steadily, thus holding the interest of the spectator fairly tense to the end.

The story has some sympathetic appeal. The feeling it leaves in you is that of compassion for the heroine; also that of pity for her father, who becomes deranged on account of the death of his wife. He later recovers his reason and is joined by his now grown daughter.

Some of the situations are fairly thrilling. Some others could have been made such, had they been handled logically; for instance, it seems rather incredible that the hero could have so easily beaten the Mexicans, in their own country, and rescued the heroine and her father. As the picture, on the whole, is fairly entertaining, however, the critical spectator may be inclined to overlook such conflicts with logic.

Most of the scenes have been taken outdoors. The dense growth of blooming trees and the lakes form a picturesque background that is very enchanting. They add to the entertaining qualities of the picture.

It is a clean offering.—P. S. Harrison.

Three Picture Theatres in Flint Adopt Plan to Cut High Costs

WHILE a movement inaugurated by the Flint Board of Commerce December 5 to cut the high cost of living was aimed to include only mercantile lines which handle such necessities of life as groceries, meats, baked goods, clothing and shoes, three local motion picture theatres have adopted the plan as a fine thing in which to co-operate and have announced reductions of five cents each in their admission charges.

The movement, according to the outline issued in a statement by the Flint Board of Commerce is "the outcome of a determination on the part of the commercial interests of Flint to start in this city a national movement to break if possible an upward trend in prices, not only in Flint but throughout the land and throughout the world—an upward trend in the prices of commodities that is justified neither by the law of supply and demand nor by economic conditions."

It followed a conference between manufacturers, for whom Walter P. Chrysler, head of the Buick Motor Co., and affiliated concern employing approximately 18,000 men, was spokesman. There were rumors that manufacturers were planning to lay off thousands of men and reduce the wages of those kept at work.

Mr. Chrysler declared that his company would do neither, but that in view of information which the welfare department investigators of his concern had obtained of the difficulties of the men to keep their families even on the increased wages paid during the war, a reduction of prices would be a good thing. He said the company planned to keep all its men at work during the reconstruction period from war work to peace production, though in reality it would be good business policy to lay off several thousand.

Subsequently merchants in 15 retail lines, representing 550 business houses, agreed to price reductions which have already been made, varying from 1 to 25 per cent, according to the line of business. Landlords of the city have announced a voluntary cut of 15 per cent in rentals of separate dwellings and apartments for 90 days. Milk and coal companies, neither of which were included in the lines volunteering to cut prices have joined the movemennt with substantial reductions.

And now the three motion picture houses, the Strand, operated by Lester Matt, and the Elite and Savoy, operated by Louis E. Sunlin, all downtown houses, have volunteered to join the movement and have used large display advertisements in the newspapers announcing their reductions.

In a full page advertisement printed in the Flint Journal December 7, Mr. Matt uses the following language:

"At the request of the Board of Commerce the Strand will do its share in helping to reduce the high cost of living."

Seery Rises from Exhibiting End to Exchange Management

R. E. SEERY, manager of the Chicago office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has had many unique and interesting experiences.

Mr. Seery started back in 1908 in Allegon, Mich., where he conducted the Star theatre, which had a seating capacity of ninety wooden kitchen chairs, with an admission price of five cents, giving the populace a one-reel picture, with an illustrated song and a phonograph accompaniment.

His next venture was in Chicago at Sixty-ninth and Halsted streets, where he had the Majestic theatre, seating about two hundred people; his shows consisting of two reels, one act of vaudeville and an illustrated song for five cents. He figures that the vaudeville act must have been "too strong" as he went broke and was forced into the film game with the United States Film Exchange when he doubled in brass, so to speak, acting as salesman, shipping clerk and booker.

From there he cast his fortunes with George Hoke, operating under the name of the Calument Exchange. His next step was that as manager of this exchange.

He left this organization to take the management of the Standard Exchange, which was owned by Joseph Hopp, where he remained till January 1, 1912, when he became associated with C. J. Hite and several other capitalists, buying out the old Globe Exchange, owned by Baker and Miller, and opened up as a buying exchange under the name of the Majestic. At that time they bought the entire output of the Independent market.

Mr. Seery and his associates formed the Mutual Film Corporation, which absorbed the Majestic and through his efforts the Mutual developed in Chicago and was one of the largest and best equipped exchanges in the city.

Through his connection with the Mutual he became a stockholder in the Thanhouser Film Corporation, Mutual Film Corporation, New York Motion Picture Corporation, and several other of the leading corporations of that time.

About 1914 Mr. Seery was made District Manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, having under his jurisdiction about twelve offices in the Central West, and remaining in that capacity until the forming of the Triangle in 1915, at which time he took charge of their Chicago offices, which was then the largest in Chicago.

In 1917 he joined the Central Film Co. forces where he is at this time. Mr. Seery is the man who put through one of the most successful serial stories ever marketed—"The Million Dollar Mystery," made by the Thanhouser Company.

He figures that he has handled successfully more stars than any other film distributor in the business, and is credited with the successful booking of Charles Chaplin's recent picture.

Fond du Lac Theatres Put on New Red Cross Stunt

THE moving picture houses in Fond du Lac gave their rons a new stunt in the Red Cross membership roll campaign. It has been the custom of these theatres to co-operate with the drives in all the various wartime activities and one of these bits of co-operation consisted of providing a place on the program for four-minute speakers.

Heretofore these speakers have been lawyers and ministers. Not so this time. Instead of the speakers everyone had heard times without number there appeared a brand new list—members of the senior class at the Fond du Lac High School. And in keeping with the suffragette movement that is sweeping the country—the girls were included. On the first night two senior girls ventured on the stage. Their speeches made a real hit. The new plan had scored twice—first in a new list of speakers—second in giving the girls a chance. Moving picture house patrons enjoyed the novelty afforded by the change.

In the meantime it is worth noting that the moving picture house managers are ready to give the war time activities a lift "flu" or no "flu."

Harry Moir to Have Big Theatre in Chicago

WHEN the new addition of the Morrison hotel is completed, it will include a modern motion picture theatre, thoroughly up-to-date, with a seating capacity of twenty-six hundred.

Mr. Moir now controls the Alcazar, Rose and Boston theatres in the loop. At present the Alcazar and the Rose theatres are adjacent to the Morrison hotel. The new theatre will take their place.

The Alcazar theatre is one of the oldest and has been for years one of the best paying properties in the downtown district. Under the able management of Harry Miller it continues to flourish.

Mr. Miller also manages the Rose and Boston theatres for Mr. Moir, and his own house, the Acme theatre, located on the North side, which he contemplates enlarging.

The improvement will give the Acme a seating capacity upwards of two thousand.

Michigan Expects No Statewide Closing Order in New Ban

ACCORDING to reports from Detroit, the latest developments in the influenza situation in Michigan is that no state wide closing order will be issued by Dr. R. M. Olin, secretary of the State Board of health for the present. Dr. Olin has issued an order directing that all homes in which there are influenza cases be quarantined.

Violation is punishable by a fine of $100 or 90 days in jail. Reports of serious conditions continue from Northern counties in the state. Grand Rapids turned in 140 new cases in one day. At Pontiac, where the health authorities had been exercising their own quarantine, but 15 new cases developed.

What Milwaukee Is Doing

"ONE of the most constructive deals in the history of the motion picture industry was closed recently, when a long termed contract was signed between the Robertson-Cole Company, bankers and exporters, the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation and the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation," said J. W. Semler, representing the merged companies, who spent a few hours in Milwaukee Saturday. "Under the terms of the new contract Robertson-Cole will furnish all pictures for the Exhibitors' Mutual Exchanges. It is a distinct step toward eliminating haphazard methods and establishing the country's fifth biggest industry upon a sane business basis. The Robertson-Cole Company will act as bankers and exclusive agents for manufacturers of high grade pictures, and for that reason they merged with the Mutual and Affiliated because they were considered to represent the best thought in the industry and have the most comprehensive plan of distribution." The company has acquired control of the world's rights to the series of de luxe features. The first Billie Rhodes de luxe Feature, "The Girl of My Dreams," will be released December 15. This photoplay marks the first appearance of Miss Rhodes as a feature star.

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra, has secured the celebrated Canadian Kiltie band for Christmas week. The Kilties will come directly to Milwaukee at the close of their world tour, which took them over 400,000 miles of territory. They will bring their entire personnel, including pipers and dancers.

MILWAUKEE will be the scene of a motion picture event of importance to the exhibitors and fans alike when the prerelease showing of Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives," will take place at the Alhambra theatre, Friday morning at 10:30 o'clock. This will be the first time in the history of the industry that a trade showing of such proportions has been given in any city before the customary New York trade show. Exhibitors from all over the state are expected to attend the showing at the Alhambra theatre, which will be staged in exactly the same manner as it would be on Broadway, that is, with the accompaniment of an orchestra of at least twenty pieces, and with all the embellishments of a production in a regular theatre.

REX WEBER, director of the Wisconsin-News' "Mile of Smiles," died Monday at his home in Chicago, a victim of pneumonia, giving his life as a glad sacrifice for the boys "over there."

"Thousands of people in Milwaukee have a vision of the young director, inspiring the great crowd in Juneau park to smiles and laughter a month ago for the sake of the Milwaukee boys in France. He was one of the leading motion picture directors of the country and age."

LYMAN B. HOWE's newest Travel Festival comes to the Davidson theatre for the week begining Sunday, December 15.

MILWAUKEE is at last to have a genuine repertoire theatre. The Harry McRae players now at the Pabst theatre are the incentive for the organization. Prominent Milwaukee capitalists have been enlisted to support the move. The idea is to raise an endowment fund of $10,000, which will put the company on a basis where it will be relieved of all financial worry. Due to the reorganization and the "flu" the Pabst theatre will be closed until after Christmas.

Springfield Watches Effect on Peoria

SPRINGFIELD theatre managers are watching the result of the closing order which went into effect in Peoria Monday, December 9. Theatre men in the distillery town decided that they would force the stores and factories to close if the ban was not lifted from the playhouses immediately. This is the same attitude taken by local playhouses on the closing order, which was frustrated by timely work here.

Film Flashes from Flint

RE-OPENING of the Palace theatre, showing pictures and vaudeville, which was considerably damaged by fire the morning of December 2, is announced for Sunday, December 22. Manager Frank H. Butterfield will feature at the re-opening "Shoulder Arms," by and with Charlie Chaplin, which had been advertised for a week earlier at the theatre.

MOTION pictures of Flint's Victory parade on Thanksgiving Day which were secured by the Palace theatre management in co-operation with the Board of Commerce, and which were to have been shown for four days, beginning December 5, in that playhouse were transferred because of the closing caused by a fire to the Garden theatre, both houses being controlled by W. S. Butterfield of Battle Creek. The picture proved a fine drawing card in connection with "Come On In," with Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, and packed houses were the rule all during the engagement. Though the pictures were photographed on a dark, rainy day, excellent close-ups of many of the participants in the parade in which 10,000 marched were procured. The picture was photographed by Jake Baker, cameraman for the Metropolitan Company of Detroit.

FOR the three days beginning December 9, the Strand showed the big William Fox submarine spectacle, "Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellerman. The picture drew well.

Press and Clergy Unanimous on Unity Film

THE Unity Photoplay Co. who are distributing the picture "And the Children Pay," report that they are kept busy taking care of the bookings for the production.

The picture is now playing at the Bandbox Theatre at an admission price of fifty cents and doing a wonderful business.

The critics, the clergy, the attorneys, and judges are unanimous in the opinion that everyone should see this picture.

JACK JACOBY, the well-known Chicago manager, is now with the Fred Linick Enterprises, which controls five houses.

FRANK FLAHERTY, the well-known film man, has been appointed manager of the Chicago Office of the Film Clearing House, Inc. Mr. H. B. Brennan, the Traveling Auditor of the organization, is now in Chicago installing the system in the new office. Their first releases will be Evelyn Nesbit Thaw in "Her Mistake" to be followed immediately by Stewart Blackton's picture, "Life's Greatest Problem." They release about the same time, Elaine Hammerstein in "Wanted for Murder."

DADDY HINES, who presides over the destinies of the Auditorium and Oliver Theatres of South Bend, Indiana, has been spending a few days in Chicago looking over bookings.

FRANK ZAMBRENO, the president of the Unity Photoplay Co., Chicago, and C. Sanford Harrison, manager of the Bear State Film Co.'s production, "The Vigilantes," reported that the bookings are keeping up on that picture in this locality.

D. M. VANDERWALKER of the Doll-Van Film Co., is now on a trip through Illinois.

THE Government picture "Under Four Flags" continues to draw large houses at the Playhouse.

DOLL-VAN FILM CO. now has eighteen features working. "Wives of Men" will be put on the market the week of January sixth, opening at the Rose, Riviera and Central Park theatres at the same time. They will soon put out "The Still Alarm" and "Little Orphan Annie."

W. C. LAMOREAUX has returned to the Ascher Bros. Organization and is now managing the Adelphi theatre.

FROM all appearances Fred Aiken, manager Chicago Office, Select Pictures, and his able assistant, Ben Beddell, have their hands full—business good.

ANDREW KARZAS, owner of the Woodlawn theatre, has returned from West Baden entirely recovered from his recent illness and finds that his theatre has been doing a remarkable business in his absence due to the work of his able assistants.

NEXT to a Whirling Dervish comes the bounding manager, Bruce Gotschalk, who has bounced from the south to the north side is now doing his celebrated act "Get the Money" at the Calo theatre.

ROBINSON, of Robinson and Orr Alliance Film Co., is back from service and entertaining his friends as heretofore.

SYDNEY AINSWORTH, the well-known actor of the speaking stage, recently featured in a number of Essanay Productions, has just left for California in company with Rex Beach. Several of the Coast Producing Companies are flirting with Mr. Ainsworth for his services.

THE "BIRTH OF A RACE" is still running at the Blackstone to a good business. The consensus of opinion is that the picture's artistic beauty will carry it through to success.

BALABAN & KATZ, directors of the Riviera and Central Park theatres, have donated a booth for the sale of War Savings Stamps in the loop district where fans will be stopped by an army of saleswomen.

"AND THE CHILDREN PAY," is the new name of the picture put out some time back, called "The Sins of the Fathers," some of the settings of which are laid in the Chicago courts, and being shown at the Band Box.

CHERRY ABRAMS, Joe Brandt's assistant in the New York Universal Office, is expected in Chicago.

MRS. SAM SISKIN, the clever stenographer of the Doll-Van Organization, Chicago Office, is happy—hubby is home from France.

THE SILEE FILM EXCHANGE reports that repeat bookings on "Ashes of Love" are coming in fast; also that "A Bit of Heaven" is going big.

UNIVERSAL CHICAGO OFFICE is signing up all the large houses for their Hearst Weekly, which they are distributing.

MESSRS. KEEBER & BLAKE are in Chicago on behalf of the single reel, "Careless America or Safety First," which is to be out during the month of January in all Chicago houses under the auspices of the Secretary of State; also the commission of Public Safety. There will be fifty prints used in Chicago during the campaign.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager Chicago office Universal, is enthusiastic over the prospects in his territory. He says the Universal's new releases are selling themselves.

HARRY WEISS, the rapid fire managing salesman for the Central Film Co., is now on a two weeks' cruise through all the small towns in the State of Illinois. Harry did not want to risk being stuck in the mud with his machine so is traveling by train.

Gathered in Green Bay

NAZIMOVA, Metro star, drew big crowds to the Colonial theatre while playing in "Eye for Eye" December 11-12.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" was presented for the second time this season at the Orpheum theatre December 9-10-11. The orchestra remained over night and played for a dance given for the benefit of the "Good Fellows" club fund of the Red Cross.

"HOW STARS TWINKLE," with a cast of ten stars of the film world, was produced at the Grand theatre December 9-10-11.

"THE DARE DEVIL," with Gail Kane in the lead, was screened at the Grand theatre December 9-10.

GERALDINE FARRAR proved decidedly popular in the Goldwyn film, "The Hell Cat," which was produced in the Colonial theatre December 13-14.

"ALL NIGHT," a comedy drama featuring Carmel Myers, was presented at the Royal theatre December 13-14.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS was a hit in "Mr. Fix It" while appearing at the Orpheum theatre December 12-13-14-15. The film is a Paramount.

"THE CLAW," with Clara Kimball Young in the leading role, won popular favor at the Grand theatre December 12-13-14-15. A Nestor comedy, Hearst-Pathe News and Universal Weekly were shown in the same program.

"CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN," a General production, was screened at the Royal theatre December 11-12.

"GIRL OF TODAY," a Vitagraph, was shown December 8 at the Colonial theatre. Corinne Griffith played the lead.

Elgin Items of Interest

THE Temple's "kwantity, kwality kombination" program for Monday, December 9, included an installment of "The Bull's Eye," Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty's Busy Day," the O. Henry story, "Tobin's Palm," and the latest edition of the Animated Weekly. John Barrymore in "Raffles" opened the week on Sunday, December 8. On Tuesday and Wednesday the picture was Louise Glaum in "A Law Unto Herself," and with it was shown the Lyons and Moran comedy, "The Price of a Rotten Time." The Jajanese star, Sessue Hayawaka, came to the Temple Thursday and Friday in "The Temple of Dusk," shown with the Official War Review. William Desmond in "Deuce Duncan," and the Christie comedy, "Why Get a Divorce?" made the Saturday bill.

WHEN "America's Answer" was shown at the Grand theatre Friday and Saturday, December 6 and 7, his friends in this vicinity recognized Capt. Harry Yagle, a Dundee boy, as one of the men being awarded military honors and the Croix de Guerre by King George of England. Yagle can be plainly seen in the picture. Report of this discovery following the first day's showing was excellent advertising for the Saturday shows and Yagle's friends, who are many and with whom he is most popular, made a large part of the audiences that day.

LAST sight of her husband, Lieut. Fred Morgan, killed in France in October, was given his wife, Mrs. Helen McBride Morgan, prominent Elgin society girl, on the screen. At the time of the wedding of the two, celebrated in early spring in San Antonio, Texas, where Lieut. Morgan was training prior to leaving for France early in the summer, the bridal party of the two was snapped by news weekly photographers as it left the church. In midsummer, attending the theatre one evening at the Grand, Elgin, Mrs. Morgan saw the pictures flashed upon the screen.

FOLLOWING a second re-opening of the Crystal theatre, Dundee, twice closed on account of influenza epidemic, Manager Gus Cook announced an increased admission price.

In his program issued weekly, he makes the following explanation:

Owing to the advance in prices on films, advertising, express rates, in fact, everything connected with the moving picture business, we are making a slight change in our admission prices. We have done away with the 11c and 17c prices and have made straight prices of: Children under 12, 10c; all others, 15. This price includes the war tax and will do away with bothering with pennies.

FORCED twice to cancel his bookings for later fall, on account of "flu" closings, Manager Cook at last, after considerable difficulty, was able to offer the following program in the first week of December: December 3, Norma Talmadge in "Panthea"; December 4, serial night, the last three episodes of "The Lion's Claws" and the comedy, "Passing the Bomb"; December 6, Billie Burke in the Artcraft feature, "Arms and the Girl" and the comedy, "Cinders of Love," with Chester Conklin; December 7, Pauline Stark in "Shoes That Danced" and comedy, "His Hidden Shame"; Alma Rubens in "The Answer."

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "The Easiest Way," opened the second December week's program at the Crystal, Dundee. With this picture was shown the Official War Review. The serial night feature on Wednesday was the Bluebird feature, "Fast Company," featuring Franklyn Farnum.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

DAINTY Bessie Barriscale was the star at the Liberty theatre, Dubuque, Ia., on Wednesday, December 4. The plaw was "Within the Cup," and proved a most taking vehicle for the Paralta star. There was a good attendance as Miss Barriscale is a general favorite.

"THE FALLEN ANGEL," starring Jewel Carmen, was the attraction at the Dreamland theatre two days during the week of December 2. Miss Carmen has been well liked here ever since the days when she played with William Farnum, and her plays always attract.

MARY PICKFORD played at the Family theatre on Wednesday, December 4, in "The Little American." The producers of this photoplay certainly had an eye to business when they starred the actress in this play, for a combination of the star and the title of the play is enough to fill any house, no matter how little the feature is advertised.

ALLA NAZIMOVA in "Toys of Fate" held the boards at the Grand for three days during the week of December 2. The picture drew famously—packed houses witnessed every performance. Alla Nazimova dominated the picture—it was her superb acting that placed this feature in the class of masterpieces.

"THE RAINBOW TRAIL," sequel to "The Riders of the Purple Sage," was shown at the Princess theatre Wednesday and Thursday, December 4 and 5. William Farnum proved himself the equal of any motion picture player by his splendid characterizations of Lassiter and Shefford in this picture; the author of the story could not wish for a more perfect portrayal of his characters. The director of "The Rainbow Trail" must be given credit for the attention he paid to the details—almost every incident in the book was filmed. This play can truly be classed as a screen classic.

ON Saturday, December 7, Douglas Fairbanks was shown at the Family theatre in "A Modern Musketeer." Doug was as comical as ever in this picture; his acting and that of his leading lady, Marjorie Daw, made a favorable impression on Family fans. The picture drew good houses both in the afternoon and evening.

THE Liberty had a big night Thursday, December 5, when Warren Kerrigan appeared in "The Turn of a Card." While it was a seven-reel Paralta picture, with a high priced star, Manager Wilbur did not increase his prices, and the result was a capacity house.

THE Family theatre offered "The Judgment House" for its Sunday, December 8, program. The usual Sunday crowd attended this picture.

CATHERINE CALVERT appeared at the Grand on Sunday, December 8, in "Out of the Night." Every one attending this photoplay commented favorably on the acting of the star, and the story. It drew an average house.

GLADYS BROCKWELL, that pleasing Victory player, was the attraction at the Dreamland theatre on Sunday, the 8th, in "The Strange Woman." Dreamland patrons, like the Liberty fans, are beginning to appreciate Miss Brockwell's acting, consequently, with each picture her drawing power increases.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

"HER MAN," featuring Elaine Hammerstein, was the Princess attraction on Friday and Saturday, December 13 and 14. Frank Keenan followed for three days in "The Bells," Pathe production.

BUSINESS was great at the Savoy on Sunday, December 8, though not quite up to the high mark of the Sunday previous. The bill consisted of "A Fight for Millions," "Scars and Bars," and "The Silent Sentinel," a Helen Gibson picture. For Monday Manager Kerasotes had Edith Storey in "Captain Alvarez," and an Arbuckle comedy, "For Better or for Worse"; Tuesday, Edna Goodrich in "Treason"; Wednesday, "The Brass Bullet," a Star comedy with Lyons and Moran, and a two-reel Broadway Star feature; Thursday, Carmel Myers in "The Dream Lady"; Friday, "The City of Purple Dreams," with Fritzi Brunette and Thomas Santschi; Saturday, Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages."

F. W. RINKS has returned as chief operator at the Vaudette after several months absence in the southland.

THE Royal opened with "The Lure of the Circus" on Sunday, December 8, and had a banner day. Gus Kerasotes had a fine bill with the new serial and folks thought the show immense. On Monday, "Together," a Violet Mersereau feature, was the attraction; Tuesday, Ethel Clayton in "The Man Hunt"; Wednesday, "Her Husband's Honor"; Thursday, "Tangled Lives"; Friday, "Miss Innocence"; "Love's Law." Since the installation of the new Minusa gold fiber screen, the pictures are looking great at the Royal.

MISS BESSIE WARE, cashier at the Majestic, is still confined to her home from influenza.

THE Gaiety was somewhat disappointed in its program for Sunday, December 8. Manager Thornton had extensively advertised for the week previous the new Fairbanks picture, "Arizona," but on Friday he was notified that the print had not reached Chicago, and that he would have to take W. S. Hart in "Branding Broadway" instead. Of course this was an excellent substitution, but the Gaiety was all set for a whirlwind four days with Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." Manager Thornton notified Motion Picture News' representative on Monday, December 9, that Chaplin and Hart came within a few dollars of the house record, established by Fairbanks and Chaplin some months ago. On account of the length of the program, it was necessary to turn hundreds away from the box office, the waiting line extending out into the street nearly all day and evening. A shorter show would have surely meant a new attendance record for the theatre. This too, in spite of the "flu."

THE Vaudette had a fair week with Ethel Clayton in "Women's Weapons," and Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Range." Both plays were shown the week of December 1-7, and both gave universal satisfaction. The first of the new Burton Holmes travelogues and Bray pictographs were also on the program.

GUS KERASOTES has "The Yellow Dog" booked for Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10.

ED MAISEL, manager of the Capitol theatre, announces the booking of the new Pearl White serial, "The Lighting Raider." He will start in on January 5, and expects to secure a great deal of help from the advertising which will run in the Saturday Evening Post on January 4.

NEWMAN cancelled his Traveltalk at the Chatterton after playing two days to poor business. The cashier perpetrated a good joke when the police posted the influenza warning on the entrance to the playhouse. She asked what it was, and the bluecoat said it was a notice to keep crowds out. The lady replied that was unnecessary, as crowds never came to the Chatterton—especially to see war films.

THE Majestic is expecting great business with Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," which started a four days' run on December 8. Manager Riordan has covered every billboard in town and has used the newspapers lavishly.

THE Gaiety had a good week December 1-7. For the first four days Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life," and Arbuckle in "The Sheriff," were the attractions, and for the last half Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36" and "Smiling Bill" Parsons in "Bill's Opportunity." This last named comedy was so devoid of laughs that Manager Thornton secured another one, "King of the Kitchen," which was an improvement.

A STRIKE of interurban employes kept down the theatre attendance in Springfield the week of December 7-10. Not a car was run on the entire system for several days, and as this city is the hub for interurban lines, many thousands of regular visitors did not get in. Along with the "flu" scare, it's no wonder that business was "on the bum."

CAPTAIN HARRIS HICKOX, formerly of the Vogue theatre, has returned to Newport News after spending a furlough in this city. Captain Hickox left Paris the day the armistice was signed, and expected to take more troops to France. He may not return to Europe.

MANAGER HARRY LOPER of the Lyric, had three fine pictures booked for the week of December 8-14. Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife," was the attraction for Sunday and Monday; on Tuesday and Wednesday, Corinne Griffith in "Miss Ambition," a Vitagraph play; Thursday, Friday and Saturday saw Theda Bara in her most pretentious production, William Fox's "Cleopatra."

THE "flu" hasn't materially affected business at Ben Rovin's Amuse-U. Ben is playing most of William Fox's stuff, and making good. Tom Mix in "Ace High," Dustin Farnum in "North of Fifty-three," and Theda Bara in her new version of "A Fool There Was," are some of the plays that have brought big returns to Smiling Benny.

W. K. SINES, publicity manager for the Princess theatre, has been laid up for the past week with influenza. Reports at this writing say he is seriously ill. Mrs. Sines is also down with the malady.

LOUIS KERASOTES of the Savoy, had a fine day Saturday, December 7, with Grace Valentine in "The Unchastened Woman." On the same day brother Gus played "For Husbands Only," with Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, to satisfactory patronage at the Royal.

UNIVERSAL'S new serial, "The Lure of the Circus," had its premiere showing in this city at the Royal on Sunday, December 8. Eddie Polo is a great favorite here, and would have appeared in person had it not been for an accident.

A GREAT many Springfield theatre-goers seem to think the war tax is off now that the war is won, and some of them are obstinate enough to want to know why they should pay it. A fine thing to have to explain, with a crowd waiting in line.

MANAGER RIORDAN reports that Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" drew many new faces to the Majestic during the four days' run, which begun on Sunday, December 8.

"CAUGHT IN THE ACT," Peggy Hyland's new Fox picture, comes to the Lyric on December 15 and 16. Bessie Love will follow in "The Dawn of Understanding," which in turn will be succeeded by Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea."

THE Vaudette has booked the International Film Service's picture showing the surrender of the German fleet to the Allies. The pictures will come for four days, about December 15.

What Detroit Is Doing

THE Palace theatre, Flint, was partly destroyed by fire on December 1. Rebuilding was begun the following day and the house was in operation again before Christmas. The damage is estimated at $10,000. The house plays vaudeville and pictures and is part of the Butterfield circuit. Another Michigan theatre which recently suffered by fire was the Calumet in Calumet. It is to re-open next month.

OWING to the fact that the lessees of the Detroit on the Campus have been given 60 days to vacate, the deal whereby Marcus Loew was to establish a picture policy there has been called off. The old Detroit is to be torn down to make way for a modern store and office building. E. D. Stair had leased the property from R. E. Olds, Lansing automobile manufacturer, for five years, and it had been proposed to turn the house over to Mr. Loew.

IT is rumored that the Majestic theatre in Detroit, now that M. W. McGee, the managing director, has resigned, will change hands, the directors leasing the house. Several bidders for the property have appeared.

A NUMBER of changes are reported in Detroit theatre managements. Fred Shafer, who has been handling the Adams, one of the John H. Kunsky houses, resigned and his position was taken by Charles H. Darrekk of the Alhambra. Sid Lawrence, formerly of the Majestic, Grand Rapids, takes charge of the Alhambra. Jack Mowat has resigned as manager of the Lincoln Square theatre to take effect January 1. His successor has not been appointed.

ELMER BRIENT, up to a few weeks ago publicity manager for the Paramount Exchange in Detroit, has been sent to St. Louis to assist George Weeks, former Detroiter, who is now in charge of Paramount-Artcraft activities there. Mr. Brient was appointed city salesman for Paramount here only three weeks ago. Eddie Fontaine, assistant manager of the Fox Exchange, becomes supervisor of bookings for Paramount next Monday (December 16). T. J. Plank, advertising manager of the Logansport Daily Tribune, comes to Detroit to be publicity manager for Paramount.

Additional News of Dubuque

WILLIAM DESMOND is a favorite player at the Liberty theatre, and whenever his plays are shown, the loyal fans turn out in large numbers. On Friday, December 6, he was presented in "Beyond the Shadows," and according to his admirers, the picture was immense.

"A JAJANESE NIGHTINGALE," with Fannie Ward, was one of the plays that Manager Boyle of the Dreamland, had to cancel on account of the influenza quarantine in October. Ever since the re-opening of his theatre, he has been trying to rebook it, and finally succeeded in getting the play for Friday and Saturday, December 6 and 7.

CHARLES RAY played at the Princess theatre Friday and Saturday, December 6 and 7, in "The Family Skeleton. Mr. Ray added to his laurels by his good work in this picture.

THREE stars were shown at the Dreamland theatre Tuesday, December 10th, in "The Atom." They were Belle Bennett, Pauline Starke and Harry Mestayer, and the combination of three such popular stars drew a fine crowd to the Dreamland that evening.

ON Monday and Tuesday, December 9 and 10, Douglas Fairbanks was shown at the Princess theatre in "Mr. Fix It." Douglas was as good as usual; the play was a typical Fairbanks comedy, full of good, clean humor, clever athletic stunts and good acting.

What They Say About

"AND THE CHILDREN PAY"

Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune: "All parents should see this picture."

Kitty Kelly, in the Herald and Examiner: "The story is world-old and world-new and is needed as long as people shall flourish on the earth."

Virginia Dale, in the Journal: "The actors have been especially assembled and the direction is good."

Bishop Samuel Fallows: "I deem the presentation a most important and timely one."

Rev. M. P. Boynton: "In my opinion this picture ought to be given the right of way to be shown to all who come, including the children."

Charles N. Goodnow, Associate Justice of the Municipal Court (who acts in the picture): "The play is designed to crystallize public opinion on the necessity for sex instruction to children and should be shown to every man, woman and child in Chicago."

Harry B. Miller, City Prosecutor (who acts in the picture): "Our children should know the evils of loosed passion and have stamped on their memories the consequences of immorality. The picture in question is one of the best educational forces I have seen."

From the standpoint of genuine interest, perfect acting and masterful direction, "AND THE CHILDREN PAY" is the greatest picture ever screened. If Victor Hugo had been a motion picture producer he would have made just such a film as this

Seattle and Northwest Meet Influenza More Than Halfway

THE "flu" has hit the Northwest again, but more care is being taken by the authorities to check it. The authorities are going about it in a more sensible manner. Instead of closing stores and movie houses, the cases are being quarantined in the homes. The moving picture men of Seattle and vicinity are cooperating with the officials to do all in their power to prevent its spreading. The larger houses are asking all those who sneeze or cough to use their handkerchiefs and some have announced that they will ask their patrons to leave if they sneeze, in case the "flu" scare keeps up. This will be voluntary on their part.

The smaller towns in the four Northwest states are not in a poor condition from the "flu" standpoint, but they are from an official standpoint. That is, the officials who are in "power" of the townlets, have announced that they will not allow the movie houses in their "cities" to open until every case of the "flu" or the grippe is wiped out. At least they must be closed till January, 1919. Letters to this effect have been written by managers to the exchange men along Seattle's Film Row. This ruling affects half the houses in the Northwest.

Jane Lee Recovers from Abscess

IN the West Jane and Katherine Lee have resumed work on their picture "Smiles" under the direction of Arvid E. Gillstrom. Work on this production was halted for a brief period because of Jane Lee's illness from an abscess. The little star is now fully recovered.

Another Fox star working in Hollywood is Peggy Hyland, who is in "The Girl With No Regrets," a forthcoming Excel Picture. Miss Hyland is being directed by Harry Millarde.

Ora Carew Gets Her Own Company

ORA CAREW is the latest film player to have her own company. Final arrangements were completed recently, and Ora started to work on her first picture this week.

Walter Wright will direct her productions. Ora was one of the first to be featured by Mack Sennett, and left because she preferred comedy-drama and drama to straight comedy. She recently finished playing opposite Wallace Reid and Tom Moore in their latest pictures.

Universal Service Branches Out for Exhibitors

THE Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., at Los Angeles this week inaugurated an innovation for the benefit of the exhibitor in the way of a booklet containing the name of every filmplay and comedy in the vaults of the exchange. The booklet is entitled "Universal Service," and was prepared under the supervision of Branch Manager David Bershon. Space for a booking record for a period of three months has been provided for the exhibitor, and the pamphlet will be re-edited and revised every three months, Mr. Bershon said.

He conceived the idea of preparing a comprehensive list of every play in the exchange during the time the theatres were closed in this district. Every film in the vaults was overhauled and retitled. They are classified as follows: "Butterflies," "Y. M. C. A. Official Films," "British War Films, single reels," "Nestor Comedies, single reels," "Finley Nature Studies," "Two-Reel Westerns," "Bluebirds," "Two-Reel L-Ko Comedies," "Two-Reel Century Comedies," "Single Reel Star Comedies," "Miscellaneous Nestor Comedies," "Miscellaneous Single Reelers," "Jewel Productions," "Universal Specials," "Other Specials," "Serials."

Explaining the releasing program of the exchange, the booklet shows that Universal special attractions are released one a week, also a single two-reel Western, L-Ko comedy, Lyons and Moran comedies, Nestor comedies each week. One Bluebird feature is released every week.

Mr. Bershon this week mailed several hundred of the bulletins to the trade.

Engle Gives Luncheon to Coast Trade Papers

JOSEPH ENGLE, treasurer of Metro Film Corporation, gave a luncheon Saturday, December 7, to representatives of the trade papers and dramatic writers of Los Angeles newspapers at Hotel Alexandria in honor of Maxwell Karger, manager of productions for the Metro Company.

The invitations announced that there would be no speeches, and this proved to be the programme followed, with the exception that Mr. Karger became the target for all sorts of questions and he was kept busy for two hours answering them. He prefaced his answers with a statement that, "This is just between us," and he told of the inside politics and the troubles of producing and convinced all the newspaper people that so long as pictures are made there will be good ones and many bad ones.

THE WEST COAST

What They Do in Seattle

"SHOULDER ARMS," Charlie's latest, which is being put on by the National Exhibitor's Exchange, broke all records for attendance when it was played at The Liberty, Seattle. In Everett, Wash., a city of 25,000 people, over 14,000 saw this screen. The manager of The Liberty, in Bellingham, wrote to the Seattle exchange that he "could not handle the crowds" that wanted to see Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." F. V. Fisher, manager of the Exhibitor's Film Exchange, which is handling this feature in the Northwest, says that he has been asked for longer bookings on this picture by houses that originally booked it for a short period. Mr. Fisher also reports that great interest is being taken by exhibitors regarding the new Anita Stewart Super Features and the Mary Pickford plays that his company offers.

C. H. FELDMAN and A. Mallot, of the Exhibitors Film exchange, are in their territories, representing the firm and considering the "flu" conditions in the smaller towns, report good business.

T. G. RANDOLPH, a well known photographer of the Seattle, has been appointed the Northwest representative of the International News Service Exchange. This exchange now includes the former Hearst service, Universal Current Events and Screen tales. Mr. Randolph will be stationed in Seattle, but will travel to different sections of the Northwest to photo all important events. This is part of the policy of the new International to show 300 feet of coast "doings" on each of their news pictures, three times a week.

C. F. HILL, who recently resigned the management of the Goldwyn exchange to transact his private business, was presented with a gold watch and chain on his leaving Seattle by the Northwest Film Board of Trade. Mr. Hill was popular with the members of the board and all were sorry to see him leave.

GILBERT HEFFRON, formerly of Missoula, Mont., has purchased the "Queen Anne Theatre," one of Seattle's best suburban houses.

THE L. J. SCHLAIFER ATTRACTIONS COMPANY reports that Mona Darkfeather has taken well in the Dalles, Ore., and other places where she appeared.

FRANK MONTGOMERY, now traveling in Montana, is reporting good business with "The Fall of Barbary Coast." Grace Sanderson, the Northwest distributor of this picture, is doing even better with it now than before the "flu." Miss Sanderson, who also wrote the scenario, is expecting her husband, Lieut. Miche, to come back from the army in a short time.

MADAME PAUL, manageress of the Strand, Olympia, Wash., recently took a flying trip up to the Goldwyn offices in Seattle. Her object was to sign up all the Goldwyn Star Series before some one else from that neighborhood did.

GEO. RING, manager of the Society, Seattle, was in town for a few days, as he recently received a furlough from the camp in which he was training.

GREAT preparations are being made by exhibitors for Christmas week. Christmas music and special programmes are being prepared. "My Phantom Girl," the words and music of which were produced by Mr. Oliver, who plays the Wurlitzer at the Coliseum, was recently sung at that theatre, and the famous "Wallace on the Wurlitzer," interpreted his own piece. The audience was very pleased with it.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, the health board of Butte, Mont., modified the orders on closing, permitting stores to open so that the Christmas trade could be taken care of. Theatres were still closed and were said to be subject to the orders of the state board of health. About 40 new cases of influenza are officially reported daily.

WITH all houses in Butte dark again and no light on the question of reopening things theatrical are rather dead. Manager Bourke is supplying a number of Montana houses from the Universal exchange but in general business is considerably "shot."

ON TOP of the terrific blow given the exhibitors by the two shutdowns, which plucked many banner days from the theatrical calendar, came a demand on the part of the musicians' union for higher wages. The demand was pre-emptorily rejected and unless an unforeseen contingency arises between now and the reopening date, as it may be set by the health board, theatregoers will have to prepare themselves to enjoy the pictures with no orchestra accompaniment. The exhibitors state that they prefer to dispense with music rather than meet the demands.

VAUDEVILLE houses are included and thus it is likely that Pan and Hip acts will display their wares to Butte audiences before long to the accompaniment of a piano only.

THE THEATRE MANAGERS' reply to the union, which states the new scale demanded, and other conditions, in full follows:

"W. E. Vincent, Secretary Musicians' Mutual Protective Union, 116 Hamilton street, Butte, Mont.

"Dear Sir:—Replying to your communication of the 15th inst., notifying the amusement houses of an increase in wages as follows:

"Two or more performers, six or seven nights and six or seven matinees, per performer, per week, $42.00.

"Leader (same as above), $55.00.

"Two or more performers, six or seven nights and one matinee, per performer per week, $35.00.

"Leader (same as above), $45.00.

"Extra performer, per night, $5.00.

"Extra performer, per matinee, $2.00.

"Where Tuxedo or full dress is required on any steady engagement, a charge of $2.50 per week per performance shall be charged.

"Afternoon performance, 2 hours.

"Evening performance, 4 hours.

"When pianist plays alone afternoons and with orchestra at night, extra per week, $5.00 (except when leader). Orchestra shall take at least 15 minutes intermission for each two hours playing.

"In reply will state that under the circumstances and the adverse conditions under which the motion picture houses are now operating, the wage advances demanded by you cannot be met and we herewith reject them. The war is over, the uncertain reconstruction period is upon us, the epidemic of sickness is still in existence cutting into business, increased taxes have just been added to our burdens. These facts combined with the simple proposition that the demands are excessive and unjustified, make our position logical.

"Rather than be forced to meet these demands we prefer to dispense with music in our houses."

The reply is signed by every theatre manager in the city.

All the News of Portland

WHEN the French steam auxiliary schooner Belfort sails from this city, Walter W. Kofeldt, who has been prominent in the activities of the moving picture men of this city for some time, will be on board. Kofeldt sailed once before on the ill-fated Dumaru which was destroyed by lightning off Guam, last October. He made but one trip on this boat, having left it at San Francisco, the trip previous to the time that it was destroyed. The Belford will load for France, and will go to New York first, via the Panama Canal. It is expected that when the schooner arrives at New York the American crew will be discharged and a French complement assigned. Previous to preparing to leave this city, Kofeldt went to Seattle, for a few days, where he conferred with several moving picture men of that city. At one time he was manager of the Majestic theatre, at which time some clever advertising stunts were put over.

FRANK COFFINBERRY, formerly manager of local vaudeville theatres, now connected with the division of films in the United States Government Committee on Public Information, is in Portland arranging for the showing of war films here. The next big picture shown here by that committee will be "Under Four Flags." Mr. Coffinberry stated that the film department of the committee would be discontinued after December 15. The showing of the pictures will be continued by arrangements with private corporations. The work of the film division has been hampered greatly by the influenza epidemic, which resulted in the closing of 94 per cent of the motion picture houses throughout the country. Mr. Coffinberry said "America's Answer," which had just been offered to the Portland public, was expected to aid materially in the sale of Fourth Liberty Loan bonds. It had been shown in only five cities when the ban was placed on the "movies," and the presentation was stopped.

MANAGER HOLTZCLAW of the Circle theatre of this city, didn't have to wait a long time to see a big opportunity to draw a capacity house. As soon as the news of Mildred Harris's wedding to Charlie Chaplin was made known, he hopped in his car and went right down to book "For Husbands Only," the third of the big Lois Weber productions featuring Mildred Harris. The only reason that he did not grab "The Price of a Good Time" was because he had run that picture as well as "The Doctor and the Woman," in his house quite recently, and used the S. R. O. sign in both instances. At that he may possibly have to re-book 'em in order to take full advantage of the special advertising advantage of Mildred Harris' new name.

J. C. STILL, the live wire who directs the affairs of the People's and the Star theatres of this city, has the reputation that he grabs the right pictures at the right time. He showed "The Kaiser" at just the right minute, and made the biggest clean-up in the history of the theatre. His judgment was good again when he secured the big seven-reel series of official war pictures of Great Britain, "Fighting for Freedom," and at the present time they are running fine in both the People's and the Star theatres. "The public is eatin' 'em up," is the latest advice from headquarters.

JOE BRADT of the Echo theatre of this city, is another exhibitor who has been quick to catch the advertising possibilities in featuring the change of Mildred Harris' name to Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. He is running "The Doctor and the Woman" and reports that he is doing an excellent business

Todd Opens Business at Los Angeles

A NEW institution for an entirely new line of work has been opened by R. L. Todd at the Sanborn Laboratories, Culver City. Todd is a film editor, formerly associated with Triangle and Douglas Fairbanks Company, and will do film editing for independent companies. He has had several years experience, and his work as editor has won him considerable praise.

Will M. Ritchey Writes on Selecting a Theme for Pictures

NOW that we have discussed the art of photoplay writing from its various angles, let us get right down to the actual starting of a story, which brings us face to face with one of the most important things to be considered—selecting a theme. It is right here that the majority of new writers make a big mistake, and it should be given careful thought before you start to write your story.

There are various ways of selecting a theme, but the most important one of all is to choose one which the writer understands thoroughly. Never try to write on any subject which you are not entirely familiar with, which the majority of beginners do. You can't expect a man who knows horses to write an authentic treatise on automobiles, can you? No more than a writer who does not know thoroughly the subject he is undertaking can write a convincing photoplay. If you write on a subject purely from your own imagination of it, the scenario editor will soon find it out, and your script will come back with the polite rejection slip—unavailable.

Keep well within your own field and write only that which you understand. If you know society life, write about it, but if you have never come in contact with it—DON'T, because you're only wasting your time. I don't mean by this that one is not supposed to use their imagination in writing their stories, because it is absolutely necessary. True stories are seldom interesting. Get a theme that you know, and use your imagination to its fullest extent in framing your story.

There are various ways of selecting a theme for your story. There is the theme which is spontaneous, one that comes to you and makes you say right away—"That's it!" A great many of our most prominent writers confess that they get few spontaneous ideas for stories. They have to "hunt the theme." Observation is one of the best ways to secure material for your photoplay. Watch the people and things that happen about you, closely, and soon something will strike you in what goes on about you that will suggest your story.

It is a good plan to have your pencil and notebook always on hand. Jot down things that you notice, the mind often forgets and much good story material may be lost in this way, but if you have it down in black and white, it is always at your command whenever you may have cause to use it. Successful writers always have their little book and pencil on hand. They are not willing to trust even their trained minds, so why should you?

Observation and imagination are the two great aids to successful photoplay writing. They run along hand in hand. Imagination will soon leave you with a few favorite images, but observation always is open for something new, and leaves an open way for your imagination to start work again.

Get your theme (one you understand); keep your little notebook jotting down the various things you observe; then start on your story and let your imagination "go to it."

Ervin Visits Butte on Way to Southern California

HARRY E. ERVIN, who is erecting a $120,000 picture theatre-opera house in Harlowton, Mont., spent a few days in Butte recently, while en route to southern California. Mr. Ervin has met with remarkable success in his oil ventures in the Wyoming fields, being reputed to have cleaned up several millions the past two years. When he left Harlowton less than two years ago he was a man of but moderate means and the story of his success reads like a fairy tale. Today he is the head of several large producing companies and owns thousands of acres of undeveloped, but favorably reported, oil land. He has started the construction of a 2,500 barrel refinery in Salt Lake.

Henry Meyers of Harlowton will manage the new theatre which will be known as the American. Plans are to open the house in the spring. Thus Harlowton will probably have the distinction of being the smallest city in the nation with a theatre of such class and cost.

In and Around Denver

THERE is considerable encouragement in the influenza situation in Denver territory this week. Reports received by local exchanges indicate that better than 33 1-3 per cent of the theatres are open again. Among those recently opened are Grand Junction, Walsenburg, Trinidad and Pueblo. Colorado Springs is scheduled to open on Monday, December 16. Fear of the disease still prevents anything like normal patronage in practically all of the places that have opened again, most exhibitors reporting a 50 to 60 per cent business as an average. It is encouraging to note, however, that the epidemic is waning and that a normal business is surely on the increase, even though the return progress is slow.

ANNOUNCEMENT was received here this week that Warren J. Hazeltine, one of Triangle's salesmen in Denver territory, was wounded in action on November 6, five days before the signing of the armistice with Germany. He sustained a badly wounded hip from shrapnel fire, which killed his two comrades instantly. He is recovering nicely, the report says, which was forwarded from a base hospital in France. Mr. Hazeltine's wife died in Denver last winter, shortly before he entered the army.

PRESIDENT S. A. LYNCH of Triangle Distributing Corporation, and also president of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., was recently stricken with influenza while visiting in Dallas, Texas. His brother, the late R. W. Lynch, vice-president of Triangle, was a victim of the epidemic at Omaha three weeks ago.

THE great Vitagraph war picture, "The Common Cause," has arrived in Denver and will be released in this territory within the next thirty days, according to Manager Edwards of the local exchange.

FRIENDS of Al H. Haagen, owner of the Iris theatre on Curtis street, will sympathize with him in the recent death of his mother. He was en route to New York State to spend Christmas with her, when he received a telegram at Omaha announcing her death.

WILLIAM BINFORD, a well-known local man, is in charge of the Iris during the absence of Mr. Haagen.

A COMMITTEE appointed last week at a meeting of local exchange managers to select a joint Christmas greeting to their exhibitor patrons, have agreed upon a fine Statue of Liberty design, the figure carrying a handsome peace wreath, and the card is engraved with the names of the senders. Messrs. Henry, Fair and Fish selected the design.

MANAGER L. E. SCHAEFFER of the Film Clearance House and Independent Sales Corporation, announces an early release in Denver of their first three pictures, "Wanted for Murder," "Her Mistake," starring Evelyn Nesbit, and J. Stewart Blackton's superfeature, "Life's Greatest Problem," starring Mitchell Lewis and Ruby De Remer. The latter was formerly a Denver woman and prominent in local society circles. They will all be released about January 1.

J. MACK DAVIS writes that he has sold his amusement hall in Hoffland, Neb., and is leaving for Broadwater, Ore., near Portland, where he expects to start another theatre. He does not give the name of the purchaser.

FRED ADAMEK of Holly, Colo., has sold his Opera House theatre there to a company of Holly men, and will engage in other lines at La Junta.

C. W. Hardwick, owner of the Lyceum theatre at Clovis, N. M., spent several days here recently arranging new service.

R. E. Andrews, well known in this territory as an ace salesman for Palm Olive soap, will shortly make his initial trip as a salesman for Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

BEN COHEN of Colorado Foursquare, announces a first run at the America theatre beginning Sunday, December 15, of "Nine-tenths of the Law," starring Mitchell Lewis.

THE local Goldwyn and Triangle Exchanges have adopted an innovation that is much appreciated by their employes, all of whom are given one afternoon of each week for their Christmas shopping.

Spokane News Condensed

THE theatrical situation prevailing in Spokane is the most unique in history and from all reports, the worst managers there ever had to contend with. Due to the lifting of the influenza ban, some three weeks ago, and the big peace celebration on Thanksgiving, the influenza epidemic took a sudden turn for the worse. Schools are again closed and school children under the age of 12 years are prohibited from attending theatres or any public gathering. Public sentiment brought pressure to bear on the board of health and a modified influenza quarantine in the form of new rules for theatres and public assemblages has been laid down.

NO THEATRE is to be allowed to put on a special program of any kind to attract a crowd and must admit no person beyond the seating capacity of the building. Churches are required to leave every other row of seats vacant, but so far this ruling has not been applied to the theatres. Theatres are required to close between the hours of 5 and 7 p. m., to air the building.

J. W. ALLENDER, who operates the Lyric and the Majestic, says the situation is the worst the theatre business ever went through. Since the ban was lifted, Spokane houses at best have not been doing more than a 60 per cent business, according to Mr. Allender, but with the modified ban which allows them to remain, there is the one hope Mr. Allender says, that the public will not entirely abandon the habit of theatre going.

San Francisco News Condensed

WILLIAM RUSSELL, well known motion picture star and athlete, was a recent visitor to San Francisco. Mr. Russell is head of William Russell Productions, released by the American Film Co., Inc., through the Pathe and is working on a picture entitled "Little Boy in Blue," in which he is supported by Eileen Percy. He was accompanied to this city by a party of motion picture experts and came here to gather data for his big feature which will be filmed in and about San Francisco. E. B. Johnson, general manager of the T. & D. circuit, gave him an entertainment on the Saturday night during his stay, which brought together a lively bunch of film men. Among those present were: Eph. M. Asher, Tivoli manager; George Wenzell, publicity director of T. & D.; A. M. Bowles, the local American representative; Joe Langley, of the Hippodrome, Taft, Cal.; Newton E. Levi, branch manager of Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation; "Hoppie" of the San Francisco Call; E. H. Emerick, president of the Peerless Film Service, Inc.; Sam Edwards of the T. & D. theatre, Oakland, and "Tex," superintendent of maintenance of T. & D.

THE SPANISH INFLUENZA has a slight "flare-back" in this city and for a time the board of health considered the advisability of compelling the general resumption of wearing masks. That matter, however, has been held in abeyance. There has been no suggestion of closing the theatres, and even if masks are resumed, which now seems very unlikely, the theatres will be allowed to remain open.

ANNOUNCEMENT just made by Collector of Internal Revenue J. S. Wardell is to the effect that the Internal Revenue department lost approximately $220,000 through the closing of the theatres, motion picture houses, and the discontinuance of cabaret entertainments during the influenza epidemic in October and November. There are no figures to show what per cent of this loss accrued exclusively from the closing of the motion picture houses.

THE latest statistics of the Northern California territory show that there are 176 towns with 356 theatres. The population of the territory is placed at 1,438,300.

ONE of the biggest hits on the program of the California theatre last week was "The Finest on Four Feet," one of the travel pictures on the Mutual program.

J. L. BROWN, formerly of the Rialto theatre, Eureka, Cal., with associates has leased the Empire theatre of that city, formerly conducted by J. Van Sant. The playhouse has been thoroughly renovated and partly remodeled, and is preparing to re-open about January 1, featuring the output of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

LEWIS and his orchestra, who have been holding forth at the T & D theatre, Oakland, will shortly come to the Rialto theatre in this city.

A CONSIDERABLE interest has been awakened by a preview of Walter Johnson's first reel on the Cannibals of the South Seas, which was recently given at the headquarters of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributors Corporation in this city to a number of exhibitors. The matter regarding the picture displayed in a recent number of the News has greatly increased the interest of the exhibitors.

FIVE hundred French soldiers who are visiting this city while en route to Siberia were entertained at the Strand theatre this week at a special matinee. "Shoulder Arms," in which Charlie Claplin is starring, was the principal picture. Chaplin was no stranger to the poilus and his appearance was greeted with roars of laughter.

A CONSIDERABLE delegation of the local film colony is planning to migrate to Los Angeles to attend the opening of the new California theatre in that city. They say they are going down for a "little time," and intend to make it as "little" as possible.

IT is announced at the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., that Sol Lesser has secured the rights for Northern California for the new picture, "Go See the Kaiser's Finish," produced by L. Warner. The same company has secured the rights in the same territory of the last six episodes in the Government pictures. These are labeled: "If Your Soldier's Hit," "Wings of Victory," "Bath of Bullets," "Making the Nation Fit," "Storm of Steel," and "Horses That Waged War." These pictures will be released December 23.

C. POST MASON, well known in Denver, where he was connected with the First National Exhibitors, and recently of San Francisco where he worked for Sol Lesser, died in this city last week as the result of an attack of influenza. Mr. Mason left a wife and four children.

WALTER S. RAND, division manager of the General Film Co., Inc., after spending several days at the local headquarters of the company, has just left for the South.

JOHN MORPHET, auditor of the General Film Co., Inc., of New York, has been in San Francisco this week on his first visit to California. He leaves for Los Angeles the latter part of the week and expects to reach his New York home in time to eat his Christmas dinner with his family.

THERE have been several changes in the office of the local headquarters of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., this week. M. Epstein, formerly booker for the company, has been given the position of salesman in charge of the Bluebird department. J. H. Hart, who has been traveling representative, will take over the booking department. Harry Carney, at one time manager for the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., becomes connected with the company on December 15 as salesman of Jewels and special attractions, and A. S. Winterhode, formerly with the Mutual at Los Angeles, has made connections with the company as salesman.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

MARY PICKFORD, now producing for the First National Exhibitors circuit, has purchased the screens rights to "Come Out of the Kitchen," the popular stage play, it was announced from T. L. Tally's office this week. The consideration was not given. Miss Pickford is now working on the screen version of "Daddy Long Legs," the picture rights of which cost her $40,000. She also purchased the rights of "Polly Ana" for the screen, and it is said that this transaction involved $40,000 also.

A. T. CONNARD, proprietor of the C. & C. theatre at Taft, Cal., was a visitor in Los Angeles this week, where he called on T. L. Tally, of the First National Exhibitors.

"THE KAISER'S FINISH," with the same cast that played former Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," was announced last Saturday by Branch Manager Knott, of the First National Exhibitors' exchange. A preview of the picture will be held soon in Los Angeles, he said.

AFTER being closed, reopened and closed again the health authorities clamped the lid on San Diego last Friday with the most drastic closing ordinance that has yet been enforced in any Southern California city. When it became apparent to the theatre owners of San Diego that the health authorities were about to close their places of business for the second time, they entered a vigorous protest, unless the same ban was placed on business of every character in the city, except restaurants and drug stores. After much argument pro and con, the health authorities adopted the theatre owners' plans, or suggestions, and the town was ordered closed for a period of seven days. It was urged from many quarters that a strict quarantine be maintained against visitors from outside cities, but this feature of the closing plan was defeated.

ALL motion picture theatres were open in Phoenix, Ariz., Sunday, Dec. 8, it was learned in Los Angeles this week. The Plaza theatre of Phoenix opened with "Over the Top," the Guy Empey Vitagraph production. This is the fourth time the picture has been shown in Phoenix according to announcement by Vitagraph Branch Manager W. H. Hepburn.

THE theatres in Santa Barbara were opened Sunday, Dec. 8, and shows from the Universal, Paramount and Select exchanges were sent to the resort city to fill various bills of the various houses opening their doors.

MISS IDA DICKSON, proprietor of the Dickson theatre at Ventura, was a visitor in Los Angeles last week. She made some bookings from the Universal, Pathe and Vitagraph exchanges.

THE Film Clearing House exchange is rapidly being fitted up in the former Kleine System offices in the Knickerbocker, and booking releases will be announced from the exchange within a few weeks. Branch Manager H. J. Roberts, who was formerly sales manager with the Fox exchange in New York, is in charge. Before coming to Los Angeles to take charge of his new work he established a reputation for executive ability with the Fox offices. Four years ago he was attached to the Fox Los Angeles office.

J. SLIPPER AND COMPANY this week shipped two Simplex machines to A. A. Lloyd, proprietor of the Lloyd theatre at Santa Barbara. Other similar orders will be filled next week, it was announced from the Slipper shop this week.

RAY BRANDON, of Brandon Bros., owners of the Brandon and other theatres in Phoenix, motored to Los Angeles this week. He was accompanied by Pat Stephens. Mr. Brandon has completely overhauled the American theatre, which now has a seating capacity for 900 people. This theatre was formerly the Empress. He will open the house with the Universal special, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

MESSRS. TRUSSER AND NEWTON, who are now looking after the interest of the late W. Markus, of Santa Barbara, were in Los Angeles this week arranging bookings for the various Markus theatres which opened again Sunday, Dec. 8.

GUY DOUTHWIT, of Oxnard, proprietor of the Lyric, Victory and Opera House in Oxnard, was a visitor on film row this week.

IT BECAME KNOWN in Los Angeles this week that Douglas Yarmouth, who has been in the aviation service of the United States army, will return soon to San Bernardino, where he will resume the management of the Strand theatre of that city.

JAMES A. COOK, owner of the Palace theatre at El Centro, in the Imperial Valley, was in Los Angeles this week arranging bookings. He called on the Vitagraph, Triangle, Pathe, Paramount, Universal and Goldwyn exchanges.

C. E. ELLIOTT, special representative of Select Pictures, who arrived in Los Angeles from the Middle Western territory last week, has already become enamoured with the film capital of the world. He asserts vigorously that Los Angeles is the most wonderful city in the United States, and adds that he will endeavor to swing much business in the general direction of the Los Angeles Select exchange so that his stay here will be made for just as long a period as possible.

B. E. LOPER, branch manager of the Select exchange, returned last Friday from a three days' visit at San Diego. He said the motion picture men in the southern city are very much worked up over the influenza situation and its attendant closing orders.

"THE CAVEL CASE," in which Julia Arthur plays the role of Miss Cavel, the English nurse who was murdered by the Germans in the early stages of the war, has been received by the Select Exchange in Los Angeles. An early preview of the picture will be held, Branch Manager Loper said this week.

H. W. SCHMIDT, the new branch manager of General exchanges, who came to Los Angeles from the San Francisco offices, predicted this week that Los Angeles within a few days will be back in its old stride in the matter of theatre patronage. Although all theatres were opened in Los Angeles last week, business did not get back to normal, he said.

M. J. COHN, formerly manager of the Kleine exchange in San Francisco, succeeded Branch Manager H. W. Schmidt as manager of the San Francisco General Film exchange.

GEORGE EKRE, who was manager of the General exchange in Los Angeles before he was succeeded by H. W. Schmidt, said this week that he had not made any definite plans for the future other than he expected to be attached to one of the Los Angeles exchanges within a short time.

BRANCH MANAGER H. W. STUBBINS, of M. & R. features, announced that he will soon begin releasing the new M. & R. program of Screencraft productions, which will be one production every month. The first releases have not as yet been announced, he said.

"BORROWED CLOTHES," starring Mildred Harris, a Universal production, will be shown at the Superba theatre during the week, beginning December 28, according to announcement by Branch Manager David Bershon of the Universal exchange.

San Francisco News Condensed

THE Universal has just booked "Borrowed Clothes" on the T & D circuit. As Mildred Harris, the star of the play, is now Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, she is expected to shine with reflected glory in addition to her previous popularity.

GEORGE DENNY has just bought the Circle theatre at Fruitvale from I. Israel.

THE Casino theatre has announced a change of policy for the future. It will run a stock musical comedy in connection with its vaudeville and will eliminate feature pictures, running only travelogues, news features and the lighter forms of screen plays.

NEWS has reached here that Harry Hicks, formerly manager of the local office for the Select Pictures Corporation and later in charge of the Seattle office, had received another promotion by being called to the company headquarters where he will act as special representative. There is no information here regarding his successor.

WILLIAM H. BERNARD, salesman for the Select, who has been ill for some time with an attack of influenza, has so far recovered that he is able again to report at the office.

HARRY LEE KNAPPEN, manager of the Select in this territory, is proud of the fact that he placed two first run pictures in San Francisco last week and two more this week. The latter are "The Code of the Yukon," featuring "Big Mich," at the Tivoli, and "A Pair of Silk Stockings" at the Portola. He says that his office broke all rental records of the San Francisco office, with one exception, with its business last week. Inasmuch as the city is just recovering from the influenza epidemic and was threatened with another dose of the same thing he feels that he has a right to boast.

THE many friends of E. O. Child, manager of the San Francisco Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be shocked to learn that he met with an accident last week which is apt to leave its mark on Mr. Child's face perhaps for all time. While shaving the keen blade suddenly became unwieldly and before the unfortunate man could regain control of it the razor had swooped down upon his lip and totally annihilated his moustache.

GILBERT MOYLE, auditor of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., was in San Francisco this week on his way over the entire circuit.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is expected here the latter part of the week on his way to Los Angeles from the East.

WILLIAM DUNCAN, Vitagraph director and star, arrived in San Francisco from Los Angeles last week, with his secretary, Walter L. Rodgers, and his leading lady, Miss Edith Johnson. Other members of the cast of the "Man of Night," were busy during their stay and several pictures were filmed. The spots selected were in the lobby of the St. Francis hotel and in Chinatown.

THE new Hayakawa series, released through the Mutual, is receiving big praise from all exhibitors.

IT is reported that J. L. Merrick, Coast representative of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, will be in San Francisco next week en route home from the Chicago conference.

J. B. SPARKS of the Liberty theatre at Condon, Ore., has purchased a fotoplayer for his house and intends to depend exclusively on this instrument for music.

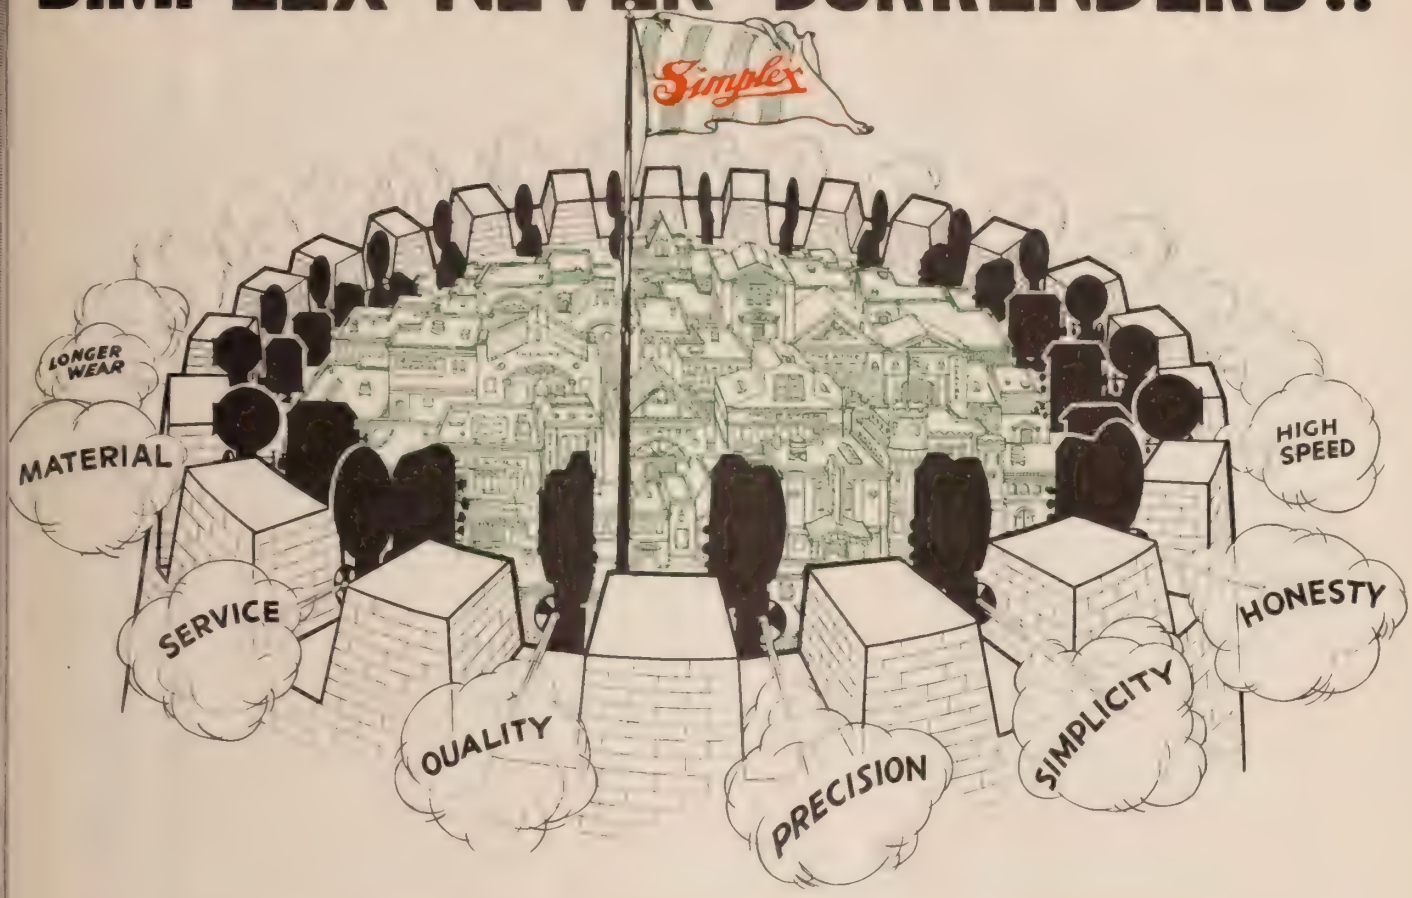
SIMPLEX NEVER SURRENDERS!!



——NOTE——

In the city of Chicago, the business and theatre district is centered in what is called "The Loop." This section is entirely encircled by the Elevated, which forms a structure of steel all around it, thereby giving it its name. There are nineteen Theatres within the Loop running pictures, and each one uses the Simplex, making it 100% strong: some of them run twenty-four hours a day.

FOUR years ago, in the city of Chicago, Generals "Mediocre Material" and "Questionable Quality" had possession of the "Loop." The Managers demanded day and night protection, but they weren't getting it. . . .

Up came the relief army of Simplex. They unlimbered their heaviest guns—trained their batteries upon the screens, and took the "Loop" by storm! . . . An unbroken line of supreme service has entrenched them in the "Loop" as solidly as Gibraltar itself. . . .

But now a battle was on in earnest. . . . The ousted Generals flung their forces against the "Iron-Ring" of Simplex. . . . "Get back into the Loop at any cost," were the orders of the day.

They made offers to the Loop Managers. They begged, pleaded and promised, but they were met by a barrage of disinterest. . . .

And now the Simplex forces have extended their lines outside the Loop, capturing the second and third line of trenches, so that 85% of the entire city of Chicago is protected by Simplex security.

The four years' service flag of Simplex still waves with Simplex guarding the screens of the city. . . .

The qualities that have made our army the big factor in the war are the same qualities that enabled Simplex to "hold the fort":

When buyers of "prints" are more interested in standards of quality than they are in mere price, true economy will be established.

When you buy "prints" you are not buying raw material. You are buying the screen reproduction of your valuable negative investment.

When you dicker about cost you are not really talking price, you are dickering on the way your "picture" will appear in the theatre.

It is not the fraction of a cent per foot you are "saving," but the pleasing and pulling power of your picture you are sacrificing.

Our Way Secures Quality and Satisfaction.
